A Crisis Which Was Successfully Passed by His Aid

By LITTELL M'CLUNG

Mrs. Kenton repulsed his seriousness with a flirtatious laugh.

"Let's see! Why, you've known me only a month," the pretty widow objected. "You've never even seen the rest of the family!"

"You mean Henry?" he said.

"Of course I mean Henry!" she exclaimed. "Who else could I mean? The very idea of your starting to propose to me, Mr. Barton, without ever having seen Henry. The man who loves me must love him too. He must think that Henry is the handsomest, finest little fellow in the world.

"Oh, you don't realize what such a baby as Henry means to a young mother. He is her joy, her hope, her life, Mr. Barton. The man she loves must share her feelings about her child. You understand, don't you?"

The man nodded.

"But how am I to share your love for the child—how am I ever to meet him—if you don't give me the chance?" he demanded. "I call in the evening, and the nurse is just putting him to bed. I stop by in the afternoon, and you and Henry have gone out for a ride.

"Something always happens to keep Henry out of my sight. I've about come to believe that he is a myth, a prattling phantom that willfully eludes me."

"How can you, Mr. Barton, use the word 'prattling' when speaking of Henry?" she demanded, trying to keep a serious face. "The little dear doesn't prattle—he talks!"

"Indeed?" he exclaimed. "I hardly thought he was old enough to"—

"Certainly he's old enough," she interrupted. "He can say 'mamma' just beautifully, and at present I'm concentrating my energies on getting him to say 'dear mamma' and 'nursie' and other necessary words."

The light of inspiration flashed over James Barton's face.

"Why don't you teach him my name?" he asked eagerly. "It's very easy—just Jim, you know. Then when Henry and I do get acquainted we'll start on terms of friendship without any preliminaries."

"Oh, what an idea!" she cooed. "Why, of course Henry shall be taught to say—Jim."

Barton noticed with a thrill the blush that tinged her cheek even as her tongue hesitated at the name.

"Well, when shall I see him?" he asked. "Let me make an engagement with you and Henry."

"Let me see. This is the 20th, isn't it?" she mused. "Well, on the 1st of next month, in the afternoon, the—the Young Mothers' club meets at my house. You can come around then and have tea with us. Henry will be wearing his best frock in your honor."

"Fine and dandy!" declared Barton as he lifted his hat in farewell. "I'll be on hand, Mrs. Kenton, you may be sure."

On the eventful afternoon Barton came, as he had said, a smile of confidence lighting his face—a smile that, alas, faded as quickly as the blush of a debutante.

Mrs. Kenton greeted him with a warm hand clasp, and the next moment he found himself in a drawing room filled with young women. He was the only man in sight, and his knees trembled as the rapid fire introductions began.

But he faced, like a hero, the chorus of "Oh!" "Delighted!" and "How charming!" and came through with face unflushed.

Tea was served, and the meeting gave promise of passing off pleasantly enough. But the blow fell when the president, a middle aged woman with a twinkle of humor in her eye, arose for the first formal announcement.

"Ladies," she said mildly, "several of us, as is our custom, have brought our children with us—the proper thing for young mothers to do. These children, as you are aware, are upstairs in care of two of our most loyal mothers.

"Each of us has listened with patience, be it said, to praises of another's prodigy. But now we are prepared to learn the truth. There is a gentleman in our midst. He shall see the children and make formal report to us as to which is the prettiest!"

Barton's heart went right down into his patent leathers as he turned upon Mrs. Kenton with a look of unforgiving reproach.

"Really, I didn't do it!" she whispered. "It's one of the surprises the club always springs on the hostess—'pon my soul it is!"

There was no doubting the sincerity of her tone, and Barton, summoning to his aid every fiber of his courage, rose to protest. The quick eyed president divined his intention, and she gave him no chance to utter a word.

"The young gentleman may wish to protest that he is not a good judge of children," she declared, "but we cannot listen to him. We all feel sure that he is a man of judgment and courage and that he will do what we ask of him."

A dozen smiles were suppressed as a dozen heads nodded approval. Barton's eyes flashed, for the humor of the situation had not appealed to him.

"I shall not protest, ladies," he said with quiet determination. "On the contrary, I shall be very glad to pick out the prettiest baby for you. And, furthermore, I am prepared to face the consequences, whatever they may be!"

The president smiled and appointed a committee to escort Barton to the nursery. Soon he was the center of six contented infants, who were toddling and crawling about over the floor in care of two guardian mothers.

The impromptu nurses were sworn to secrecy, and Barton was given a long blue ribbon to tie on the arm of the baby he thought the prettiest. Then he was left alone with the infants.

He realized full well that, while it all might be a huge joke with the mothers, for him it was about the most serious moment of his life.

"If I miss giving the ribbon to Beth Kenton's baby the chances are she'll never speak to me again," he muttered. "I know hers is the prettiest, but how under the sun am I to know which is hers? Babies all look pretty much alike to me!"

With the slip of ribbon clutched between his trembling fingers he began to scan intently, hopefully, one by one, the faces of the babies. He found no distinguishing marks on the first three, but at the fourth he hesitated, and his breath came faster.

Surely those large, inquiring blue eyes were the eyes of Mrs. Kenton, and of a certainty that delicate, finely chiseled little nose was very like the nose of Mrs. Kenton.

"Here's where I win hands down!" he breathed, stifling his conscience. "I don't care a rap whether this chap is really the best looking or not—he gets the prize."

He reached out his arms toward the child, when a voice behind stopped him.

"Jim-Jum-Jum-Jim—ma-ma!"

It was certainly his name as plain as accents could get it. He turned to behold a lively tot pawing the air with his chubby hands.

"Jim-Jum-ma-ma!" the baby cried, delighted at being noticed.

With one swoop Barton grabbed the child, for the first glance told him beyond doubt that this was Mrs. Kenton's baby. With the youngster in his arms he rushed down the stairs and broke in upon the startled young mothers.

"Ladies," he exclaimed triumphantly, "I pick this child as the prettiest of all!"

"Oh, you dear, dear man!" whispered the hostess, taking the baby into her arms and kissing him energetically.

But Barton did not answer until all the other mothers had gone. Then he said the thing most natural.

"Don't you think your boy might be taught to say 'papa'?" he asked, with more sincerity than humor in his voice.

"Perhaps so," replied Mrs. Kenton, smiling happily. "Come, Henry," she coaxed, "say 'papa' for mamma, won't you?"

But Henry only cooed "Jum-Jim-mam-ma-Jim."

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Outdoor and Indoor Air.

There is a great difference between outdoor and indoor air, inasmuch as the first circulates freely and the second is stagnant. Another difference is that floods of sunshine constantly cleanse outdoor air of its impurities, but most rooms get very little of that useful commodity. Many persons who visit the physician with complaints of poor digestion and anaemia declare that they are active all day long and that going out for walks is the last thing they need.

They may be right about the amount of exercise they get, but people constantly fall ill in spite of plenty of exercise in the house and get well again with a little outdoor exercise. A certain amount of active work about a house is good for every one, but there ought to be some daily outdoor life as well.

It does not follow that that outdoor life ought to include violent exercise or even any exercise at all. Every one knows how babies thrive when they take their naps outdoors. The principle applies to the adult also.

It is a matter of scientific record that people whose daily occupation obliges them to sit in the open air—such as market women, attendants at fruit stands and newspaper sellers—are robust people who do not take cold easily. Yet it is probable that few people take less exercise.

Lesson VI.—Third Quarter, For Aug. 9, 1914.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Mark xi, 12-26. Memory Verses, 22, 23—Golden Text, Matt. vii, 20—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Having spent the night at Bethany, they returned on the morrow to Jerusalem. Probably they returned early in the morning, and He at least seems to have had no morning meal, for He was hungry. See His real humanity in that He hungered, thirsted, was weary, wept (John iv, 6, 7; xi, 35). See His humility in that He consented to be thus dependent upon others on this earth, which He Himself had made. Though He was rich, for our sakes He became poor that we through His poverty might be forever rich (John i, 10, 11; II Cor. viii, 9). He was no doubt literally hungry, but as there was meat of which His disciples knew not (John iv, 32), so there were a hunger and thirst of which they knew not. He hungered for fruit from Israel, who proved to be an empty vine, bringing forth fruit unto himself; a bad vine, bearing only wild grapes (Hos. x).

This lesson is recorded in Matthew and Luke, as well as in Mark, or at least part of it. Matthew says that He saw a fig tree in the way, and Mark says that He saw it afar off. Both phrases are suggestive of the facts that, while Israel professed to be in the way, she was really afar off. Having leaves was a profession of fruit bearing; His finding nothing but leaves was disappointing barrenness. The parable of the fig tree in Luke xiii, 6-9, shows His patience with His fig tree. His saying in Matt. vii, 16, teaches that it requires a real fig tree to bear figs. The first reference to fig leaves in the Bible shows man's vain effort to substitute something instead of the beautiful garments of light which he had lost (Gen. iii, 7), while the reference in Hab. iii, 17, 18, shows that, though all that is of nature should fail, yet we may find real cause of rejoicing in the Lord Himself. Young translates "forever" (verse 14) to "the age," and we know that, while Israel as a nation has borne no fruit since she rejected Christ, the time is coming when "Israel shall blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii, 6). He came to Jerusalem and went into the temple and began to cleanse it, as He had done at the beginning of His ministry (John ii, 13-17).

Jerusalem was the national center, and the temple was the spiritual center, as the heart is the vital center of our being, and true cleansing must be from the center outward. Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart. He says: "I, the Lord, search the heart. I try the reins even to give every man according to his ways and according to the fruit of his doings" (I Sam. xvi, 7; Jer. xvii, 10). See a beautiful and appropriate prayer in Ps. cxxxix, 23, 24. In the cleansing in II John He accused them of making His Father's house a house of merchandise, while here He says that instead of its being a house of prayer they had made it a den of thieves (verse 17). The reference is to Isa. lvi, 7, "Mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people," and to Jer. vii, 11, "Is this house which is called by my name become a den of robbers in your eyes?" The question is asked in Mal. iii, 8, "Will a man rob God?" And it is also answered. Instead of recognizing all things as given us by God to hold for Him and use as His stewards many are more apt to say: "Our lips (and all things) are our own. Who is lord over us?" (Ps. xii, 4). The only right attitude is that of David when he said, "All things come of Thee, and of Thine own have we given Thee" (I Chron. xxix, 14).

The temple was originally built for the Lord that He might dwell there in the midst of His people Israel and that all people of the earth might know Him and fear and serve Him (I Kings viii, 43-60), but now that the Lord had come to His own temple He was crowded out by business and self seeking. It is even so still in the churches, which are supposed to be for His worship, but from which He is excluded by many things and by worldly ways and in which there is often no room for Him. He is often, as in Rev. iii, 20, inquiring if any person will open his heart's door to Him, hardly expecting that a church will welcome Him.

The chief priests and scribes were increasingly determined to destroy Him because His teaching was so opposed to theirs. He taught daily in the temple and at night went out to the Mount of Olives, for there seemed to be no more of a home welcome for Him anywhere than there was in the temple (Luke xxi, 37; John vii, 53; viii, 1). It was and still is the same old story, "No room for Him" (Luke ii, 7). His thoughts and ways are so far above ours that in our low and unworthy way of looking at things we cannot seem to welcome Him as we should. In the morning as they returned to the city the disciples marveled to see the fig tree withered away. Then came His great word about a mountain being removed if we only had faith (verse 23; Matt. xxi, 21). Compare Matt. xvii, 20. Notice His "Have faith in God" and the "Have faith and doubt not" of Matthew and His "Whatsoever he saith" and "What things soever ye desire" of lesson verses 23, 24.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 5.—Trading on the wheat market was quiet and transactions few, with prices apparently on a war basis. Liverpool cables (unofficial) were to the effect that wheat sold privately at an advance of 4½c higher than last quotation, and the market here followed in sympathy. MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 5.—There were no new developments in export grain circles today, business still being at a standstill, but the local market for coarse grains continues strong and prices are steadily tending towards a higher level. The demand for oats was good at a further advance of one-half cent per bushel, with a good demand for car lots from both local and country buyers and quite an active trade is doing. A feature of the flour market today was the strong feeling in winter wheat grades. Prices were advanced 25c to 50c per barrel under a good demand and small offerings. Spring wheat flour is strong with an active business for local account. Higher prices are expected in the near future owing to the advance in prices for wheat of 8½c to 8 5-8c per bushel during the past few days. The tone of the market for rolled oats was also strong at an advance of 30c to 80c per barrel. Mill feed is active and very firm. The butter market is excited, with a good demand from western buyers. Sales of car lots finest creamery were made at 26c to 26½c and one or two cars were also bought for American account. The cheese situation is somewhat demoralized, but the feeling in the market is strong. The demand for eggs is good. Dressed hogs declined 25c per 100 pounds.

Several Aviators Killed.

Several Russian aviators flying in the vicinity of Cracow are also reported shot and killed by Austrian troops.

Germans Receive Crushing Blow From Belgian Troops.

Heroic Little Country Makes a Magnificent Stand at Liege Against Kaiser's Legions and Kill Thousands—Armored Troop Train Is Blown Up Near Spa — Germans Violate War Rules.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 6.—(Via Paris.)—Several thousand dead and wounded is the toll paid by the German army of the Meuse for its attack on Liege. The Belgians made a heroic defence, repulsing the Germans after heavy and continuous fighting.

The fortified position of Liege had to support on Wednesday the general shock of the German attack. The Belgian forts resisted the advance fiercely and did not suffer.

One Belgian squadron drove back six German squadrons.

Eight hundred wounded Germans are being transferred to the city of Liege, where they will be cared for.

Prior to the attack on Liege Gen. Von Emmich, commanding the German army of the Meuse, issued a proclamation calling for an open road through Belgium for the advance of his forces, and suggesting that prudence would show it to be the duty of the Belgian people to accede to this in order to avoid the horrors of war.

The Germans committed repressions against the civil population of the town of Vise, eight miles northeast of Liege, burning the city and shooting many of the residents.

The Belgian War Office announced last night that fierce fighting had occurred in the environs of Liege, and that so far as the Belgians were concerned the situation is excellent. "The Germans," the announcement says, "were driven back by an heroic attack made by a Belgian mixed brigade, which already had earned for itself the highest honors. No German who passed the fort survived."

The Germans, completely repulsed, have been unable to renew their attack on Liege.

French troops are reported to have entered the Province of Hainault, a frontier province of Belgium, and to have joined the Belgian army on the invitation of the Belgian Government.

Two regiments of German Uhlans have been destroyed by the Belgian army.

Two Regiments Annihilated.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 6.—All reports received here regarding fighting on the border agree that the German invaders are meeting with stubborn and probably entirely unlooked-for resistance.

It is reported that two German regiments were practically annihilated when an armored train was blown up by Belgians. A mine was sprung when the train was crossing a bridge and the slaughter was appalling. A heavy artillery fire was opened upon the survivors and their retreat was cut off by a Belgian column, which took a number of prisoners.

When the train was squarely on the bridge the mine was exploded, completely destroying the locomotive and the two forward cars filled with Germans. At the same time the Belgian artillery opened fire on the remainder of the German force which had been convoying the train.

The carnage was fearful. The Germans, although caught by surprise, put up a strong resistance, but they had no supporting artillery and finally retreated toward the frontier. In the meanwhile a Belgian column had been rushed to the rear of the German position and the two regiments composing the assaulting column were caught in a trap.

Many were killed before the officer in command surrendered the column to the Belgians.

The Belgian loss was comparatively unimportant, according to the announcement made public here. The German prisoners have been taken to Spa.

Most of those wounded were abandoned by the German army when it was forced to retreat. The Belgian artillery carried the day. The Germans attacked immediately on arrival without waiting for either infantry supports or for the artillery. It is because of this mistake that the Belgian forces were able to gain the advantage. When the infantry and supporting artillery reached the scene of battle it found that the cavalry and motorcycle brigades had been decimated by the fire. The Germans charged, but could not carry the Belgian position, and finally the entire army was withdrawn toward the Meuse.

Le Peuple asserts that in the fighting between Germans and Belgians near Vise a platoon of Prussian cavalry was almost annihilated by the enfilading fire of the Belgians from a building on the bank of the river.

The Prussians in revenge, the newspaper says, fired on civilians.

At Flemalle, near Argenteu, a Belgian force surprised a body of Prussians, and killed seventy out of ten officers and eighty men.

German troops have crossed the Belgian frontier at three points — at Dalheim, seven miles north of Liege, and at Francorchamps and Stavelot, both about 35 miles to the southeast of Fieron, six miles from Liege.

The prompt destruction of bridges by the Belgian troops checked the advance of the Germans.

Belgian reconnoitering parties located three German army corps, the tenth army corps at Eisden, the seventh army corps, 40,000 strong, at Verviers, and the sixth army corps, in another locality not named.

The tenth German army corps operating along the northern line, and finding unexpected resistance, moved further northward, invading Dutch territory at Tillburg and crossing the Meuse at Eisden.

An army of 100,000 Germans was marching yesterday on Liege, where a general attack is expected to be delivered to-day.

ANOTHER RUN ON SHOPS.

British Citizens Are Not Reassured by Government's Statements.

LONDON, Aug. 6. — Another run on the provision stores in London and in the provinces occurred yesterday in spite of the Government's assurances that there was sufficient food to supply the population for months without counting that en route. Prices again jumped and some of the smaller shops were forced to close.

In the east end several stores where prices had been raised were rushed by infuriated women who carried off everything they could lay their hands on before the arrival of the police.

The situation has been aggravated by the throwing out of work of 250,000 transport workers throughout the discontinuance of freight traffic to the continent. It is expected, however, that many of these will find employment in the army transport service.

The postoffice is flooded with mail, all the services to the continent having been held up.

Russians Penetrate East Prussia.

WARSAW, Poland, Aug. 6.—(Via London).—Russian frontier patrols, driving the enemy's cavalry before them, have crossed the East Prussia frontier at Lyk and Biala, and penetrated ten miles into German territory. The Russians captured and burned the German railroad stations at Borjemin and Biala, and cut communications from Lyk to Johannesburg the enemy falling back all along the frontier, burning villages.

Hungarians In U. S. Would Revolt.

NEW YORK, Aug. 6. — One hundred thousand Hungarians in America have pledged themselves to raise a fund of $10,000,000 to finance a revolution in Hungary, according to Louis Tarcai, editor of The Hungarian Daily Elore. Tarcai says that such a revolution now is regarded as inevitable by many Hungarians who are determined to eliminate the Hapsburg dynasty, but he does not believe it will take place until the $10,000,000 is raised.

"The war started by Austria will so impoverish the already severely oppressed Hungarians that they will have no alternative except revolt," he added.

BLOUNTMEN BROKE EVEN IN SERIES WITH LONDON

On to Ottawa Today for Remainder of the Week

Two out of four from London for the Petes is very good hustling. During the first nine games with London the Petes lost eight making their percentage read .111. The even break in the series just closed showed a .500 percentage on the four games which is a vast difference from the early season form. The Petes play in Ottawa today and here's hoping they quelch noisy, kicking "Shag" and make the sailing easier for the Cockneys. Yesterday's battle was won in the seventh when the Petes grabbed four hits while Dunn made a fumble. Welsh, Dolan, Fox and Miller had a hit each while King and Sterling had two each. King and Welsh had the errors for the Petes. Schettler relieved Sterling with two out in the ninth.

London, Aug. 5.—Linneborn connected with a hit that should have broken the tie and won the game for London in the ninth round this afternoon, but an unlucky bound caused the pill to strike Osborn as he bolted for second and the side was retired. An error by Dunn in the seventh opened the gate for four runs for Peterboro after the Indians had got away for a winning start. The Petes thus broke even on the set. The score :—

By innings—

London ...0 2 0 0 0 0 0 0 1—3 8 1

Sterling, Schettler and Miller; Heck and Snyder.

JOHNSON HAS COLLINS' GOAT

Mack's Star Has Difficulty in Connecting

Washington, Aug. 6.—If Connie Mack knew his business he would send Eddie Collins away on a fishing trip or something just about the time Walter Johnson was due to pitch against the Athletics. This may sound rather startling to the untutored fan, but let the doubtful ones gaze upon the record that Mr. Collins has stacked up when facing the Pride of the Potomac, also the pride of C. Griffith.

Now Eddie Collins is a most consistent .300 hitter, as nearly every sane hurler will vouch for, but if his batting average were reckoned by his work against Johnson he would be anything but a consistent swatsman, and in all likelihood Mr. C. Mack would get rid of him.

Mr. Edward Collins' batting average in facing Walter Johnson is a perfect scream and Ed. should disown it. One day he made two hits in one game when batting against Johnson, and one happened to be a home run. That was the best day's work he ever put in when labouring to master the Johnson curve. After that game Collins faced Johnson about twenty-five times before he even got the semblance of a hit.

These may be hard words, but E. Collins has made the poorest showing against Johnson of any batsman in the league controlled by Ban Johnson, save the hurlers and possibly Billy Sullivan. It is about as hard to find where Billy made a base hit off the pitching of the great Walter as it would be to find a molar in an old hen, but then Sully has faced the big star only a little over thirty times.

Collins in the eight seasons he has had the pleasure, or agony, of trying to bat the curves of Johnson, made a lamentably poor showing. In the 110 times at bat he made just 16 base hits, an average of .144, which hardly would hold him his job if he didn't have the gauge of about all the other hurlers in the league.

"YEB" FLAHERTY WILL HURL

For Red Caps Against De Laval This Evening

The game in the Mercantile League tonight between the De Laval and Red Caps gives promise of furnishing seven innings of good fast ball. These teams have met twice and each game has been ordered to be replayed because of protests hence when they clash this evening at Riverside every effort will be put forth by both nines to carry away a victory. Carson and Taylor will work for the De Laval while Flaherty and Swanson will compose the battery for Jack Pilling's aggregation. The game will be called at six-thirty sharp.

COMMENT

As You Like It

THE GIANTS have an alibi to cover up their slump. It is stated that most every member of the club is heavily interested in stocks and all are held on the margin. It is said that worry over the declining condition of the market had robbed the players of their aggressiveness. If it is true that the Giants are heavily invested the fact may have something to do with the slump. It is pretty hard to be cheery when you see your hard earned kale flitting away but then the great work of the Boston Braves and Cubs also has something to do with the back sliding of the champions.

BILL CUNNINGHAM the Ham's second sacker is blamed for the defeats in Ottawa. 'Tis claimed that Bill fanned ten times in four games when a hit meant a run or more. And he is the guy that poled out the longest hit on the local grounds. 'Tain't how hard you hit 'em it's when you hit 'em that counts.

AS INTIMATED a week ago Sir Thomas Lipton has cancelled his entry for the America Cup and there will be no race this year. Sir Tom is going back to the old land to lend a hand in some form or other in the squelching of the supreme egotist.

FOR GOOD SPORTSMANSHIP take off your hat to President Lannin of the Boston Red Sox who has offered to allow the Boston Braves to play the balance of their home games at Fenway Park, without rental charge. Fenway Park is the most advantageous of the two parks in Boston for the public's convenience. Needless to say President Caffney of the Braves has accepted the offer for Saturdays and holidays and is considering using the grounds for the balance of the National League season.

BOBBY HECK got his again yesterday. The great twirler or the near great, of the league has been getting his quite regularly of late. He is not a slumper though as shown last week. After Ottawa had shut him out he came back two days after and sewed the Senators up tighter than a censor squeezes the war news.

The tragic death of Dave Tope, the old-time Hamilton football star, who was killed when a wheel came off his automobile on the Kingston Road, shocked his many friends in Toronto. Tope had played many great games for the Tigers, and was probably the best full-back ever developed in Canada. Since his active retirement from the game he has been an executive member of the Hamilton team, and was admired and respected by all connected with the game in Canada.—Toronto Star.

The above from the Star is only one of the many tributes paid to Dave Tope, who met his death last Saturday while on his way to this city. False tributes are often paid to the dead, but everyone of the writers who have referred with a spirit of sadness to the demise of the cotton-topped full back knew him from the ground up, both as a gentleman and a player, and their sentiments are voiced in a manner of the highest sincerity. No one ever accused "Topey" of being a quibbler. He would rather lose a hundred games on the field than win one in the committee room, as was shown a few years ago when he, as representative of the Tigers, refrained from fighting a protest against Ottawa, when a little fighting would have won it for his club. "Davey" had been on losing teams too often to worry over defeat except when his own fumble caused it. A few years ago a fumble by him cost Hamilton a championship, and he cried like a baby in the dressing room. Had anyone else dropped the ball, "Topey" would have been the first to start a riot of fun in order to make the erring player forget. He certainly was true blue and memories of his true character and ability will linger long in the imnds of all who knew him.

With the great demand for ball players at present, it is anticipated the Canadian League will be rifled of its star players when the draft season opens this season. Among those of the Ottawa players who are likely to advance are Pitcher Frank Kubat who is displaying brilliant ability on the mound this season. Kubat was drafted by Toronto two years ago, but his inexperience failed to hold him his job in the International. This year he has won thirteen and lost three and is showing an elegant brand of hooks. For a left hander he has magnificent control. It is well known Shortstop Jack Mitchell is slated for higher company. He is the peer of anything in the league. The great strides Frank Smejkal has made as a hitter, places him on the eligible list for higher company. He is as good a fielding second-baseman as there is in the big leagues. Pitcher Hank Gero is expected to advance, and with a good ball club behind him, will be able to show his best wares. Artie Lage, the Ottawa backstop has been given the once over by several scouts this season. Among other Canadian leaguers who may be caught in the draft are Whitecraft, the London shortstop, Snyder, the London catcher, Bierbauer, the London first sacker, Pitcher Dougherty, of Hamilton, Louie Schettler, of Peterboro, who has been up there but is going well enough to get back again, Kopp, of St. Thomas, Brown, the Erie pitcher, and some of the Toronto International recruits with the Beavers.—Ottawa Free Press.

The Editor Turns to a New Task—Book Reviewing

By M. QUAD

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

ACCORDING to our office scales, the book entitled "The Love of Theodore" weighs just twenty-four ounces. We can't find out that Theodore's love was anything to brag of, and the fact that he loved for thirteen long years before saying anything about it does not recommend him to our estimation. A young man who loves a girl so that he can't sleep nights and yet permits her to make artificial flowers for 30 cents a day and attempt suicide nine different times should be chained up to a Digger Indian. The book leaves her clasped to his bosom, but in spite of his long love he may have found some other excuse to stand her off. We can't conscientiously recommend the book.

SHOULD BE CHAINED UP.

We can't say we admire the book entitled "Won by Chance." It's too much of a chance. Geraldine Hopkins gets lost in a forest twenty miles long by fifteen broad, and on the same day Reginald Schemerhorn has just escaped a cyclone, and Geraldine has been hanging over the brink of a precipice for two hours. We think it would have been better to have had the couple meet in a first class chop house and get acquainted through Geraldine finding that her watch had stopped or that she had left her purse at home.

In "Found at Last" the daughter of a millionaire has had forty offers of marriage. She knows that every one of the forty young men simply want her cash. She determines that whoever gets her shall get her through love, and she packs her trunk and goes west and pretends to be poor. She strikes a job teaching school at $6 a month and board, and after about six months along comes Popsy Harrison, a young man in a red woolen shirt, who is head boss in a sawmill. He says "Gosh hang it!" and "Gol durn it!" and he wipes his mouth on the tablecloth, but she discovers that he loves her for herself, and she gives him her heart and a stack of government bonds as big as a house. Things ought to always come out that way, and we hope the book will have a large sale.

We can't conscientiously recommend the book entitled "The Hatbox Mystery." A young man calls on a young girl and leaves his hatbox behind. She opens it, of course, and she finds a letter showing that he loves another and has put up a job to rob a bank. The girl sets out to thwart him and bring him to justice, and, after falling down a well, being blown up on a steamboat and run over by a trolley car, she discovers that the supposed villain is a millionaire in disguise and that the hatbox belongs to another man. There are too many adventures for a small box, and the girl doesn't even marry the millionaire after his innocence has been proved, and the hatbox dropped out of a third story window.

We wish it distinctly understood that Major Shortwell is no longer the Washington correspondent of the Kicker. We had great hopes of the major when he started out. He went away from here in a red shirt and buckskin leggings and cowboy hat, and we saw to it that he had two guns and bowie knife and lasso. His first two letters hit the boys plumb center, but then he began to fail and was a disappointment. We suspected the reason and began to investigate. It is with sorrow that we saw he went back on his crowd. We have convincing proofs that he hadn't been in Washington a month before he began to eat pie with a fork, wear white shirts and walk around in store clothes. It was inevitable that his style of writing should change, and two weeks ago it degenerated into such twaddle that we threw the copy into the wastebasket. We are done with the major.

FACED FOUR LIONS.

Coolness and Daring of a Plucky Kaffir Herdboy.

Four lions attacked a herd of cattle on a farm at Romsey, South Africa, says the Rhodesia Herald. The herd boy was standing on an ant heap examining a pair of boots he had got the day previous, when he heard a low growl near him. On looking up he saw that three lions had got hold of three cows, while another lion stood looking on.

The boy pulled off his boots and threw them at the nearest lion, and then made a rush for them with a stick, shouting at the same time at the top of his voice to another herdboy to bring a gun.

In the meantime two lions had got their cows down, but, nothing daunted, the Kafir made a rush for them, and the lions moved away from their prey. The boy then rounded up his cattle (he had 108 head), and while he was doing so had to chase the lions away several times. When he was at one side the lions would try to catch the cattle on the other. However, he brought all his cattle safely home, though one of the cows afterward died, the claw of a lion having penetrated her lung.

For cool daring it would be hard to beat the chasing of four lions single handed and with no weapons except a pair of boots and a stick.

LEARNING HOW TO UNLEARN.

Modern Scientists Harking Back to Thales of Miletus.

When we were young and knew without doubt that the molecule was composed of two or three ultimate parts, called atoms, we listened complacently to the statement that "science progresses in a straight line, philosophy around in a circle, or at best along a helical spiral." Now that we are older and believe that the simplest atom has nearly 1,800 parts, we find that perhaps the helix is expressive of science as well, observes the editor of the Engineering and Mining Journal.

We believe, with the alchemists, that the so called elements are fundamentally the same. Whether we will transmute one to another remains to be seen; we follow the alchemists in attempting it.

Were one of the Greek philosophers, Thales of Miletus, for instance, to stroll into a modern assembly of physicists and chemists, the language would be more troublesome than the ideas. He would hear the physical chemist remarking cheerfully that there is no matter, for that which we call matter is only energy, and Thales would remark, "Plagiarist." The disciples of relativity, the ultra modern physicists, would tell him that space and time are one, and Thales would sigh to think of his boyish debates.

Stole the Colonel's Ice Cream.

In the Toronto Police Court the other day a number of lads were brought up before Col. Denison for stealing ice cream. It seems that these boys had followed the trail of one of the larger ice cream makers and picked up the packages in the residential district whenever opportunity offered, the result being that not only did householders lose their dessert, but incidentally some of the youths ate so much of the cream that they became very ill indeed. However, those who were well enough appeared before the colonel to answer the charge. There was nothing to it, in spite of Crown Attorney Corley good-naturedly pleading for them, but guilty, and they were fined a dollar each, with a warning that they would not get off so easily a second time. After the court adjourned, Mr. Corley said to Col. Denison. "Are you aware, colonel, that one of those boys stole your dessert the other night?" "The little beggar!" remarked the colonel. "No, I did not know it, and I am glad that you didn't tell me." And the colonel, with an amused smile on his face, said in a reflective voice: "He got fined a dollar, anyhow."—Toronto Saturday Night.

Woman Appointed Probation Officer

Erie, Aug. 6.—For the first time in eight years Erie is to have a woman probation officer. She is Mrs. Joseph H. Williams, who was named to the position by Judges Walling and Benson. According to her appointees she probably is the best qualified woman in Erie county for the position, having been pre-eminently prominent in philanthropic work as applied to those who come under the court's jurisdiction.

The appointment of a woman probationer is a reversion to the original in Erie county. Its first official of the kind was a woman — Mrs. Lewis, who was appointed to the post about ten years ago. Two years later her family removed from Erie and she did too. This automatically vacated the office. The court then named Captain Sullivan to the job. He continued in the office until again appointed county detective, when he resigned the probationary post, in which he had served for four years.

Is Required by Law.

Succeeding Captain Sullivan came H. F. Wilbor, who continues in the office. The action of the court in naming a woman official is based, the judges say, not so much on the fact that recent events have shown such a need, but rather, because "the law seems to require it."

Judge Walling explained that, in substance, the law requires that a woman who is to be paroled shall be placed under the supervision of one of her own sex. It was to meet this requirement that Mrs. Williams was appointed. For years she has been interested in the Crittenden home and has conducted religious services in the county jail, besides displaying a vital interest in members of her sex who have come under the purview of the criminal courts.

MUCH INTEREST IN COMING EXHIBITION

Calgary, Alta., Aug. 6.—Much interest is being shown in the agricultural and horticultural exhibition which will be held in connection with the International Irrigation Congress in Calgar,, October 5 to 9. The committee having charge of this work is satisfied that there will be a large number of provincial and district exhibits, while both the dominion and federal governments are making special preparations for the exhibition of the resources of their irrigation areas. British Columbia fruit raised by irrigation methods will be a feature of the exhibition.

THE KIEL CANAL

The Kaiser Wilhelm Canal—generally called the Kiel Canal—runs from Kiel, on the Baltic Sea, to Brunsbuttel, on the Elbe estuary, a short distance from the sea, and cuts off the long and rather hazardous passage through the Cattegat and around the northern end of Denmark. The canal was opened in 1895, and the completion of its enlargement was formally celebrated by a visit from the Kaiser in April of this year. By its enlargement the battleships in the world can pass through it.

The pride of Kiel is its magnificent harbor and two huge forts, making it a place of great stragetic strength. To the German navy the canal is deemed to be of inestimable advantage, enabling a commander to throw the entire fleet from one sea to the other in a few hours, and to menace an opposing British fleet from points several hundred miles apart.

The new locks of the Kiel Canal lack the imposing height of those at Panama, but are bigger in every other respect. They are 1,082 feet long, against Panama's 1,000 feet, and have a mean depth of 45 feet of water over the sills, as against Panama's 41 feet. The new Kiel is 400 feet wide at the surface, 150 feet wide at the bottom, and is provided with eleven "sidings" at which vessels may pass.

Kiel is the chief naval port of Germany on the Baltic, a town of the Prussian Province of Schleswig-Holstein. It has been developed by the Kaiser into a regal naval arsenal.

The island of Heligoland, lying off the mouths of the Elbe and the Weser, 28 miles from the mainland, was, from 1807 to 1890, a British possession. In the latter year it was ceded by the Government of Lord Salisbury to Germany, and since 1892 has formed part of the Prussian Province of Schleswig-Holstein. As soon as the Kaiser obtained possession of the island he had it strongly fortified, the old British batteries being replaced by armored turrets mounting great guns of heavy calibre. It has also been used by the navy for a coaling station, and has great stragetic value to Germany in the present crisis.

SIGNS OF WAR

Probably when the history of the war is written it will be found that no mere accident such as the assassination of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand was responsible for it. For months past, for years even, the great powers of Europe appear to have been acting upon the principle that a great conflict was inevitable. That Europe is now threatened with a general war should occasion no astonishment to diplomatists. We know that for years past Germany and Britain have been eyeing each other askance and that twice in recent years they were nearly at war. On two occasions in the past decade Germany and France were nearly embroiled. At the time of the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Germany threatened Russia with war if she interfered, and ever since that open affront, and Russia's backdown, preparations for a war between Russia and Germany have been going forward. It is only a few months ago that Russia negotiated a huge loan in Paris for the announced purpose of adding another half million men to the standing army of the country.

Signs of Russia's Preparations.

When Russia has borrowed money in the past she has invariably given an understanding that the capital is to be used in some sort of way that will earn interest in some industrial or commercial development. But upon the last occasion there was no such pretence. She asked for the money for war purposes and it was given. Germany could not be blind to the significance of this move, and Germany therefore could hardly have been unprepared for Russia's championship of the cause of Servia, unless she foolishly expected that, as Russia had backed down once before, she had acquired the habit, and would not oppose Austria. Following the negotiation of this loan, however, there were other events that showed Russia to be preparing for a military campaign. In April there appeared in the Cologne Gazette, a semi-official German organ, a despatch from its St. Petersburg correspondent, calling attention to the alarming movement of Russian troops along the western border. There could be no explanation of these movements except that Russia was preparing for a war with Austria and Germany.

Dropping the Mask.

This was the explanation current in both countries, and even in Russia there was no great attempt made to deny the significance of the movement. In fact it seemed as though the mask were about to be dropped, and no further pretence of friendliness between Russia and Germany was kept up. A few years ago, such a movement of Russian troops would have led to a peremptory demand upon the Russian government for an explanation to Germany. The theory advanced at that time in explanation of Germany taking no official notice of the semi-mobilization was that Germany was not then ready for a conflict, and that she had more to gain by delay than had France and Russia. A few weeks later Russia gave further evidences that she was getting her army ready when she ordered an experimental mobilization after Easter. In veiw of the fact that this experiment cost $50,000,000, it is plain that it was undertaken for a serious purpose. About the same time it was announced that the half million men whose time of military training had expired would be kept with the colors throughout the summer.

A War Ministry.

If Germany had read the signs as intelligently as some British and American critics read them she would have seen even before any of these events something that would have warned her not to presume too much upon Russia's unwillingness to engage in war. There was the dismissal of Kokovtsoff from the post of prime minister. He had been regarded as a strong peace advocate. His place was taken by Goremykin, famed as a Nationalist, and as one who had at heart the great idea of Pan-Slavism. Bark, the new minister of finance, is also described as a Nationalist. In times of peace both these high officials would be classified more or less accurately as reactionaries. In time of war they are likely to be remembered as strong Russian statesmen.

Feared German Diplomacy.

Mr. Cunliffe-Owen, a well-known American writer who is a very high authority upon European affairs, pointed out several months ago that a war between Russia and Germany might be certainly predicted to occur before 1917, and among the reasons he cited was the fact that in 1917 nearly all of Russia's trade agreements expire. More than 50 per cent. of the entire imports of Russia come from Germany. In the past, whenever the time has arisen for the renewal of these treaties, German diplomacy has managed to have Russia in a position where she dare not increase duties upon German goods. Upon the last occasion Germany made Russia feel that her neutrality in the case of the war between Russia and Japan deserved commercial recompense. But within a year Russia had freed herself from the vodka monopoly, which amounted to $500,000,000 a year in revenue, and must now look to raise the money by taxing imports. It was felt in Russia that before 1917 Germany would have contrived to so involve her that she would again permit the unrestricted import of German goods.

War That is Madness

New York World, Aug. 5.—Germany has run amuck. There is no other explanation of the Kaiser's policy in forcing a general European war.

Fortunate it is that Great Britain is compelled to cast her sword into the balance without further loss of time.

The issue is now joined. Either German autocracy must be crushed or European democracy will be obliterated. There is no middle course. If the forces that the Kaiser has loosed are victorious, the map of European republicanism may as well be rolled up, and the American people prepare to make the last great stand for democracy. All of continental Europe that is not Russianized will be Prussianized. France will be reduced to the status of a third-rate power. Belgium, Holland, and Denmark will fall successively into the maw of German imperialism. Italy will become a vassal state, the sun will have set upon the British Empire as well, and the mailed fist of the conqueror will make ready to strike the final blow at democracy in the new world.

The course of the German Government during the last week cannot be reconciled with any theory of political sanity. Wantonly and deliberately the Kaiser has plunged his sword into the heart of civilization. The whole world is paying the penalty of his madness, neutrals as well as belligerents. Upon the American people alone, three thousand miles from the scene of conflict, is levied a tribute of millions of dollars a day in disorganized commerce, disorganized industry and disorganized finance, and the final reckoning that must be paid for this maniacal onslaught of German autocracy defies calculation. The human imagination is staggered as it faces the inevitable consequences of this supreme achivement of paranoia.

It is still possible to sympathize with the German people in the great tragedy that has overtaken them, with their backs to the wall fighting a more powerful coalition than ever Napoleon faced. But there can be only one answer to the Kaiser's challenge to Europe. German autocracy has made itself the enemy of mankind. Its destruction will be the emancipation of the German people themselves as well as the salvation of European republicanism.

Many Spies Arrested.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—Reginald McKenna, the Home Secretary, announced yesterday that 21 spies had been arrested in the British Isles during the last 24 hours, chiefly in important naval centres.

The Home Secretary introduced a bill in the House of Commons to restrain the movements of undesirable aliens, with the object of facilitating the removal of spies. This was immediately given a second reading.

TIME OF YOUR ORDEAL AT HAND

What Earl Roberts Said

Earl Roberts, in advocating compulsory military training, in a speech at Manchester not many months ago, delivered a warning to Britain that events have fully justified. The veteran soldier said:

"Now, just as in 1866 and 1870, war will take place the instant the German forces by land and sea are, by their superiority at every point, as certain of victory as anything in human calculation can be made certain. Germany strikes when Germany's hour has struck. That is the time-honored policy of her Foreign Office. It is her policy at the present hour.

"We may stand still. Germany always advances, and the line along which she is moving is now almost manifest. It is towards a complete supremacy by land and sea.

"There is one way in which Britain can have peace not only with Germany but with every other Power, and that is to present such a battle-front by sea and land that no Power or probable combination of Powers shall dare to attack her without the certainty of disaster. But there is a way in which Britain is certain to have war and its horrors and calamities; it is this—by persisting in her present course of unpreparedness, her apathy, unintelligence and blindness, and in her disregard of the warnings of the most ordinary political insight, as well as of the example of history.

"What, then, is my plan, and what is my ultimate counsel to the nation and the message to my countrymen at this solemn hour? It is—'Arm and prepare to quit yourselves like men, for the time of your ordeal is at hand.'

"As a European Power, as a Continental Power, we do not exist—for war. Our army as a belligerent factor in European politics is almost a negligible quantity. The Empire is at all times practically defenceless beyond its first line. Such an Empire invites war. Its assumed security amid the armaments of Europe, and now of Asia, is insolent and provocative.

The Territorial Force is now an acknowledged failure—a failure in discipline, a failure in numbers, a failure in equipment, a failure in energy. Unless I am misinformed, the majority of the Territorials are now in favor of compulsion.

"I have commanded your armies in peace and in war. I say to you, the young men of this city and of this nation, that your enfranchisement is not complete until you have become soldiers as well as citizens, prepared to attest your manhood on the battlefield as wel as at the election booths."

THE OTTAWA RIVER IS AS CROWDED WITH LOGS AS IN THE EARLY DAYS

The Old Square Timber Raft is a Thing of the Past, However, and Now the Run is Made up of Stuff That the Old-Time Logger Would Have Refused to Cut a Few Years Ago.

For generations the Ottawa has been the foremost lumbering stream in Canada, and still the men who work on the sorting booms in the river above the falls of the Chaudiere, where are situated the biggest of the Ottawa's many mills, say that the drives of logs passing through their "gaps" are as large to-day as ever. Thomas Gillespie, for example, who has been boss of the sorting gang at Thompson's Bay for 35 years, says he doesn't see much difference in the number of logs in the river these days, however much difference there may be in the size of them. He is a veteran of the time when the square timber rafts sailed the Ottawa in the full tide of their glory. There are no more timber rafts now, there are no longer trees big enough to make square timber. The last timber crib has shot the slides at the Chaudiere, says S. H. Howard in Toronto Star Weekly.

The logs that they make now would not have been considered worth taking out of the woods in the good old "timber" days. But such as they are they keep on coming—pine, spruce, tamarac, pulp. The Ottawa is full of logs, from the head waters above Temiscaming right down to the lower river below the falls. Nor does one summer see al. these Ottawa drives through to the mills. It takes two or three years for some of the drives to get down In fact, certain firms, like J. R Booth, have continuous processions of logs afloat all the time, some of the pieces having been on the way to the mill for years.

From some far creek away up on the Hudson Bay Height o' Land, where they were dumped on the ice originally one spring, down through all the ramifications of the tributary streams, little and big, until finally the "grand" river was reached, the journey for some of these water-worn, rock-peeled logs, has been a rough succession of rapids and tumbling waters, and ice and drifting snow. In the spring they would move out of their winter quarters with the high water and travel another stage of their journey. At a rapids late in summer it might happen some of these brothers from the distant pinery would be stranded on the shallow rocks and hung up again for another winter. In some cases the Ottawa "sweep" comes along and picks off such laggards sending them on down the currrent. But some they miss, and it is said that though Hon. George H. Perley has been out of the lumber business for years it is not uncommon for Perley's logs to be found in the sorting gaps even yet. As for the logs that sink, drift into blind channels, get chopped up for firewood by the habitants of the Ottawa Valley, or lost, in one way and another in the great river—who knows? Certainly not Thomas Gillespie, the boss of the sorting gang at Thompson's Bay.

"Lord only knows," says he.

Out in the middle of the wide curren tof the Ottawa stands a two-storeyed house on a crib some four or five feet above the water which its verandah overhangs. Around the house spread out fields of floating logs like a farm. Paths run across the expanse, and booms are stretched across like fences. Every morning the men go off to work, their pike poles over their shoulders, marching these floating paths in the middle of the river. Two logs strapped together with pieces of scantling and faced with a couple of planks form these river sidewalks, but they are only the main roads, for the men take to the boom timbers at times, or, if need be, they walk the loose logs without hesitation. Their boots are caulked with half-inch spikes. One steps on a log and it does not roll; it sinks, maybe, if it is a small one, but the river man steps on to the next one before his foot goes down.

All these logs above here have been floating since last year. They were liberated by the spring thaw and have come down from Lake Dechenes and the rapids. This year's logs won't be at the sorting gaps for a while yet. A boom stretches across the river holding back these old logs until they have been sorted according to the brands of their owners. This is the work of the sorting gangs, and the purpose of the sorting "gaps." There are several places where the logs in the Ottawa are sorted—in fact once they strike the main river they are sorted at almost every stage of their journey, each mill taking its quota from out the mass as it passes. The work of sorting and of keeping the drives in the main river moving is undertaken by the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company, composed of various owners of logs in the Ottawa, who associate themselves to drive co-operatively instead of as individuals, thus saving an enormous amount of expense. They build the slides at the falls and rapids, manage the booms, and sort the logs according to the brands and the species of timber.

The "sorting gap" is simply a gap in the boom which holds back the "jam" a gap of some fifty feet across. It is bridged some two feet above the water by three long planks. A little lower down another bridge goes across the gap, and the channel between these two bridges is boomed off like a roadway. All the logs to be sorted have to come through this narrow channel under the two bridges. On each of these bridges three men stand with pike poles. Men are stationed above to send the logs into the gap, and they have to be men active on the "loose," for they cannot do their work and stay on the solid boom.

LONDON'S FORDIDDING FORTRESS HAS MEMENTOES OF BAD OLD DAYS

Has Known Cruelties That Shame Humanity.

Ghosts and dread happenings—the stifling air and damp soil reek of such things. What tales these merciless walls, built fifteen feet thick in solid masonry, might tell of doomed men immured there. One thinks of the cold river flowing by, and water oozing up through a spongy floor, and darkness that may be felt. In such places men have fought for life against fearful odds in cruel days — and the Tower of London has known cruelties that shame humanity.

But its dungeons are not as these. Nothing is likely so much to surprise the visitor—perhaps a little disappointed in his surroundings—when privileged in the New Year for the first time to pass through, as to find that the dungeons are all above ground.

Gundulf, Bishop of Rochester, who built the White Tower as the central stronghold of the fortress, made no entrance from the ground. An enemy investing the keep might beat his head ineffecually against sheer walls.

Another surprise. The dungeons of the Tower are no cramped cells, but are immense chambers. One is 91 feet by 35 feet, internal area; the second 47 feet in length by 15 in breadth. A mere hole in the wall, shut by a heavy door, will attract attention. It is the dreaded Little Ease, wherein Guy Fawkes is believed to have passed his last days on earth—a place so small that the prisoner could neither stand upright nor lie down at full length.

The first Edward's wars in Wales and Scotland brought many prisoners to London, whose lives rotted away in the Tower dungeons. The place also served for the immurement of the sub-prior of St. Peter's and a party of his monks, suspected by the same monarch of being a party to the forcing of the Chapel of the Pyx at Westminster, and the robbery of the English regalia stored there.

But the dungeons of the keep have another and more terrible association. They were the sole place wherein torture was administered within the Tower. In truth, it may be said that these walls have witnessed more suffering than any other spot about the fortress save, perhaps, the execution ground itself.

In an upper apartment the instruments are shown; thumbscrews, so small to cause such distress, the "scavenger's daughter" — a fearful contrivance for producing acute pain—a massive iron collar studded inside with spikes, the wearing of which must soon cause death.

There is a model of the rack. They are to-day museum exhibits. One looks upon them quite coldly. In these dark places they were used. Guy Fawkes was tortured on the rack in the dungeons of the White Tower. For half an hour he bore the agony.

Then his fortitude gave way, and in a feeble voice he promised to tell all, but his secret was of such intimate concern to the King that the ear of a Minister alone could be trusted with it. With all speed a horsed messenger was despatched to bring Cecil to the Tower, and the confession was written down. Guido, the broken man, wrote at the bottom with a quivering hand, but he could write no more.

Whistled to the Queen.

An amusing story is told of a recent visit to Hampton Court Palace gardens by the Queen and Princess Mary. They were walking in Bushey Park, which faces the gardens, when the princess dropped her handkerchief. A Sunbury resident, Mr. Conquest, picked it up and whistled loudly after the Queen and the princess. As this failed to attract attention, he ran after them and politely restore the lost handkerchief, for which he was politely thanked. Mr. Conquest's surprise can be imagined when he was informed that the Princess Mary was the owner of the article, and that her escort was the Queen.

GRIM DAYS WHEN CRIMINALS WERE TRANSPORTED

Officer's Diary of Convict Ship Voyage in 1788.

After a voyage lasting over eight months, the first convict squadron transporting 998 prisoners arrived in Botany Bay on Jan. 10,1788. On board the Friendship transport was a young lieutenant of marines, Ralph Clark, one of the officers in charge, and he set himself the task daily writing down the events of this grim passage. Everything comes to auction nowadays, and on July 10, at Sotheby's this document of blood and tears was offered for sale. It is a faithful chronicle, beginning with a list of the convicts, their ages and offenses, and their savage sentences. For stealing a teakettle in Shrewsbury a man of 60 was awarded 14 years. For house-breaking a lad of 13 got seven years. A woman won five years for 17 pence, and another, who proved herself to be the worst fiend imaginable on board ship, had seven years for 9 guineas.

In England Clark had left a young wife and baby. His diary teems with raphsodies of conjugal love; with fears and dreams; and with the drab business of irons and lashes, and of the horrors of their living freight. The women convicts early showed their mettle. Out at sea only a few days, Clark wishes that they were well out of the ship. Half of them are soon in irons, and the champion virago, still unequelled, is ordered to be flogged with a rope and tied to a pump afterwards. The corporal who administered the punishment "did not play with her, but laid it home." All to no purpose. "Never was there such a set of rascals together. They are ten thousand times worse than the men," was Clark's comment on 18th century female prisoners.

Clark was sentimentalist outside of his duties. Fifteen days from England, he writes:

"May 28, 1787—Flog this day John Bennett, a convict, with 87 lashes for breaking out of irons, a young man but an old rogue. Read part of the story of the Humble Friend in the Lady Magazine for the year 1775 very much taken with it."

This is the first flogging recorded. According to Clark's list, Bennet was 19 years old; he was sentenced to seven years imprisonment for highway robbery. Soon thoughts of home and beauty fill the lieutenant's heart.

"July 16, 1787—Read the remainder of the Tragedy of Douglas this day, oh, it is a sweet play, with an innocent sweet spirit that is young Norval when he informs Lord and Lady Randolph whom he is and where his father lives, on the Gramphine Hills my father feeds his flock, etc., and what are the emotions in the breast of Lady Randolph when she sees the features and shape of her lost and stained husband Douglas in that of young Norval, little does she know, fond mother, that he is her long lost son, or she would not have let him go to the field with her lord, what a villain Glenalvon is, if it had not been for him her son had lived, and she, fond mother, had not taken the rash step which she did, but still, I cannot think that she loved as my virtuous Alicia does, heaven knows how much she and I love, the tear of sorrow would not refrain from rolling down my cheeks at the affecting scenes in this play.

The spirit of savage discipline overtakes him, as he notes:

"Oct. 11, 1787— . . . the doctor met with a great loss this afternoon, one of the convicet women whom he gave some things to wash for him said that she lost seven pairs of stockings overboard, but I am apt to think that they are not overboard but that some of the other women have stolen them. . . . if they were to lose anything of mine that I gave them to wash I would cut them to pieces, etc."

Eventually, on Oct. 27, the 21 female convicts were removed to another transport, and in the diary for Nov. 8, 1787, he says:

" . . . and thank God we have got quite clear of the most troublesome set (the women) and have received 40 sheep in their room, which I have not the least manner of doubt, but we will find them much more agreeable shipmates than they (ladies) were, the men cannot hold a candle to one of them, etc.

The glorious beauty of Sidney Harbor is acknowledged all over the world, and when Lieut. Clark gazed upon Port Jackson for the first time on Jan. 26, 1788, he declared it to be the most beautiful place in the world; but remembering (Naaman-like) the waters of Abana and Pharphar, he naively added, "I cannot compare anything to come nearer to it than about three miles above Saltash to the weir."

Clark's description of the land about the new settlement is worth quoting:

"There is no river or spring in the country that we have been able to find or meet with, all the fresh water comes out of large swamps, which the country abounds with, the country is over run with large trees, not one acre of clear ground to be seen, nor is there one tree out of 50 but what is burnt with the lightning, nor nothing in it fit for the substance of man. What with earthquakes, thunder and lightning, it is, to be sure, a sweet country; the thunder and lightning is the most terrific I ever heard. It is the opinion of everybody here that Government will remove the settlement to some other place, for if it remains here the country will not be able to maintain itself in 100 years."

Then follows the harrowing accounts of life at a convict station. One extract will suffice:

"Feb. 27—A criminal court sits today for the trial of such prisoner as may be brought before them. Amongst the number is two that came out in the ship with me—Henry Lovall and one Ryons. At 1 o'clock their sentence was read, the charge being clearly proved of their stealing butter, peas and pork—Thomas Barret, Henry Lovall, Joseph Hall and Ryan. The three former received sentence of death, and the latter to receive 300 lashes. At 5 o'clock p. m. the battalion was ordered under arms for the sentence of the law to be put in execution, and soon after we marched to the place of execution which was a tree between the male and female convicts' camp. At 5.15 the unhappy men were brought to the place where they were to suffer, when after the parson had done prayers with them, the provost marshal put the halter about the neck of Thomas Barret, and he mounted the ladder. From his going I don't think he had the least thought that he was to suffer but when the provost marshal put a handkerchief around his head he turned as white as a sheet, when soon after the ladder was pulled from under him, and he launched into the other world without a groan. From every account he was a great rascal. The other two, Lovall and Hall, were respited until tomorrow."

On the next day the two men had their sentences commuted to banishment. The severity of the sentences is no doubt to be explained by the brutality of the criminal law at that time; but in this case it has a certain justification, as the problem of food was a serious one. Clark says:

". . . . It is hard to have nothing but salt beef to eat every day, the kangaroo are very plentiful, but hard to come at. A great number have been shot, and are very good eating. . . . The crows go down the same as a barn door fowl in England. Nothing goes amiss here. Snakes and lizards are becoming good eating, but them I cannot yet bring myself to stomach."

Enough has been written to suggest the grimness of this human document. In the same sale four fascinating letters by Capt. Cook were also sold. It was he who suggested Australia as a settlement for British prisoners. As for Clark's diary, only one other could beat it—the manuscript account written by a poor convict.—London Telegraph.

The "Buffs" Privilege.

The "Buffs," of whom King Christian has just been appointed colonel-in-chief, have one curious privilege. In recognition of the descent of the old 3rd Regiment of Foot—the East Kent, to give it its present official name—from the trained bands of London, it has the right to march through the city with colors flying and drums beating. Frederick VIII., King Christian's father, was appointed colonel-in-chief of the "Buffs" shortly after he succeeded to the throne.

CORRESPONDENT OF THE LONDON TIMES GIVES A VIVID PICTURE OF MEXICO

A timely and gripping book, "The Real Mexico," has just been written by H. Hamilton Fyfe, the special correspondent for The London Times. A chapter devoted to the federalist army has a particular interest at this time. Among other things, Mr. Fyfe says:

"Torreon, the prosperous centre of the cotton-growing district, was taken by the revolutionaries in September. After denying for a week that it had fallen the War Office admitted the truth, but said that it would be retaken in a few days. For a month or so nothing happened. Then it was announced that a blow would be struck. Gen. Velasco would start at once, and the rebels would be driven out of Torreon. The Government had been urged to act vigorously, because in the cotton district a record crop was in need of being picked. They responded by putting a new tax upon cotton 'to meet the cost of the warlike operations' and by doing—nothing.

"For six weeks after I saw Gen. Velasco's brigade in its five trains Torreon remained in the hands of the rebels. The forces which were to retake it advanced and retreated, chassed and set to partners, marched this way and marched that. Gen. Velasco was frequently reported to be not with his command, but in Saltillo. Not until the 10th of December was Torreon retaken and then only because the rebels had drawn off and left the garrison very weak.

"After the evacuation of Torreon by the Federals, Gen. Munguia was tried by a court of inquiry. The intention was to shoot him. This was his defence: 'How could I meet the rebels in the open?' he asked. 'They fight in loose formation. I was obliged to keep my troops together. If I did not they would melt away. Desertion is the idea uppermost in almost every soldier's mind. Again, how could I order my officers to lead their men to the attack? I knew their men would shoot them down as soon as they got the chance.'

"The best generals would find it hard to do anything with such an army as this until they had disciplined it and discovered a certain number of men whom they could trust. Mexican generals have unfortunately very little talent for war, and they make, as a rule, no attempt to 'lick their men into shape.' Officers in command are to our minds incredibly slack. At a small battle in the State of Morelos the Federals by use of machine guns forced the rebels to retire. The nature of the country made it easy for their retreat to be cut off. But the Federal colonel looked at his watch. 'It is time for dinner,' he said and told his bugler to sound the 'Cease fire.' The rebels leisurely went away.

"That kind of incident, which happens daily, helps to keep current the belief that Federal officers do not wish to bring the war to an end. They do not take soldiering seriously.

"The Mexican army has no army service corps, no medical department to speak of. It carries no camp equipment, no supplies. Watch a field force break camp at dawn. First there go pattering off a horde of women laden with pots and pans, blankets, sometimes babies. These are the soldaderas, the camp followers, the commissariat of the force. That they move as quickly as they do is a miracle. Whatever the day's march may be, they are always on the camping ground before the men arrive. They rig up shelters, they cook tortillas and frijoles (maize cakes and beans), they make coffee. You see them mending their husbands' coats, washing their shirts, roughly tending flesh wounds. Without these soldaderas the army could not move. While President Huerta was seizing hundreds of men by night in Mexico City and other cities in order to swell his forces to 100,000 he also had women 'pressed' to go with the new soldiers and take care of them. Criadas (maidservants) were positively afraid to be out after dark.

"The difficulty of an invasion would lie in suppressing guerrilla warfare among the mountains, in the jungles, wherever the country offered good cover for 'sniping' and sudden attacks upon small detachments. It would be necessary to put in force a measure like the crimes act in Land League Ireland, which would make it a serious and if necessary a capital offense to possess arms."

Mr. Fyfe attributes Mexico's troubles largely to the rise of a middle class where before there were only the upper and "peon" classes. This new group foments discontent in the breast of the "peon" against those to whom his fathers had been accustomed to bow meekly ever since the Spanish conquest.

As to the future, he sums up as follows:

"Madero was an accident. It is unlikely that the Mexican people will be deceived again in the same way. But the man who is to rule Mexico successfully must have something of Madero's good will and sympathy, as well as a great deal of Don Porfirio's ruthlessness and strength."

In a Bad Way.

"You seem much upset, my good man," remarked the curate, who happened to call when Murkie was laying down the law somewhat emphatically to his family circle.

"Hupset?" bellowed Murkie. "I should think I am hupset! Our blessed kid's just set 'isself on fire, an' blowed if the missus 'ere ain't bin an' put 'im out with my pot o' beer, an' me stony broke too!"—London Telegraph.

"The Home of Good Clothes"

BOWSER THE SAGE

Sufficient Unto Him is His Storehouse of Knowledge

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

WHEN Mr. Bowser wears a look of importance mingled with a patronizing air it sets Mrs. Bowser to guessing.

Something has happened.

Mr. Bowser has discovered that the world is round. It is 93,000,000 miles to the sun and a few feet over. The few feet over are known to him alone.

After dinner he took the cat on his knee and stroked her back as he smoked.

That is another sign that something profound is getting ready to boil over.

A preliminary cough and then:

"Mrs. Bowser, you know I was over to see Davidson the other evening? I had to wait about half an hour for him, and during the interval I talked with Mrs. Davidson. I was more than surprised to find how well informed she was. Davidson ought to feel proud of her."

"I suppose he does," replied Mrs. Bowser.

"It's a wonder to me that all women don't go at it and inform themselves," continued Mr. Bowser.

"Most of the women I know are about as well posted on general affairs as the men," returned Mrs. Bowser.

Mr. Bowser's Tolerant Spirit.

"What an assertion! Ha, ha, ha! Most women know the title of the last love sick novel, the latest style of hat and who is going to get married next, but as for knowledge of current events they haven't got as much as a cat. However, as the Lord made 'em that way it's all right."

"WHAT I KNOW I KNOW."

"Why don't you give me a few pointers on current events?" asked Mrs. Bowser after a minute of silence.

"Do you mean that?" asked Mr. Bowser as he looked at her over the top of his spectacles.

"Of course I do."

"Well, the Philippine question is one which concerns everybody. Perhaps you have heard of it?"

"I have. Anything you would like to ask me about it?"

"A question or two. Where are the islands?"

"North of Borneo, in the China sea."

"I thought you'd trip up on the very first question, and you have. Mrs. Bowser, it gives me pleasure to inform you that the Philippine islands are situated between the Cape of Good Hope and Australia. See if you can remember that for five minutes."

"I don't want to remember that," she replied. "The Philippines are where I located them. You are thinking of Madagascar."

"What, you dispute me!"

"I'll show you a map."

Shameless Impudence.

"Map be hanged! What I know I know! The idea of you disputing me on a point like this!"

"Here's an atlas and here's a map," said Mrs. Bowser as she took the book from the shelf. "Here's the China sea—here are the Philippines. Up here you see Japan—down here is Borneo. Who is right?"

"Woman, don't try to bluff me with any old map, because it won't work! I'm going by what I know—not by any tomfool business. That's always the way with you!"

"Well, never mind," replied Mrs. Bowser, as she put the book away. "You know the name of the principal island, of course?"

"Certainly I do, and for your personal benefit I will state that it is Manila. You'd better write it down before it escapes from your memory."

"You mean Manila is the principal city?"

"No: I don't. When I say island I don't mean city!"

"But Manila is a city, Mr. Bowser, and the principal island is Luzon."

"What, what!" shouted Mr. Bowser. "You dispute me! You try to correct my geography! Woman, don't go too far! If you are honest in your ignorance I can bear with you, but don't try to bluff me away through!"

"Geography says that the chief island is Luzon and that Manila is the capital city," quietly replied Mrs. Bowser.

"And what is geography to me?" almost howled Mr. Bowser, as he kicked the cat across the room. "Because geography states that Ohio is in Asia does it make it so? I say that Manila is the principal island, and I'll bet a million dollars to a cent on it!"

Mr. Bowser's Own Style Spelling.

Mrs. Bowser let him walk around and cool off a bit, and then asked:

"How do you spell Philippines?"

"The same as everybody else with sense in his head!" sulkily replied Mr. Bowser.

"That is, you put two p's in the word?"

"That is, I don't do any such thing! Any schoolboy will tell you that it is spelled with two l's and one p. You'd better get out your spelling book before you go into war or politics!"

"The geography and the newspapers give one l and two p's."

"What! Disputing me again! Mrs. Bowser, this is too much. If you are trying to make out that I'm a fool, why don't you say so?"

"Look for yourself."

"Never, never! What do I care how they spell the name!"

"But"—

"I say that there are two l's in it and that settles it. When you asked me to post you on current events I knew you simply wanted to spoil my evening. Mrs. Bowser"—

"And how do you spell Manila?" she interrupted.

"How do I spell Manila?" he repeated. He tried to freeze the blood in her veins by an icy glare and went on:

"I might ask you how to spell cat or dog, but I don't want to embarrass you. I spell Manila with two l's, but perhaps you and the newspapers and idiot asylums make it end in 'y' instead of 'a.'"

"There's only one l in it, Mr. Bowser. Find the name where you will and you will see that I am right."

"Home" Becomes a Hollow Mockery.

Mr. Bowser gathered himself to work awful destruction on the furniture of the room and to raise his voice until it could be heard a mile away, but suddenly checked himself. Then he swallowed at the lumps in his throat, grew pale and started for the hat rack. Mrs. Bowser followed him and queried:

"Are you going out, dear?"

"I am going out," he sternly replied—"o-u-t! Perhaps you spell it some other way."

"But will you be gone long?"

"Don't wait for me. I may be back in an hour or may not be home for a month. I said home, but it is no home for me. You have broken it up. When a husband becomes a fool in his wife's eyes it is time for him to go."

"But you see you were wrong about the orthography of those"—

"Oh, I was, was I? Then you still insist that I'm a fool? That will do! That will do, Mrs. Bowser—that will do! In pity of your ignorance I set out to post you about certain things. Like other ignorant people, you resent it and seek to cover up your lack of knowledge by bluff. I am through. You can put six p's in Philippines and leave the l's out of Manila if you wish. I go. I bid you good night—n-i-g-h-t, night!"

"But how foolish!"

"N-i-g-h-t, night, Mrs. Bowser, and you needn't sit up for me. When the saloons close I can walk the streets or go to a hotel. H-o-t-e-l!"

Practice of Pharmacy

"Why was that young lady so indignant? Didn't we have what she wanted?"

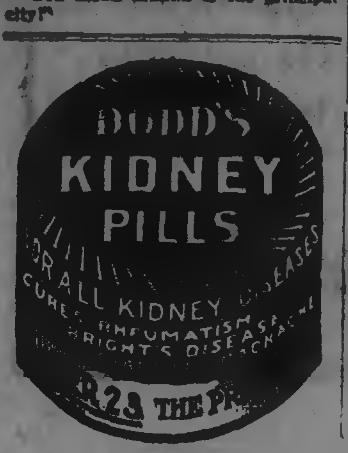
"No," said the drug clerk. "She asked for love powders and got mad when I told her there was no such thing."—Kansas City Journal.

A Mean Blunder.

Probably most public speakers have at one time or another suffered the annoyance of being misreported. A peculiarly unfortunate instance is recalled by G. W. E. Russell in one of his books. "A clerical uncle of mine," writes Mr. Russell, "took the pledge in his old age, and at a public meeting stated that his reason for so doing was that for thirty years he had been trying to cure drunkards by making them drink in moderation, but had never once succeeded. He was thus reported, 'The reverend gentleman stated that his reason for taking the pledge was that for thirty years he had been trying to drink in moderation, but had never once succeeded'!"

Canada's Foresters.

The Dominion Forestry Branch and the British Columbia Forest Branch each employ about thirty technically trained foresters. The Province of Quebec employs sixteen, and Ontario two. Nova Scotia has provided by law for the appointment of a provincial forester, but the appointment is still pending. New Brunswick needs a provincial forester, and has the matter under consideration.



SEEING BY WIRE.

Transmission of Images Effected By a London Inventor.

Once more we are assured, and this time from England, of the success of experiments to enable those using the telephone to see the person at the other end of the wire.

The inventor, Dr. M. A. Low, a London consulting engineer, has given a short description of the apparatus and method of the new wonder. The transmitter is a screen composed of cells of selenium, the electrical resistance of which varies according to the light that touches it. Over this screen there passes a synchronously running roller consisting of a number of pieces, which are alternating conductors and insulators.

The roller is driven by a motor of 3,000 revolutions a minute, and the resulting variations of light are transmitted along an ordinary conducting wire. The receiver is made up of a series of cells operated by the passage of polarized light through thin slats of steel and at this receiver the object, which is before the transmitter, is reproduced as a flickering image.

The process is described as a "kinematographic application of common electrical principles." The system has been tested through a resistance equivalent to a distance of four miles, but, in the opinion of Dr. Low, there is no reason why it should not be equally effective over far greater distances.

"The tones of the human voice, of which there are hundreds of gradations," says Dr. Low, "can be reproduced by wireless telephony. The gradations of light are far simpler than those of sound, and it should be possible to devise a wireless means of transmission. I will commit myself to the prophecy that in fifty years people will look back with wonder at the days when it was necessary to be at a person's side in order to see him. When this day arrives, consider how it will change the conditions of warfare. Imagine the altered methods of military operations when you can see what is happening miles away."

At present the image reproduced is of the size which the eye of a camera would take. It shows variations of light and shade somewhat in the degree of a half-tone block, but it does not reproduce color.

Dr. Low is well known in London as a consulting engineer, and has engaged in laboratory research for the Government. A number of inventions stand to his credit including the low high pressure motor and a high pressure petrol engine. The experiments in connection with light by wire have extended over five years.

In the transmitting screen selenium may be replaced by any diamagnetic material. The cost of the apparatus is considerable, as the conductive sections of the roller are made of platinum.

British Naval Air Service.

The British Admiralty announces a new scheme for the organization of a naval air service, manned by officers of the navy. Naval officers who have retired into civil life will be allowed to volunteer for limited periods. Civilians who have proved themselves to be suitably qualified may become officers or "air mechanics."

The uniform resembles that of the naval service, save that the emblem of the eagle replaces that of the anchor. Candidates for a commission must undergo preliminary instructions. They are then attached to an "air station" or a seaplan. The age limit for "air mechanics" is eighteen and thirty years. They must engage in three months' training and then engage in for four years' service. The members of the new service are paid higher than those in the submarine service.

Motor-Cycle as Chaff-Cutter.

A farmer at Bantnall, Salop, has fixed his motor-cycle on a stand against the wall of the farm buildings, and it drives a chaff-cutter and turnip-cutter at the same time. It does not cost much to work it. The turnip-cutter is on the same level as the cycle, and is connected by a kind of bicycle chain. The chaff-cutter is placed above the turnip-cutter on another floor, and connected by 2 inch belting. After is has been on some little time the engine gets hot, so a fan is made to revolve by the side to keep it cool. It is also used for churning milk. This saves a great deal of time for the workmen, because it can do the two jobs at once.

Earrings Worth $140,000.

The modern Aladdin's Cave is now in Bond Street, London, where a collection of pearls of almost perfect beauty is being exhibited. It has taken fifteen years to collect the pearls for one necklace alone. The pearls are of the particularly shaded tints called "rosy" pearls, and to purchase the necklace $170,000 is necessary.

One drop pearl of pear shape and a thin flexible diamond chain form a pendant priced at $70,000. It is suitable also for an earring, and thus $140,000 can now be paid for a pair of pearl drop earrings.

African Elephant Largest.

The Indian elephant is somewhat smaller than the African, and differs from it in other ways, as, for instance, in the fact that tusks are possessed only by the males, while both sexes are provided with them in Africa. In general, also, the tusks of African elephants are nearly twice as large as those of their Indian relatives, a single pair sometimes weighing as much as 250 or 300 pounds.

Torpedo Nets Useless.

The newer vessels of the British navy will not be equipped with torpedo nets, as it has been recognized that, except when the vessels are at anchor, the nets are of no protective value, the motion of the ship tending to force the lower edge of the net to the surface, leaving the hull exposed.

HARVEST HELP EXCURSIONS

$12.00 to Winnipeg August 11 and 18th

The Grand Trunk Railway System will run Harvest Help excursions via Chicago and Duluth on August 11 and 18, from all stations in Ontario, Kingston, Renfrew and west at low rate of $12.00 to Winnipeg, plus half cent. per mile from Winnipeg to destination. First excursion on August 11 applies to all points in Manitoba. Second excursion on August 18 to certain points in Saskatchewan and Alberta and all points in Manitoba. Returning, half cent per mile to Winnipeg, plus $18.00 from Winnipeg to destination in Eastern Canada.

The route via Chicago is an attractive one, many large cities and towns being passed en route, which breaks the monotony of the journey. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is the shortest and quickest route between Winnipeg, Saskatoon and Edmonton and traverses some of the best farming country in Manitoba and the most rapidly developing section of Western Canada.

Styles Do Change.

The tab they used to put on shirt fronts vanished years ago. Now shoe straps are gradually disappearing. Perhaps some day the little buttonhole they put on shirt sleeves just above the cuff will go on the way of other futilities.—Milwaukee Journal.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Control of Cancer.

Cancer respects neither race, creed nor social position.

It is the common enemy of all mankind, attacking rich and poor alike.

Its insidious onset occurs at the most useful period of life, and death is most common at the age when the care and guidance of children and the continuance of business responsibilities make the mother and father the most useful members of society.

The only cure for cancer is to remove every vestige of the disease.

The only sure way to do this is by a surgical operation.

If taken at the beginning the majority of cases of cancer are curable.

All cases will end in death if let alone.

Records of our best hospitals prove that the chances of cure are very high with early operation and that these chances decrease with every day of delay.

Early diagnosis is therefore all important.

Explaining the Trouble.

Cookery Points

Salads For Summer.

Salads should be an important feature of the summer menu. They tempt the appetite and if they are carefully made, are easily digested. They may be nourishing and dainty. They need not be heavy and rich. They can be made to utilize in a palatable way various leftovers. And, most important of all, they suggest a way to utilize almost every one of the wholesome fruits and vegetables of the summer.

A combination salad is a good sort to serve when there are odds and ends of vegetables in the refrigerator. A macedoine of vegetables—cold boiled peas, string beans, diced beets, diced tomatoes and other leftover vegetables mixed with French dressing and served on lettuce—is an economical salad, for it can be made of whatever vegetables the refrigerator holds.

Strawberry Mousse.

Take for one quart of rich cream one pound of fresh fruit mashed through a fine strainer. Mix with four tablespoonfuls of sugar, set the pan over the fire and stir until the sugar is dissolved thoroughly. Remove from the fire and add one tablespoonful of gelatin which has been dissolved in a little cold water. Stand on ice until thoroughly chilled. Mix two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar and one teaspoonful of vanilla extract with the cream and whip thoroughly, adding little by little the chilled strawberry juice sweetened to taste. Pour into a mold, cover very tightly and pack in ice and salt for three hours.

Cherry Salads.

Cherries add a delicious flavor to salads and combine with almost any fruit. To use both red and white cherries adds to the appearance. A delicious salad to be eaten with either French dressing or one made of sugar and fruit juices flavored with either sherry or maraschino is made by combining shredded pineapple, either fresh or canned cherries and sections of oranges. Serve on white lettuce hearts with cheese balls. If the sweet dressing is used no dessert will be needed, especially if chopped or ground nuts are added to the cream cheese of which the balls are made.

Fruit Butter.

The easiest way to make fruit butter is to cook fruit, press through colander, add sugar, pour in a large crock or jar and place in a hot oven. At first put on bottom of oven and when it commences to boil place a slide under. It requires no stirring and does not splatter stove or burn the hands and makes richer, better butter. When canning peaches use peelings for butter. Peelings from one bushel will make four quarts of butter.

Cantaloupe Split.

Chill cantaloupes, cut in halves lengthwise, scrape seeds away, fill hollow with vanilla ice cream. Place halves firmly together and lay on ice to freeze. When ready to serve run silver knife between the halves, which separates the fruit, also slicing the cream evenly over each half. Sprinkle with chopped nuts, preserved berries, minced pineapple or any fruit or tutti-frutti preserves.

Sauted Cucumbers.

Any one who is fond of fried oysters will like these. The largest green cucumbers must be used. As soon as they turn the least bit yellow they become tough and will not do. Pare and slice lengthwise, baring the slices an eighth of an inch thick. Dust with pepper and salt, then dip in beaten egg yolk diluted with a tablespoon of milk; cover with flour and fry until tender and brown.

CHAIR OF TOWN PLANNING.

London University Takes Long Step In Advance of Rivals.

By establishing a Chair of Town Planning the senate of London University has taken an extremely interesting step, which shows how rapidly the town-planning movement is coming into its own.

The Universities of Liverpool and Birmingham already possess town-planning professorships, but the scheme of London University is more complete than that of any other university.

London already has a department of architecture, with a Professor of Architecture, and a Chair of Municipal Engineering (filled by Mr. E. R. Matthews, who was engineer at Bridlington, and took a considerable part in town-planning schemes there). The university has also a Professor of Hygiene. These departments will co-operate with the new department of town-planning.

The fact that some 200 town-planning schemes are now under the consideration of the Local Government Board shows that the subject is going to be one of great importance in the future.

The new professor will be the head of the Department of Town Planning within the University School of Agriculture at University College, and will organize the work in town-planning in co-operation with the director and staff of that school and the Chadwick Professor of Municipal Engineering.

Besides giving lectures and holding evening classes in the first two terms, the occupant of the new chair will be required to supervise the town-planning work of regular students in the drawing office, and to provide teaching and supervision for special students. He must also give courses of public lectures from time to time, organize the summer school of town-planning, and attend meetings of the boards and faculties with which he is connected.

Preventing a Business Slump

IF during September, October and November manufacturers and merchants were to suspend their selling aggressiveness, as represented by their newspaper advertising, autumn business for them would be very, very dull. When selling energy is reduced, business slumps.

The slump in summer business which many firms experience is due mainly to a collapse of their own efforts to keep business up to its usual level. The public does not eat less in summer than in the autumn; it merely changes its diet.

The summer apparel worn by the average man and woman differs from autumn or winter apparel only in weight and kind, not in extent or variety.

The common needs of man remain fairly uniform the year round.

The way to keep business up in summer is to keep up the selling pressure as faithfully then as at other seasons, and to keep open the channel of communication between seller and buyer—the channel of newspaper advertising.

Our Advertising Manager will be pleased to talk it over with you.

You can obtain helpful advice on advertising free of cost and without obligation by consulting the Business Department of The Review.

His Cousins

They Came to See Him at College at the Wrong Time

By F. A. MITCHEL.

"What's the matter, Alec?"

"Matter enough! I've an exam coming off on Wednesday on a subject I know nothing about. I'm practicing for twirler for the varsity team and have left preparation for this exam for the last three days before it takes place, when I propose to bone day and night, braced by strong tea (and sandwiches during the night), till the bell rings for the ordeal, go right in before I spill any of it out of my cranium or it has a chance to evaporate and go through just as if I had been studying regularly."

"Why do you need to be so well prepared? Couldn't you scrape through by answering the minimum number of the questions?"

"I've got to take an oral exam, and you know very well what that means. I shall be called on to start in anywhere, haphazard, and reel it out by the yard. If I happen to strike a place I don't know anything about I'm flunked."

"Well, then, why don't you carry out your plan to stuff yourself?"

"Why don't I? Read that."

Alexander Pomeroy handed his chum, William Chandler, a letter from his mother stating that his two cousins, Belle and Lucy Winchester, the daughters of her favorite sister, had come on from Colorado, where they had always lived, to make her a visit. They had never seen a large university and were especially anxious to visit one. She had proposed to them to go to H. to inspect the college, and they were delighted with the plan. They would come down Monday morning and remain till Wednesday afternoon. Of course they would need some one to pilot them—in fact, show them attention during their stay in H. The writer thought that since the end of the term was at hand, when the breaking up was about to take place and not much doing, Alec would have plenty of time to devote to his cousins.

"Nothing doing at the end of the term, eh?" remarked Billy Chandler. "I like that. I suppose your mammy considers exams perfunctory ceremonies. Are your cousins pretty girls?"

"How do I know? I've never seen either of them."

"Oh, you haven't? In that case I don't know but that I can help you out. Not having the muscles for athletics as you have, I'm obliged to take an interest in my studies or be bored with too much time to spare. I have passed all my exams but one and am well prepared for that. I wouldn't mind showing a couple of pretty girls the sights, and since they have never seen you I don't see why I shouldn't impersonate you."

"Will you?" exclaimed Alec, thrusting out his fist and taking his chum's hand in a viselike grip.

"If you like."

"It's a go. I shall be free to do a three days' grind, get through my exam, and what time I don't need for that I can put into twirl practice."

Monday afternoon Mr. Chandler was at the station to meet the incoming train, and, seeing a couple of very pretty girls, aged respectively nineteen and seventeen, alight and look around for some one, he stepped up to them and asked:

"Are you my cousins?"

"Yes," replied the elder of the two. "But you don't correspond with the descriptions we've had of you. We supposed we were going to meet an Ajax."

"You can't tell about us athletes. We cover our muscles with loose togs, and it's very deceptive."

"I'm Belle and she's Lucy."

The scamp put up his lips to each girl in turn for a cousinly kiss, which was granted without compunction. Then he led the way to his auto standing outside the station. They all stepped in, the two girls on the rear seats, and Billy took them to a boarding house where no students resided, for that would have been dangerous to his identity. Furthermore, he was not known to the two old maids who kept it and unblushingly gave his name as Alexander Pomeroy. Leaving the young ladies there till after luncheon, he returned to his room, where he found a friend, Tom Oglethorpe, in the act of filling a pipe. It had occurred to Billy that one girl would be far more companionable than two, so he let Tom into the secret and invited him to turn a party of three into one of four. Tom was nothing loath and agreed to join the party for an inspection of cottage buildings in the afternoon, to be followed by an automobile ride.

Never was a pleasanter visit made by two young ladies or enjoyed more by two young men than on this occasion. The girls were shown the chapel, the art building, the gymnasium and this and that and the other "hall" donated by alumni, most of whom had finished the careers for which the college had prepared them and gone to their long homes. There was a class reception to attend here, a debating match there, and it seemed that something had been provided every day for the visitors' entertainment.

Now, it so happened that the real Alec Pomeroy, who was preparing himself for an examination in conic sections, got a brand new practical idea into his head. "Wouldn't it be a good scheme," he mused, "for me to apply these principles of the ellipse, the parabola and the hyperbole to my twirling? Perhaps an hour's practice with a ball would not only rest me, but would help me to catch on to the principles involved. I would understand better the reasons for my curves, and it would help me in my exams."

Throwing down his books, he betook himself to a shed erected for practice in twirling and began to throw the ball at a hypothetical batsman set up for the purpose. While doing so he heard a voice behind him:

"This is the place where our baseball pitchers learn to do the 'drop,' the 'incurve' and other stunts that go to make a baseball twirler."

Looking around, Mr. Pomeroy saw his representative, Billy Chandler, Tom Oglethorpe and his two cousins, the girls, staring at him with the eyes of sightseers. Billy continued his remarks with the intonation of a Roman guide expatiating on the arch of Titus:

"This gentleman now practicing is our principal twirler. Twirlers are selected for having their brains in their shoulders, football men for their brains being located in their legs. You see before you Mr. William Chandler, of whom great things are expected during the coming baseball season from the fact that he studies conic sections solely with the view to understanding the curves that will enable him to put a ball where he likes. Step this way, Mr. Chandler. I wish to present you to my cousins."

Alec Pomeroy ceased his practice and lumbered shamefacedly to the party. He was in trousers and sweater, and there was no hat on his head for him to doff to the ladies, only a forelock that hung down over his forehead. He had noted Billy's remarks about a pitcher's brains being in his shoulders and resolved to turn the tables on him.

"Your cousin Alec," he said to the girls, "is one of the first men in his class. His intellect is neither in his shoulders nor his legs; it is all in his head. Though he leads his class and is a pig in the matter of prizes, he is as modest as a little child. He is the soul of honor and the most popular man in college."

The speaker paused from his encomiums on himself for breath, and before he could recommence Billy led the girls away, remarking that flattery was odious to him.

"Why, Alec," said Belle, with whom he had paired from the first, "I didn't know you were such a prominent young man."

All pleasant as well as disagreeable affairs must have an end, and while Alec Pomeroy was scraping bottom on his examination his cousins were bidding Billy and Tom goodby. On their arrival at their aunt's they astonished her with the information they had received of her son's prominence in scholarship and popularity, which was adorned by his modesty. Mrs. Pomeroy was delighted, having supposed that her son had gone in for athletics rather than study.

This plot might have passed off without being exposed had not a mutual admiration sprung up between Billy Chandler and Belle Winchester. Billy was dying to see her again, but he could not go to visit her without giving away the deception that had been practiced on her. She wrote her cousin frequently, her letters being turned over to Billy and being answered by him in his chum's name, every letter of Billy's growing more and more affectionate. At last Belle wrote her "beloved cousin" that she was about to return to her home. This was too much for Billy, and he started at once to see her.

Billy's resolutions with regard to an immediate confession were excellent. The only trouble with them was the difficulty of his carrying them out. He expected to meet Mrs. Pomeroy, Belle and Lucy on arrival and had prepared some jocular remarks when Alec's mother should see a stranger instead of her son. But Mrs. Pomeroy and Lucy were out when he arrived. This upset his plans. However, he was so overjoyed at meeting with Belle that it didn't matter much—for the time being. He spent two hours with the young lady, during which, instead of beginning with a confession of his identity, he began with a confession of his feelings.

Suddenly the door of the library, in which the young persons sat, opened, and Mrs. Pomeroy discovered her niece in close proximity to a stranger.

"Aunty," said Belle, jumping up, with a blush on her face, "Alec's come."

Mrs. Pomeroy stood mute with astonishment.

"Where is he?" she asked coldly.

"Why, here, of course. What do you mean?"

"I owe you all an explanation," stammered Billy, with a face as red as a cock's comb, and, beginning at the wrong end of his story, he got inextricably confused. But a series of questions from the older lady finally elicited the information required, and a smile settled on the face of Mrs. Pomeroy and Lucy. As for Belle, she didn't know whether to smile or to cry or to hide her blushing face in a lounge pillow.

Mrs. Pomeroy helped matters by thanking Billy for correcting her mistake in sending her cousins to Alec on the eve of an important examination after which the meeting resolved itself into a reception of Billy's credentials in the matter of an application for the hand of Belle Winchester. They appeared to be satisfactory, and the young lady returned to her home engaged. The day after the next college commencement, at which Billy took honors, he went to Colorado to claim his bride.

The Husky's Occupation Going.

A journey very much out of the ordinary is reported from Edmonton, from which point five men succeeded in making an 800-mile automobile trip to Peace River Crossing on or near Lesser Slave Lake, a district usually regarded as sub-arctic, and certainly virgin country so far as automobile travel is concerned. A photograph from Edmonton shows the five men fishing in good old Hudson Bay style through the ice of Lesser Slave Lake, with the automobile in the near distance. Coureurs du bois usually engage in the latter operation to get fish for themselves and their dogs, but the automobile never starves—as long as the fuel holds out. The journey probably was not difficult, for the trail undoubtedly had been broken. Still it is rather startling to think of an automobile running up almost into the wood buffalo and musk-ox country, but not more indicative of modern progress than the rumor that reaches us, of regulations to be laid down by the Government relative to the crossing of the great Mississippi migratory bird belt by aeroplanes.—Forest and Stream.

He Talked at the Clock.

During Sir James Whitney's speech at Toronto on the occasion of his reappearance on the platform after his serious illness the Ontario Premier found that somebody by way of compliment had stolen the clock.

"I find one disappointment waiting me here," he said. "But it is only a minor one. Somebody has removed the clock. When I first spoke in Massey Hall I was told to speak at the clock, because of the acoustic properties of this hall. There was perhaps a suggestion in those words that I should regulate my speech by the clock, but I never did. I always spoke directly at the clock in order that the people might understand what I was saying, whether they were satisfied with it or not."

For the Children

Vinson W. McLean Has a New Playmate.

© by American Press Association.

Vinson Walsh McLean, whose features are seen in this picture, the millionaire baby, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward B. McLean of Washington and Newport, has recently acquired a new playmate. This person is the son of Dr. Shirley Carter of Warrenton, Va., who is to be the guest of the McLeans for an indefinite period. Both are healthy, happy five-year-olds; but, while the millionaire baby is attended by a nursery governess, two nurses each with a diploma from a training school, a nurse maid or two and two able-bodied detectives, the little Virginian has been taught to stand on his own sturdy feet and to ride the blue ribbon animals of the Carter stable with no other bodyguard than one of his father's jockeys.

The boys will spend the summer at Black Point farm, near Newport. Master McLean, if he inherits all he may be expected to inherit, will have about $150,000,000 and be the richest boy in America. His grandfather, the late Thomas F. Walsh of Colorado, left the youngster about $100,000,000. From his paternal grandfather, John R. McLean, he will inherit at least half as much.

Throwing the Brick.

Draw two lines fifteen feet apart, then divide the boys into two companies, allowing each player a piece of brick or square wood that can be easily thrown. Each player on one side throws his brick, trying to come as near as possible to the line on the other side. The one farthest from the line sets up his brick on the line and the one nearest standing on the opposite side pitches at it. If he fails to knock it over he sets up his brick and the other boy pitches at it. If he succeeds he picks it up, goes back to the line, pitches it again, near the other brick, hops over it and kicks his brick near that of his companion. Then he must pick up his brick and carry it successively on his head, on each shoulder, on his back, on his breast (walking), in the bend of his knee (hopping), in between his legs (shuffling), each time starting at the line and proceeding to the other brick and knocking it over. Finally he marks a square inclosing the brick and about eighteen inches square, and if he can hop over this, he is declared a winner. If he fails in any one of the "stunts" he must wait his turn, but can then begin at the point where he failed.

A Homemade Toy.

Did you ever see boys walk on stilts? It looks like dangerous sport, but it is not after you have a little practice. In fact, you can take rapid strides with them, as do the shepherds in the desert of Landes, in the south of France. They can run, jump, hop and dance on them with ease and security. When they stand on the stilts they can watch their flock, their feet being protected from the water during the winter and the hot sands in summer. In addition to the stilts, they use a long staff, which they carry in their hands. This forms the third leg when they require rest.

To make stilts procure two poles about six or seven feet long and nail on a strap of leather about one-third from the bottom of each. Into these the feet are placed, the poles being kept in a proper position by the hands and moved forward by the action of the legs. Some American boys nail on wooden supports for the feet to rest upon instead of the leather straps.

Growing Things.

Oh, I am a child of the country, and I love not the cities grim!
My heart is akin to the wild things and the woodlands vast and dim,
Where the winds and the brook make music and, faint from his cool retreat,
Comes the voice of the thrush at even in a madrigal wild and sweet.

Oh, I am a child of the country, and the orchard knows my tread
When the boughs shine white with blossoms and the buds lie pink and red!
And hand in hand in the moonlight go my soul's beloved and I,
And we need no words to question, no words to make reply.

Oh, I am a child of the country, and I hail the fields at morn,
Where the air comes fresh and fragrant and the joy of the day is born,
Loud carols the cheerful robin to the linnet over the way,
And the growing things and the birds and I welcome the dawn of day.

THE LADY STRATEGIST.

A Case In Which the Longest Way Around Was the Shortest Way Home.

"HERE," she said, rushing back to the ticket window, "this dollar you gave me in change is counterfeit."

"Pardon me, but I didn't give you a dollar in change."

"Yes, you did. I bought a ticket here not two minutes ago, and you changed a five dollar bill for me. It was all the money I had, so I couldn't have got this bad dollar anywhere else."

"You should have examined your change when it was handed to you. I can't make any correction now."

"I shan't budge from this window till you give me a good dollar for the bad one you tried to foist upon me."

"Let me see it."

"There."

"Why, this is a perfectly good bill. Here is another. I'm not afraid of it."

"No. I won't take this bill. It's torn. Give me a new one."

"I'm sorry, but if you don't want that bill I'll have to give you your change in nickels."

"Thank you," she said, after counting the pieces of coin. "I wanted a dollar's worth of nickels, but I knew you wouldn't have that many if I asked for them in the first place."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Can You Match Her?

"It was Charlie Spink whom Mabel said she'd marry if he went to war, wasn't it?"

"Yes."

"Did he agree?"

"Oh, yes. He said he'd prove he was a hero at any cost."

"Was Mabel surprised?"

"Very much so. She was sorry too."

"What did she do?"

"She wrote Charlie a nice note saying that she didn't want him to go to war, and she regretted she had asked him to make such a sacrifice, because, anyway, she had just made up her mind to marry Tommy Green."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Puzzling Out Grandpa's Age.

Little Marie was sitting on her grandfather's knee one day, and, after looking at him intently for a time, she said:

"Grandpa, were you in the ark?"

"Certainly not, my dear," answered the astonished old gentleman.

"Then why weren't you drowned?"—London Standard.

An Efficiency Test.

"The head of our concern decided to have everybody undergo an efficiency examination and apportion the jobs accordingly."

"How did it turn out?"

"The office boy won the manager's job, and the manager couldn't pass at all."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Rival Ambitions.

"What are you going to do when you grow up?"

"I haven't made up my mind," replied the small boy. "I'd like to be a good bridge whist player like mother, and, then, again, I'd like to be a champion tango dancer like father."—Washington Star.

Nothing but Feathers.

"Have you seen 'Fine Feathers'?"

"What do you mean?"

"It's a play, a drama that you see at the theater."

"I've been seeing fine feathers at the theaters for years. I generally get behind one."—Kansas City Journal.

What Good Roads Mean

An increase in the value of farm land ranging from $5 to $25 per acre.

A more intensive agriculture, owing to the fact that a much greater variety of crops can be profitably marketed.

Hence an improvement in soil fertility due to better farming methods.

The advantage to the farmer of being able to sell at the most convenient time, instead of waiting for good weather conditions.

The marketing of perishable goods in fresher condition.

Bigger loads and fewer trips to town.

Less wear and tear on harness and waggons.

Lower prices for the city consumer because produce can be delivered at less cost for haulage.

More traffic for the railways, since roads act as feeders of the main lines of travel.

Free delivery of parcels and mail to farmers' homes.

Better school attendance.

The promotion of social intercourse among the dwellers of rural districts.

Country homes in summer for city people and increased automobile tourist traffic, thus creating more local demand for eggs, dairy and garden produce.

Miss Tiverton's Tea Basket

A Present That Brought Quick Results

By ALICIA SPRAGUE

Miss Tiverton always poured tea at precisely 3 o'clock in the afternoon for a select circle of feminine friends.

They drank tea at that early hour so that those who were married might get home in time to prepare 6 o'clock dinners for their husbands and that those who were single might be safely housed before the early darkness of the winter evenings.

Miss Tiverton sometimes wished that they might stay later, for it was always a long, lonely stretch between their going and bedtime.

Sometimes Lavinia Greer stayed with her, and on those occasions Lavinia's brother Richard would call at 9. And these were the social oases in Miss Tiverton's desert of dreary evenings.

She always made more tea for Richard and brought out her little sponge cakes. Richard liked the little cakes, and he liked Miss Tiverton's dainty ways, her delicate pink and white prettiness and her pale rose colored house gowns.

Lavinia thought Miss Tiverton very foolish to wear muslin all winter. "Think of the washing!" she said as she and Richard walked home one evening. "And Letitia Tiverton is as poor as Job's turkey."

"She surrounds herself," said Richard musingly, "with an atmosphere of beauty."

Lavinia sniffed. She hated to have her brother say nice things about Letitia Tiverton. Lavinia had kept her brother's house for many years, and it had always been her great duty to nip sentimental affairs in the bud.

Therefore it was many weeks after that ominous remark of Richard's before she again spent an evening with Letitia. She took her work over in the mornings or went to the little tea drinkings, but she did not allow her brother to darken the doors of the little gray cottage.

One day Richard spoke of it mildly. "We haven't been to Miss Tiverton's for a long time," he said—"not, I think, for four weeks tomorrow."

Lavinia gave him a sharp glance. "How did you happen to remember the date?" she asked acidly.

Richard looked at her quizzically over his glasses. "I noted the date in my diary," he said. "I always write down the events of the day, Lavinia." He did not tell her that he had added after the formal statement, "Brought Lavinia home from Miss T.'s," the further comment, "Miss T. looked like a rose in her pink gown."

A week later he urged Lavinia to call. "She—I think something is the matter," he said.

Lavinia shrugged her shoulders. "I have been there in the daytime," she said. "I don't see what more she can expect."

Richard thought for a moment. "She has told us that her evenings are lonely," he reminded his sister.

"Humph!" said Lavinia. "I don't know that we are called on to put ourselves out to go there these freezing cold nights."

Richard returned to his book, but after a reasonably judicious interval he looked up to say, "I saw a very pretty tea basket in a shop this morning, Lavinia, padded inside to keep the tea warm"—

"Who wants a thing like that?" Lavinia questioned scornfully. "I always make coffee, Richard."

Richard said nothing more. He loved tea, but Lavinia preferred coffee, and there you were. Yet the next morning he sauntered to the flaming Japanese bazaar, where were displayed native wares to tempt the tourists who were making the old fashioned southern village a halfway stopping place on their way to the tropics.

The tea basket was a quaint affair of oriental weaving, with a gay pink satin lining and a green and pink cord and tassel about the handle. The pink made Richard think of Miss Tiverton. With a defiant look, he went in and bought the basket and ordered it sent to her.

His heart failed him, however, when the dark skinned salesman asked him for a card to put with the gift.

"Just send it without," he said hastily. Visions of Miss Lavinia's wrath should she know of his purchase came to him oppressively.

The mysterious basket was to little Letitia Tiverton a source of infinite delightful speculation. She displayed it to her afternoon circle, the rose colored lining, the pink cord and tassel, the fine basketry.

"And I can't imagine who sent me such a beautiful thing," she ended radiantly when all had seen it.

At the first glance Lavinia Greer's eyes had hardened. Of all those women she only suspected where that basket had come from. Richard had sent it. This looked seriously like the beginning of a romance that would be most inconvenient to Miss Lavinia.

On the way home she thought over a plan. It was simple. At dinner she told Richard, "Letitia Tiverton was too silly about a basket that some one sent to her."

Richard started, and his face flushed. He realized that Lavinia had put two and two together and had guessed that it was he who had sent the tea basket to Miss Tiverton.

"I wish you had seen her," Lavinia pursued. "I wish you had heard her giggle and boast that you sent it."

Richard turned questioning eyes upon her. "But she did not know that I had sent it," he said. "There was no card, Lavinia."

Lavinia went on hurriedly. "Well, then, she guessed, for she bragged of it. Richard—it—it—it was disgusting." Miss Lavinia's face was a dull red. She did not like what she was doing now that she was doing it. But she was desperate.

"I can't imagine"—Richard's tone was incisive—"I can't imagine, Lavinia, a woman of Miss Tiverton's delicacy doing a thing like that."

Lavinia tossed her head. "You don't know much about women, Richard," she retorted.

Richard walked abroad that night consumed by angry doubts. Surely Lavinia would not lie. Surely Miss Tiverton would not brag. His gold headed cane tapped the pavement irresolutely. Then suddenly he strode down the street, irresolute no longer.

Miss Letitia, alone and a little wistful in her small gray cottage, heard the tap of the cane as she had heard it every night when Richard went forth for his evening walk.

Behind her curtains she had watched him regularly and had admired the straightness of him, the briskness of his walk, the brown waves of hair which in defiance of modern fashion he wore so long that it almost touched his coat collar.

It had never dawned on Miss Tiverton that such a great being as Lavinia's brother could look upon her and find her lovely. In her humility she had not dreamed that the basket was an offering from such a source.

She had thought the women of her circle might have clubbed together to bestow on her this gift of friendship, and her effusiveness at the afternoon gathering had been due to her gratitude.

The tap of the gold beaded cane sounded right in front of her gate, stopped and began again on the stone walk that led to the front door.

Then the bell rang. Miss Tiverton answered it. Richard stepped over her threshold—for the first time without his sister Lavinia.

"I came," he said when he was seated, "to ask a question, a delicate question, Miss Tiverton. Who sent you your tea basket?"

Miss Letitia's clear eyes met his frankly. "Oh, did Lavinia tell you that one was sent me?" she asked. "It's such a beauty!" And she brought it to him, displaying the rose lining and the tassels.

Richard drew a long breath of relief. The doubts that Lavinia had planted fled. There was nothing of deceit in that childlike soul, in that flower-like face.

"Miss Letitia," he said, with his hand on the basket, "haven't you guessed who sent it?"

Her puzzled glance met his. "No," she murmured.

"I—I sent it," he confessed, "because it reminded me of you—the rose color and the pink—like your pretty gown, your pretty self, a rose of a woman."

Miss Letitia stood half poised for flight. "Oh!" she said breathlessly, and her eyes were like stars. "Oh, Mr. Greer!"

Richard grew bolder. "I sent it because I love you, Letitia. There is no happiness that could exceed that of winning you for my wife."

It came upon little Letitia almost too suddenly, that vision of happiness, and she swayed toward him, looking just then more like a lily than a rose, and the tea basket dropped from her nerveless hand.

Richard caught it deftly as he drew her to him. "You will pour tea for me, won't you," he demanded, trying to bring the color back to her cheeks, "for the rest of my days, Letitia? Lavinia gives me coffee—but, then, oh, hang Lavinia! Will you marry me, sweetheart?"

And Miss Letitia, after a startled "Oh, Richard!" buried her face against his coat and said "Yes."

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Poisonous Stings.

Stings and bites of insects are extremely dangerous at all times and especially when the system is not in a condition to resist the poison injected.

In many insects the nature of the poison has not been ascertained, while in most of them it is of an acid, irritant nature; in others it may contain a powerful cardiac sedative and depressant, and in still others organisms in pure or mixed cultures may be introduced with the sting or bite. Apart from the natural poison used by insects it should not be forgotten that flies and other insects that live on carrion may easily carry contagion and inoculate the persons whom they bite or sting.

In the case of ordinary bites and stings the chemical antidote is an alkaline solution, such as a strong solution of bicarbonate of soda or potash, which counteracts the acid of the sting. Suction at the wound in all these varieties of stings and bites will draw out some of the poison, and until some antitoxin treatment can be found which will prove antidote to the bacterial poison introduced little can be done beyond a stimulating and supporting treatment with attention to symptoms.

Leaving It to the Pitcher.

Not in ten years has Christy Mathewson been taken out of the box by McGraw unless possibly under some condition where strategy demanded a pinch hitter or a man batting from the other side of the plate or a speedy base runner. This may surprise 1,000,000 or more fans. Box scores may be produced to dispute it. But that is a case where the box scores are wrong. When Matty comes out he takes himself out. He knows when he is not right and is not ashamed to admit it, and McGraw leaves it to him. Many a time he has been known gently to lay the ball on the ground when he felt he could not be effective and facetiously call to some comrade on the bench:

"Come out here and finish this job. It's too large for me." And then, as a parting shot to the grinning batsman at the plate, "I'll be right here tomorrow, and the first time you come up you'll breeze."

And generally he makes good on his forecast.—Popular Magazine.

A Land of Young People.

Interesting statistics from Ottawa show that the largest proportions of young men and women are found in the western provinces. Thus, while the proportion per 1,000 of the population between the ages of 20-44 for all Canada is 385, the figures for British Columbia are 533, for Alberta 458, for Saskatchewan 451, and for Manitoba 417. The proportion decreases eastward until in Prince Edward Island it is 311. That Canada is pre-eminently a country of young people is evidenced by the fact that 813 persons in every 1,000 of known age are under 45.

The Modern Husband.

Her Father—You assume a grave responsibility when you marry my daughter, sir. Remember she was brought up in the lap of luxury.

Nervy Suitor—Oh, she's pretty well used to my lap now.—Boston Transcript.

An Impossible Mistress.

"There is too much work to do here, mum. I'm used to having the mistress do something. You insist upon being waited on just as if you had once been a servant yourself."—Philadelphia Record.

JOHNNY RIGG.

Johnny Rigg, the ranger,
He walked in Wood-o'-Lea
And happened on a stranger.
A nut brown maid was she.
His heart it did rejoice of her,
As you may recognize.
The wind was in the voice of her;
The stars were in her eyes.

Johnny Rigg, the ranger,
He followed far away.
He didn't know the danger
That lurks at time o' May.
She drew him with the smiles of her;
She left him with a laugh,
Bewildered with the wiles of her
And moon struck as a calf.

Johnny Rigg, the ranger,
The muckle oaf was he.
He followed of a stranger;
She led him bonnily.
The fox he marked the track of him
And watched him through the segs.
The tinkers ran a-back of him
And stole his pheasant eggs.

Now, all you jolly rangers,
When nesting time is on
Don't go to follow strangers,
Nut brown nor white as swan.
Beware of 'em, be wise of 'em,
For sooth it is that's said:
When stars get in the eyes of 'em
The moon gets in your head.
—Punch.

Stumped.

"After all," said the man who had been trying to break into what is sometimes known as our best circles—"after all, you know, society is a hollow thing."

"Are you sure of that?" asked his acquaintances.

"Absolutely. It is as hollow as a sewer pipe!"

"How does it comes, then, that you are unable to crawl into it?"

He never answered. He just went away sadly.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Away With the Men!

"So you think the world would go on very successfully if there were no men?"

"I can't see why it shouldn't. Women have shown that they are capable of doing everything the men have pretended that they only were able to do. By the way, do you know of any man I could get to trim that big elm tree in the front yard? It seems to me some of the upper limbs ought to be cut off."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Employers' Liability.

Employee—Sir, I would respectfully ask you for an increase of salary; I have got married lately.

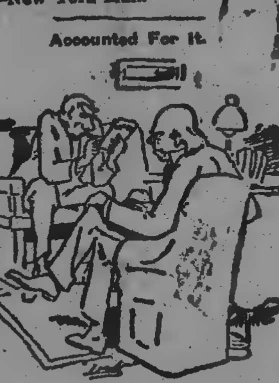
Manager of Works—Very sorry, Horneyhand, I can be of no assistance to you. The company is not responsible for any accidents that happen to its employees when off duty.—London Tit-Bits.

On Other Nights.

Mr. Goodthing—How does your sister like the engagement ring I gave her, Bobby?

Her Young Brother—Well, it's a little too small. She has an awful hard time getting it off when the other fellows call.—New York Mail.

Accounted For It.



"Ah, yes," said Senator Smugg, "I got my start in life by clerking in a humble grocery store at a salary of $3 per week, and I managed to save money on that."

"But," said the astute reporter, "that, of course, was before cash registers were invented."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Well Informed.

"She knows all the tightwads in the community."

"That so? I suppose she has passed around a few subscription lists."

"No; but her husband passes the plate in church every Sunday."—Detroit Free Press.

At the Concert.

"Why did so many people yawn all at once just now?"

"Didn't you notice that the critic over there in the front row yawned first? Everybody else wants to show that he, too, is a musical sharp."—New York Post.

Exaggerated Optimism.

"What is your idea of an optimist?"

"An optimist," replied Mr. Growcher, "is a man who thinks he has the makings of an automobile because he has managed to get hold of a gallon of gasoline and a spark plug."—Washington Star.

True to Friends.

Bill—He says cigars are his best friends.

Jill—Well, he's true to them.

"How so."

"He never gives any of his friends away."—Yonkers Statesman.

Bibulous.

"Those fakers can't make spirits appear."

"Maybe not, but you ought to see how they can make spirits disappear!"—Baltimore American.

Hemmed In.

"Why does he look the picture of misery?"

"He says he's the victim of a frame-up."—Judge.

My Lady's Nicotine.

The cigarette habit among fashionable women in London is responsible for a curious fashion in smoking suits. One that resembles a fancy pierrot suit of black charmeuse is covered with a startling design of emerald green leaves, relieved with flashes of yellow and white. The trousers are loose and baggy, the neck, slightly decollete, has a large black satin collar and green ruffle. Another suggests a Chinese vase with its background of blue covered with a hawthorn design.

Handkerchiefs also have succumbed to the craze for Futurism. The latest have a wide border of some startling color, with a contrasting flower in the centre, whose leaves should be black, or blue, or purple, or any color, in fact, that is not usually found in a leaf. On others are embroidered chickens, or beetles, and cocks, or storks, or elephants, and the like, in natural colors. Vegetarians are especially catered to in the handkerchief which shows a carrot, a head of asparagus, a strawberry, and other fruits and vegetables in one corner.

Blue Coats for Soldiers.

To increase the comfort of British soldiers when "walking out" or visiting friends away from barracks, a new blue patrol jacket is to be introduced into the army. It will be in addition to the soldier's present kit.

At present soldiers leaving barracks must wear their tunics, unless they are cycling, and many men forego their outings rather than put on the tight-fitting red coats. It is thought the new "walking-out" jacket may help recruiting on furlough, as soldiers will be less likely to discard their uniforms for civilian dress.

Returned After Thirty-Two Years.

Thirty-two years ago a collection of lectures on painting by Royal Academicians was borrowed from Newcastle Public Library. It was returned a few days ago in fair condition. The person who sent it back is unknown, and no note of apology or explanation of its much overdue return accompanied it. Had the borrower paid the statutory fine of 2 cents a week for every week over due, he would have had to put down nearly $35.

A Busy Coroner.

The London Lancet tells of a coroner who has held 15,000 inquests in thirty years. His circuit included eighty townships, and his activity in this period entailed over 180,000 miles traveling by road, car and rail.

Britain's Havanas.

Cuba's best customer for cigars is Great Britain, which takes 60,000,000 every year.

Butter Found in Swamp.

A firkin of butter, about two feet high and containing about 28 pounds of butter was dug up recently in a swamp at Ballinahere. Although it must have been buried generations ago, it is in a fair state of preservation. The firkin appears to have been scooped out of a tree trunk and on its side are a couple of handles with holes through them—probably for the purpose of holding cords, so that the firkin could be carried on the back.

NORDHEIMER

"QUALITY-TONE"

PIANO

RENOWNED FOR DURABILITY

SIX distinct reasons why the Nordheimer is recognized as the Standard Piano of Canada:—

¶ Because the tone has that pure, delightful singing quality throughout the entire register.

¶ Because its wonderful resourcefulness satisfies the demands of the most exacting pianist.

¶ Because it gives the teacher the greatest opportunity for properly developing the pupil.

¶ Because the touch is responsive, and will not tire the beginner.

CHURCHILL'S ANNOUNCEMENT, NO FIGHTING

OTHER THAN THAT OFFICIALLY MADE PUBLIC--GERMANS ENTER LIEGE

VIOLENT FIGHTING IN THE STREETS OF LIEGE TWO SPIES ARRESTED GERMANS CAUGHT IN NET

Admiralty Issues Statement in Regard to Loss of the Cruiser Amphion

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 7. — Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, announced to-day in the House of Commons, that there had been no fighting and no losses of any kind other than had been officially made public.

This statement ensued on reports of a naval battle between German and British ships, received from several sources, but the Admiralty refused information.

Complete silence reigns as to military movements in both Germany and France.

Paris, Aug. 7.—Official reports received here say the German troops have entered the Belgian city of Liege, but have not been able to take the forts. Fighting of the most violent character took place in the streets. The Belgian troops have captured 27 German cannon.

Tokio, Aug. 7.—An authentic report received here states that a German squadron has been bottled up at Tsing Tau by the British.

Tokio, Aug. 7.—Reserve officers have been notified to hold themselves in readiness for active service. A flying squadron of seven cruisers has been organized and a battle ship squadron has been increased to eight vessels.

Quebec, Aug. 7.—Two men supposed to be German spies, were arrested to-day at the Island of Orleans, recently established as a naval station.

London, Aug. 7.—The Admiralty has issued the following: "In the course of reconnoitering, after the German mine layer Koeigen Luise was sunk yesterday morning, the cruiser Amphion struck a mine and foundered. The forepart of the British ship was shattered by the explosion and practically all the loss to the crew ensued from this cause.

All not killed by the explosion were taken off by boats of a destroyer before the Amphion went down."

Twenty German prisoners of war who were confined in the forepart of the ship were killed. A line of mines was propably laid by the Koeigen Luise before she was sunk.

LA PATRIE STANDS FOR EMPIRE

The Review received the following despatch from La Patrie this afternoon and takes pleasure in giving it all the prominence possible. We were well aware that great enthusiasm was stirring the French-Canadians, as it has stirred English Canadians. What we pointed out, was our inability to find editorial pronouncement, in leading French newspapers, of Canada's duty, even though we read all the time in big, black type in the news columns of the cheering crowds in Montreal and other places. We felt the French Canadians manifested as eager a desire to defend this country and the Empire as any English speaking Canadian, but marvelled at the position taken editorially by French papers. Since our article appeared, at least three French papers have expressed themselves in unequivocal terms, and, we have quoted in to-day's editorial, a paragraph from La Patrie, and also one from La Presse. We think, in view of the outbursts of loyal sentiment from French Canadians that their newspapers could not have remained silent even had they wished. As we have stated, we are not aware of the rules governing French Canadian newspapers' editorial columns. We are pleased to know La Patrie's policy as to Defence. We note La Presse of Aug. 6 says: "Our loyalty is too vital and too sincere to have need of warming by vain declamations." Possibly La Presse did not consider it necessary to speak on Canada's duty to the Empire until it did; but, we trust there is no ill-feeling on this matter, for we are assured, that French and English in Canada will stand shoulder to shoulder in this great test of the Empire's effort to maintain the freedom of Europe's millions.

Montreal, Que., Aug. 7.

Review,
Peterboro,

"I rely on your loyalty to publish the following in your columns. With reference to your editorial of the 4th inst., under the heading 'French Canadian newspapers should speak,' in which you namingly refer to La Patrie. I am surprised at your utter ignorance of what has always been this paper's attitude on the momentous question of Empire defence. More than most English papers of this country, La Patrie endeavored to secure the proper Canadian help to Great Britain, because it never took a partisan view of the question. We fought in favor of the Liberals', as well as the Conservatives' naval policy. Both plans had been approved by the Admiralty. At all times, we have appealed to the co-operation of all races in Canada, and the full co-operation of Canada with the rest of the Empire, as concerns the National Defence and suffered unflinchingly for our outspoken attitude, savage attacks on the part of the Nationalists. In so doing, we had no doubt we were meeting the views of an overwhelming majority of the French Canadians. If at this solemn hour for Canada and the Empire, you would see the immense crowds of French Canadians waiting in front of La Patrie's building for the war news, and enthusiastically cheering each favorable bulletin, you would certainly not think of asking the question I see in your editorial, 'Is French Canada to hold aloof from the struggle ?' No just observer will doubt that there is at this hour but one sentiment among our people, a full realization of our common duty and a resolute determination to perform it. Therefore, this is an ill chosen time to recall old prejudices real or imaginary.

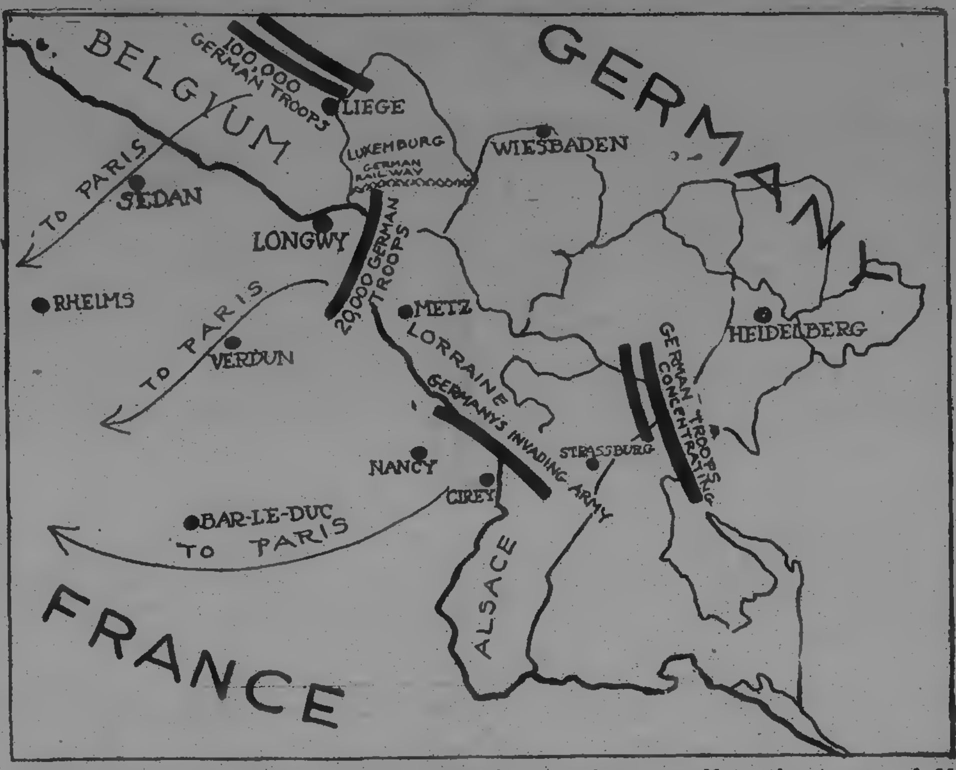
MILITARY MAP OF THE WAR IN WESTERN EUROPE



Showing where the German army is advancing into France. Note the towns of Metz and Sedan. They are the two most famous places in the Franco-Prussian war of 1870, because at Sedan Emperor Napoleon was captured after a disastrous French defeat, and at Metz Marshall Bazaine's army of 130,000 surrendered, a terrible blow to the French.

OTTAWA SAYS WAR OFFICE HAS ACCEPTED CANUCK AID

Orders in Council Are Passed Providing For Censorship, Calling Out Militia as Needed and Providing For Expeditionary Force—Munitions of War Cannot be Exported From Canada.

OTTAWA, Aug. 7.—The followin, official statement was issued last night:

"On his return to Ottawa on Saturday, Aug. 1, the Prime Minister sent a cable message to the Imperial Government, informing them that Canada was prepared to send an expeditionary force for service abroad if required. Last evening a reply was received accepting this offer and the force will be organized at once by voluntary enlistment.

"Several important orders-in-council were passed yesterday. An order-in-council was passed providing for an effective censorship staff at Ottawa and Halifax and the several cable stations on the Atlantic and on the Pacific.

"Another order was passed calling out for active service such portions of the militia as may from time to time be desired by the governor-in-council.

"A further order was passed providing for raising and organizing a force for service abroad and for making and perfecting all necessary arrangements to call them to enlist and be enrolled in His Majesty's service for such period and under such conditions as may be arranged. The enlistment and enrolment will be entirely voluntary. It is understood that the chief difficulty will arise through the enormous number of applications to serve abroad.

"Another order-in-council passed yesterday prohibits the exportation from Canada during the war of arms, munitions, warlike equipment and various other articles which will probably be required for defensive purposes or which might be useful to the enemy."

"There appears to be an impression that, owing to the war, there may be a scarcity of food and fuel supplies in Canada. There is also a fear that prices may be advanced to an unreasonable extent.

"The Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor, and the Hon. J. D. Reid acting Minister of Trade and Commerce, met yesterday and appointed officials of each Department to investigate the rumors of enhanced prices in order that the Government may take any action necessary to prevent an undue advantage of this kind being taken. As to supplies of food and fuel, the Ministers say there need be no cause for alarm, in respect to either, as there are ample supplies of these commodities available for use in Canada.

"It is hoped that the press of Canada will remember that the secrecy of military and naval preparations and organization is essential. It is also hoped that care will be exercised to refrain from publishing unfounded and disturbing rumors which would excite unnecessary alarm and apprehension."

His Royal Highness was present at yesterday afternoon's Cabinet meeting, which lasted from four o'clock to nearly seven o'clock.

The board of censors referred to above will include Major F. C. Hamilton, Major E. Chambers, gentleman usher of the Black Rod, and Mr. Fred. Cook, all experienced newspaper men.

The first army division of 20,000 men will sail in about two weeks. Whether they go with the Imperial expeditionary force to Belgium or not, they are likely to be held in Britain for a fortnight's training.

The order to enlist men for the contingent was telegraphed at once to the commanding officer of each divisional area. He in turn will notify the commander of each military unit. This legalizes the recruiting whether it had already begun or not. The commanders of the units will send their lists of recruits direct to headquarters at Ottawa, where the selections will be made of officers, non-commissioned officers and men who will form the army division that is to be formed. The recruiting will take only a couple of days. The rolls are expected to be all received at headquarters by the middle of next week. An army division ordinarily includes three brigades of artillery of three batteries each, but it is not known yet whether the artillery of the army division will be of this strength.

GIVE AID TOWARD HOSPITAL SHIP

57th Chapter Daughters of the Empire Would Help

Although no action has been taken as yet by the members of the I.O.D.E. in this city towards helping the Ontario Headquarters raise the money needed to equip the hospital boat, the Daughters of the Empire intend sending to the war, something will most likely be done as all the other cities are lending aid. It has also been suggested that the Local Council of Women lend a hand and help to raise the funds and several of the members when spoken to this morning, while stating that a meeting had not been called to discuss the matter, said that they would willingly do their share if called upon as they believed the cause was a grand one and that the women of Canada should do their share in lending aid to protect the Empire from the enemy and to assist in the care fo the wounded. Mrs. E. A. Gooderham, Toronto has charge of the campaign and tag days will be conducted in most of the large cities.

FRENCH ARMY ENTERS BELGIUM AND IS NOW WELL INTO THE COUNTRY

Prince of Wales to See Active Service With Grenadier Guards

London, Aug. 7. — Another despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company from Brussels says the French army has now entered Belgium and has advanced well into the country.

London, Aug. 7.—The Admiralty announces that British coastwise shipping on the east coast is now safe because the British fleet has engaged the Germans on the high seas, and the German fleet is now being chased toward the coast of Holland.

London, Aug. 7.—The Prince of Wales has been given a commission in the Grenadier Guards and will go into active service, probably in England.

London, Aug. 7.—The Standard says it has heard from a reliable source that the German Crown Prince has been seriously injured by an unidentified assailant, who after inflicting grave wounds made his escape.

German authorities in their efforts to trace the assassin, inflicted great indignities upon several Englishmen, according to the same report.

London, Aug. 7. — Lloyd George informed the Commons that the Government was considering the question of taking over the harvest throughout the British Isles. The Chancellor declared the banking business was normal everywhere, and people were paying in money quite freely. German banks in London have been obliged to close until the British Government grants their applications for licenses.

Brussels, Aug. 7.—Le Peuple says the bombardment of Liege caused six or seven fires in the city up to seven o'clock last evening. The hottest fighting occurred yesterday afternoon. German officers then came to the city with a white flag, demanding the surrender of the place. They received a negative reply and the bombardment was resumed at six o'clock. Martial law has been proclaimed throughout Belgium.

Paris, Aug. 7.—The last official statement issued says quiet reigns all along the frontier.

London, Aug. 7.—A despatch from Brussels to the Exchange Telegraph Company to-day says German troops attacking Liege have asked for an armistice of 24 hours.

Quebec, Aug. 7.—The Allan liner Victorian will sail at dawn with six hundred French reservists aboard. It is supposed that a British cruiser will accompany her.

London, Aug. 7, 4 p.m.—An Exchange Telegraph Company despatch from Brussels says the German troops at Liege acknowledge the loss of 25,000. The Agency says this statement is official.

London. Aug. 7.—The British Government instead of reducing expenditure on public works for the sake of economy, has adopted a policy of greatly increasing the Government employment for the purpose of providing for those thrown out of work by the closing of factories.

Rome Aug. 7.—The Austrian small cruiser Taurus, has taken refuge in Brindisi from British torpedo boats.

Queenstown, Aug. 7. — The Oceanic and Baltic have signalled by wireless that they are approaching this port.

London, Aug. 7.—A despatch to the Daily News from Newcastle early this morning says that a wireless message received at South Shields shortly before midnight states that the British fleet engaged the German high seas fleet in a heavy battle off South Dogger banks.

After a general engagement along the battle line, which extended for many miles, and in which many ships on both sides took part, the German fleet was beaten back and moved in the direction of the coast of Holland. It is now believed that the German fleet is completely hemmed in on the eastern side of the North Sea.

H. SCHMILDT SHOWS PLANS AND DENOUNCES THE BRITISH; HURRIES AWAY IN AUTOMOBILE

The police department are engaged in investigating a rather strange case, that of H. Schmildt, a German. His hot patriotic speeches were the means of affording much excitement while the display of plans of Montreal and other points led to the police being informed, also the military authorities.

Schmildt arrived in the city last evening and registered at the Oriental as H. Schmildt of Montreal. His temper got the best of him during an argument over the war and he denounced the British. His actions and disrespect was such as to warrant the management of the Oriental hotel refusing to give him a room until at last after making explanations he was given a room for the night.

This morning after breakfast he managed to start another minor European war. One word led to another and again the British army and allies were denounced. He was informed by the management that unless he desisted they would have to put him out. After breakfast he again embarked on a wordy war with guests fo the hotel. In the interval the military authorities had been notified and also the police. In conversation with the manager of the Oriental who is a regimental staff officer, Schmildt asked him to show him the armouries. He also displayed several plans of battleships and fortresses. His enquiries regarding the condition of the military strength of the city were met with evasive answers. Several were questioned by the man regarding the size and strength of the regiment and also the principal buildings. None of the desired information was given to him. Schmildt further startled the guests by enquiring if they could cash a $200 check for him. He remarked that he had a letter of credit for $2,000. His game of trying to get money aroused the suspicion that he was a confidence man, others that he was a spy. The man seemed considerably put out on numerous occasions by failure to receive an expected cablegram. Schmildt also claimed it was his intention to leave for Germany to fight for his country. Shortly before 11 o'clock Schmildt left the hotel and walked to the corner of George and Hunter Streets where he jumped into a Ford which carried him rapidly eastward. Schmildt also had in his possession a small black bag.

It is the general opinion that Schmildt is only making a bluff and that another man is here in company with him who is doing the real work whatever they are engaged in.

On one or two occasions Schmildt was in danger of being mobbed [illegible] was his remarks in regard to [illegible] Britain.

PETERBOROUGH, FRIDAY, AUGUST 7, 1914

THE FRENCH PAPERS SPEAK.

At last, La Patrie and La Presse speak for their readers. Writing on the summoning of Parliament, the former says that it is probable that hostilities will not extend to Canada, but that such is not impossible, and continues:

> "Le désir unanime du peuple canadien est de secourir l'Angleterre dans tout la mesure de nos forces, et le meilleur moyen de la secourir est assurément de faire pour elle ce qu'elle-même jugera lui être le plus utile."

> "The unanimous desire of the Canadian people is to aid England to the full measure of our strength, and, the best means of aiding her is assuredly to do for her that which she herself considers to be the most useful."

La Presse, one of the most widely read newspapers in Canada, has an editorial in Wednesday's issue that breathes the spirit of a united Canada and a united Empire. We cannot reproduce all of it, which is entitled, "For Native Land and the Empire," but the following extract leaves no room for equivocation. It is a straight-from-the-shoulder article, that says, in plain, unmistakable terms, that Canada's duty is to aid the Motherland:

> "Tous les Canadiens comprennent aujourd'hui que lorsque la Grande-Bretagne est en guerre, notre Dominion l'est aussi.
>
> Forts de cette conviction vivante, tous les citoyens du pays ne sont plus que des patriotes unis, prêts à défendre le sol, d'abord, contre l'invasion possible, puis à mettre le surplus de leurs forces à l'entère disposition du Royaume-Uni, qui, après avoir épuisé les moyens de conciliation honorable, vient de déclarer la guerre à l'Allemagne et à son alliée l'Autriche-Hongrie.
>
> En prenant des mesures d'urgence pour faire face à la situation, le gouvernement fédéral peut compter sur l'appui de la masse du peuple. Sir Wilfrid Laurier en garantit l'assurance lorsqu'il déclare que "le sentiment d'esprit de parti doit être suspendu."
>
> Les manifestations de loyauté et de dévouement à l'empire, qui éclatent dans toutes les villes de notre territoire, depuis l'Atlantique jusqu'au Pacifique, indiquent spontanément que les Canadiens, sans distinction d'origine, ne forment qu'un coeur et qu'une âme, à l'heure du danger."

> "All Canadians understand today that when Great Britain is at war our Dominion is also.
>
> Strong in this vital conviction, all citizens of the country are simply united patriots, ready to defend the soil, first, against possible invasion, then to place the surplus of their entire strength at the disposal of the United Kingdom, which, after having exhausted the means of honourable conciliation, has just declared war on Germany and her ally, Austria-Hungary.
>
> In taking urgent measures to meet the situation, the Federal Government can count on the support of the mass of the people. Sir Wilfrid Laurier guarantees the assurance of that when he declares that 'the sentiment of party spirit ought to be suspended'.
>
> Manifestations of loyalty and devotion to the Empire which burst forth from every town in our land, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, point out spontaneously that Canadians, without distinction of origin, possess only one heart and one mind in the hour of danger."

We do not know by what rules the editorial policy of French-Canadian papers is governed. We could have wished that so vigourous a statement of Canada's obligations in the present crisis had come earlier. Perhaps La Presse does not care to lead its readers, but merely to express, in concrete form, what it believes, after mature consideration, to be the prevailing sentiment. So far as The Review was concerned, it has recognized from the very beginning that Canada could not decently take any other position than she did. We know now that French Canada is in harmony with this position, for we have a leading French-Canadian Liberal paper, Le Canada, saying plainly that Canada should aid, and now we have two more prominent French journals, La Presse and La Patrie, also voicing the same sentiment. La Presse supports the Borden Government's proposal to send troops to Great Britain. So far as Canada is concerned, there is no division of opinion on the policy of the Government in the issue facing the Empire. Liberal and Conservative newspapers in both English and French, party leaders of opposite schools are all agreed that aid must be given, troops mobilized, sea coasts defended, and Great Britain aided. If that does not show that there is a real British Empire, strongly united, we do not know what would.

AUSTRIA'S LITTLE ENEMY.

A FEW FACTS about the little kingdom of Servia, which Austria seeks to suppress, are of considerable interest now, says the St. Thomas Times. To begin with, the independence of the country from Turkey was established by Article 34 of the Treaty of Berlin, signed July 13, 1878, and was solemnly proclaimed by the then king, Milan, at his capital, August 22, 1878. The executive power is vested in the king, assisted by a council of eight ministers, who are, individually and collectively, responsible to the nation. The legislative authority is exercised by the king in conjunction with the national assembly. The state council consists of members appointed partly by the King and partly by the assembly. This body is always sitting. The national assembly is composed of 160 deputies, elected by the people. The electoral franchise notification is very low, but members of the assembly must be 30 years of age, and a small property qualification is required.

The area of the country, prior to the expansion after the Balkan war, was 18,650 square miles, and the total population 2,688,025, or about that of Ontario. This latter fact alone sufficiently emphasizes the inequality of the contest which has been forced upon Servia by Austria. The population largely resides in the rural parts of the country, the only city of considerable size being Belgrade, the capital, which contains about 90,000 inhabitants.

The state religion is Greek orthodox, the adherents of that faith embracing almost the entire population. Elementary education is compulsory, and in all the primary schools it is free. Of the total population in 1900, about 17 per cent. could read and write.

There is no pauperism in Servia in the sense in which it is understood in Canada; the poorest have some sort of freehold property. There are a few poor people in Belgrade, but neither their poverty nor their number has necessitated an institution like a workhouse.

The total revenue is about £5,000,000 annually, and the expenditure about the same figure. The chief sources of revenue are direct taxes, customs, monopolies, and the state railway. The public debt in 1911 was £1,388,180. Agriculture is the chief industry. Wheat, barley, and corn are largely grown, while plum marmalade and fresh plums are exported in large quantities. Silk culture is an important industry.

Military service is compulsory and universal. Liability is from 18 to 50 years of age, but recruits join at 21 and complete their military service at 43. The infantry is armed with the Mauser rifle.

The country has one principal railway line, the total mileage being 577. Of highways there are 3,995 miles, many of them in a ruinous condition. There are 2,194 miles of telegraph, while there are 25 miles of rural telephone systems, and 38 miles of urban telephone systems.

A pigmy country certainly to become involved in a war with a country like Austria!

"FIGHTING SAM!"

THE MONTREAL STAR of August 4th has the following to say of Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes:

> "Sam Hughes has had his critics — we have not always been kind to him ourselves —but there will be a general feeling today that he is the right man in the right place at the head of our military preparations. When the Canadian army corps goes to Europe, we want a practical soldier and an effective fighter leading it on; and we cannot possibly make a better choice for this position than the man who was so eager to get into the South African fray that he forced himself on the troopship as an unattached officer, trusting to a chance to volunteer at Cape Town.
> Fighting is the business of fighters; and, on that count 'Sam' qualifies. We are all glad to have pugnacious Winston Churchill at the Admiralty at this time. We will be glad if Lord Kitchener is put in charge of the War Office. Admiral Callaghan — that scion of the 'fighting race' — commands the fleet. 'Sam' Hughes is the sort of material who should be at the head of the Militia Department today; and who—if he carries out his own suggestion and goes to Europe with our troops—will bear with him the best wishes and fullest confidence of our people."

The participation of the Empire in the European conflict has involved Canada, and this fact has brought into extraordinary prominence the Minister of Militia and Defence and the Department over which he presides. Col. Hughes has always been a soldier, and is of the vigourous, energetic kind that are best qualified for leadership in actual hostilities. We agree with the Montreal Star that the right man is at the head of Canada's military preparations.

Provisions of the Militia Act.

Toronto Mail and Empire.

"Whenever the Governor-in-Council places the militia or any part thereof on active service, if Parliament is then separated by such adjournment or prorogation as will not expire within ten days, a proclamation shall be issued for the meeting of Parliament within 15 days, and Parliament shall accordingly meet and sit upon the day appointed by such proclamation, and shall continue to sit and act in like manner as if it had stood adjourned or prorogued to the same day." (Sec. 70.)

"When the Governor-in-Council has declared that an emergency has risen in which it is expedient for the public service that the Government should have control of the railways in Canada, or any of them, the Minister may by warrant under his hand empower any person or persons named in such warrant to take possession, in the name or on behalf of His Majesty, of any railway in Canada, and of the plant belonging thereto, or of any part thereof, or to take possession of any plant without taking possession of the railway itself, and to use it for His Majesty's service at such times and in such manner as the Minister directs, and the directors and servants of such railway shall obey the directions of the Minister as to the use of the railway or plant as aforesaid for His Majesty's service." (Section 95.)

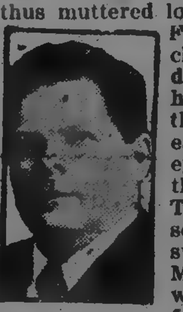
THE PRODIGAL SON

By Walt Mason



"At last I'm wise, I will arise, and seek my father's shack"; thus muttered low the ancient bo, and then he hit the track. From dwellings rude he'd oft been shooed, been chased by farmers' dogs; this poor old scout, all down and out, had herded with the dogs. His heart was wrong; it took him long to recognize the truth, that there's a glad and smiling dad for each repentant youth. "I will arise, doggone my eyes," the prodigal observed, "and try to strike the old straight pike from which I idly swerved." The father saw, while baling straw, the truant, sore and lamed; he whooped with joy; "my swaybacked boy, you're welcome!" he exclaimed. Midst glee and mirth two dollars' worth of fireworks then were burned; "we'll kill a cow," cried father, "now that Reuben has returned!" His sisters sang, the farmhouse rang with glee till rafters split, his mother sighed with hope and pride, his granny had a fit. And it's today the same old way, the lamp doth nightly burn, to guide you home, O, boys who roam, if you will but return.

Japan To Attack Tsing-Yau.

SHANGHAI, Aug. 7.—An official at the Japanese consulate here said yesterday that upon receipt of the first official news of the beginning of the clash of arms between England and Germany, Japan would send a fleet with 10,000 men to attack Tsing-Yau and 10,000 more to relieve the British garrison at Tien-Tsin and Pekin. Preparations for such action were now under way, he said.

Captured Wireless Outfit.

PARIS, Aug. 7. — The Versailles police made a descent on a house near the Aerodrome and arrested the occupants, three Germans, with completed wireless outfit, a large quantity of cipher despatches and documents in German, together with plans of the Aerodromes in the vicinity of Versailles and Essen's depots. The men will probably be shot.

Little Breaks.

Among "blunders in emphasis" the prize must be awarded to the remark of the beautiful Miss Gunning to George II. She told the King that she would dearly love to see a coronation. A compliment not infrequently takes a questionable form. G. W. E. Russell in his "Collections and Recollections" tells of a working class admirer who once said to the Dean of Windsor (Dr. Wellesley), "I always say there's nothing of the gentleman about you."—St. James' Gazette.

GERMANS HELD BACK.

Belgians at Liege Are Making a Desperate Resistance.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—Official announcement is made that the battle continues to rage round Liege, Belgium. The German shell fire has reduced two of the Liege forts, but the Belgians continue to resist with untiring energy.

The Germans were able to use their light siege guns against the forts of Liege, which are thirty years old. Two of them were silenced and the German columns broke through. The other forts are holding out. The Belgians are making a determined resistance before the city.

The situation at Liege according to the latest despatches, was as follows:

It seemed certain that the fortifications could not stop the German army and the only question was whether it advance could be delayed. The fortifications already had held it for 36 hours, and the fierce struggle the Germans had had and would still have to wage would, it was believed, compel them to pause and revictual.

If the German army succeeded in carrying Liege they would find themselves confronted by an entrenched camp near Namur, at which the Belgians are preparing to make a stand as fierce as that at Liege.

The Belgian army was brilliantly fulfilling its task of delaying the German advance and it appeared certain that the German staff's plan in Belgium would be hindered by the obstinate stand of the Belgians.

THE CHIEF INVESTIGATOR.

Lord Mersey Is Not the Ogre He Is Generally Thought To Be.

Lord Mersey, cool, grim, impartial judge—such is the way the press is headlining all references to the British Titanic Commission's chairman, who has been in Canada directing the enquiry into the loss of the Empress of Ireland. After the Titanic enquiry due prominence was given to the fact that during the entire questionings the only time he was seen to smile was when a sailor, who was asleep at the time of the collision, explained he was "whacked to the side." His stiff face was then said to have cracked into laughter that was like a grimace. There is altogether too general impression that Lord Mersey, if a just judge, is ogre-like and a man of dry rigidity.

Otherwise, it would be difficult to account for his universal popularity in the British Isles, along with the respect for him as the highest authority on matters maritime that is felt. His career has been notable. A native of Liverpool, nautical terms such as "alluvion" or "jettison" were a part of his schoolboy alphabet. He absorbed shipping lore with his arithmetic. In 1867 he entered the chambers of Mr. Charles Russell—afterwards the late celebrated Lord Russell of Killowen—as pupil, was called to the Bar three years after, and later enjoyed a private practice of almost fabulous worth. All this time he was just plain Sir John Bingham. His subsequent career as president of the probate, divorce, and admiralty division on the bench is well remembered; also his services on the Parliamentary Commission which enquired into the Jameson raid.

Upon his elevation to the peerage in March, 1910, he had to respond at a Divorce Court banquet given in his honor, and a few of his remarks revealed the real man. "I think I could count on my fingers," he said with emotion, "the number of days I have been away from my duties on the bench from ill-health or other causes, but now at 70 years of age, I am tired—not so tired that I feel unfit for any more work, but tired enough to make me feel that in justice to myself I ought to relax the strain of daily work on the bench." Four years later, at this date, Lord Mersey is still in harness. That bears reasonable testimony to one of his epigrams—much esteemed of lawyers—"I hope I shall still be able to do useful work, notwithstanding the ominous assurances of my friends that I look younger every day."

Newspaper men, by the way, need have no fear of this "ogre" at the Empress investigation. Lord Mersey has frequently praised the courtesy of the average reporter and the fairness of the press. "Of course," once he remarked, "my judicial acts have been criticized, but no judge should complain of criticism, for a judge who is never worth criticism is probably never worth anything at all."

A teaspoonful of dry mustard rubbed into the hands, after preparing onions or fish, will remove the odor pletely. It should be rubbed in as if it were soap.

An Episode of Mexico

By ESTHER VANDERVEER

A girl sat sewing in her room in the City of Mexico. Hearing a footstep on the stairs, she started. A woman entered out of breath.

"Inez!" she gasped.

"Oh, Pepita! What is it?"

"If you have anything to compromise you with the Constitutionalists get rid of it at once. This man Manuel Coral, whom you have trusted, is a spy of the dictator. He has informed upon you."

"Then what use to get rid of evidence? The dictator does not need evidence to get rid of his victims."

"Coral's brother, Enrique, came to me and said to me: 'I have just learned that Manuel is in the secret service of the dictator and has informed the tyrant that by searching Inez's room he will find papers revealing the plan of the revolutionists.' Enrique assured me that if no such papers are found you will not be troubled. If they are found it will go hard with you, even though you are a woman."

Inez burst into tears. The man she loved had turned traitor to her. But her friend urged her to waste no time in getting rid of any compromising documents she might possess. She did possess several important ones, for her brother was one of the revolutionary chiefs, and he was using her to lay plans for a rising against the dictator in the City of Mexico. But Inez had received too terrible a blow in the treachery of her lover to keep her mind on what she was doing. After she had destroyed every document, as she supposed, she remembered one she had not destroyed that gave a list of persons in the city who could be relied on to desert the dictator and join the revolutionists as soon as fighting commenced. But this did not occur to her till the sound of heavy footsteps was heard on the staircase. She had only time to unlock a drawer, take out the paper and slip it under her dress at the neck when the door was thrown open and Manuel Coral with a man and a woman entered.

"I am sorry to disturb you, senorita," he said to Inez, "but the government has received news that you are in possession of plans of the revolutionists, and I have been sent here to get them."

"You mean," said Inez, whose indignation by this time had got the better of her grief, "that you have accused me."

"What matters it?" Pepita broke in, "since you are innocent of the charge? Let them search the room."

"I shall also be obliged to have you searched," said Coral. "I have brought a woman for the purpose."

Coral and the man he had brought with him began to search the room. Pepita asked permission to leave, and it was granted. Before doing so she embraced Inez and, slipping her thumb and forefinger in under the neck of her dress, drew the paper hidden there into the palm of her hand. Then she disengaged herself, but before doing so transferred the paper into her sleeve. Then, with a few words of encouragement for her friend, she took her departure.

As soon as Pepita had gone Coral ordered the woman to take Inez into another room and make a thorough search of her person, promising the former a handsome reward if she found what they were looking for. Inez left with a mingled glance of defiance and contempt for the man she had loved. She felt perfectly safe, Pepita having taken away the compromising document. Coral showed no feeling whatever at her treatment. In due time the two women returned, the searcher announcing that, though she had made a careful investigation of the senorita's clothing and her hair, not a scrap of information had been found. Then Coral, making a ceremonious bow to Inez, left her alone.

Inez was moved by two conflicting emotions. She had saved her brother and the cause he was engaged in from a serious setback, and, far more important than that, many a man who would have been implicated and lost his life had not Pepita carried away a list of their names that had been saved. On the other hand, she had received a bitter thrust in the treatment of her lover.

Her usefulness to the cause had ended and she determined to slip away from the city of Mexico and rejoin her brother. She was engaged in getting together the things she would take with her when the door opened, and Manuel Coral entered. Placing his finger to his lips, he looked about him to satisfy himself that no one else was present. Ines looked at him wondering what he would do next. Then he spoke hurriedly:

"I found it necessary to deceive the dictator, whose confidence I have. He had received indirect information that you were here in the interests of the revolutionists. I at once sent my brother to inform you that you were suspected and persuaded the dictator to permit me to make the search I knew you would be subjected to. I saw Pepita take a paper from the neck of your dress. You think I have betrayed you. I have saved you. Heaven knows what would have become of you had I not warned you or had another conducted the search."

Inez listened to these hurried words till the end, then, toppling, fell into her lover's arms.

When she came to herself Manuel Coral was bending over her anxiously.

"Go," he said, "while there is time I have more to do here or I would go with you."

Unsympathetic.

"Willie," whispered auntie in the street car, "why don't you get up and give your seat to your father? Doesn't it pain you to see him reaching for the strap?"

"Not in a car," responded the youngster, settling back comfortably in his seat.—People's Home Journal.

BRITISH SHIP SUNK.

Cruiser Amphion Strikes Mine Off the Dutch Coast—130 Men Lost.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—An Admiralty report says that the British cruiser Amphion was sunk yesterday morning by striking a mine off the Dutch coast. Paymaster J. T. Gedge and 130 men were lost. The captain, 16 officers and 135 men were saved.

A previous report said that the German mine layer Koenigin Luise had probably placed some mines before she was sunk by the British torpedo boat Lance.

The Amphion was a light cruiser of 3,400 tons. She was attached to the third destroyer flotilla under Captain H. Fox, commanding officer. Her regular complement was 229 men. She was commissioned in April, 1913.

Lance Sank Koenigin Luise.

LONDON, Aug. 7. — The British torpedo boat destroyer Lance was the hero of the first naval engagement in the present war, sinking the river boat Koenigin Luise, which had been fitted out as a mine layer.

The Lance fired only four shots. The first destroyed the bridge of the steamer, the third and fourth tore away the stern and the Koenigin Luise sank in six minutes.

The Lance rescued 28 of the German crew. Several were wounded. Two of them each lost an arm, and a leg of four others was shot away. None of the Lance's crew was injured.

The Koenigin Luise was caught in the act of laying mines some sixty miles from Harwich.

THE MARKETS

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, Aug. 6.—On a sudden flurry, but unaccompanied by any heavy trading, the wheat market today in the December and May options ran up to the highest prices of the year. Before any extensive profit-taking could be accomplished, however, quotations had dropped back. and the market closed weak at 1¼c to 1 3-4c advance over last night. The only basis for the brief stampede appeared to be a report that some wheat had been sold here today to go to Montreal. Corn wound up 1 1-8c to 1 7-8c higher, oats with a gain of ¼c to ½c and provisions at 27½c to $1.70 advance.

Trading quiet and in the absence of selling pressure prices advanced over the opening 3½c to 3⅝c for wheat, and at noon was $1.07, and December $1.05½. Liverpool market closed indefinitely. The cash demand continues good for Nos. 1, 2 and 3 northern wheat, but offerings are few, buyers being principally houses with eastern connections.

The weather map shows much cooler temperature all over the west, averaging around 75, maximum and 45 minimum, but not one single point records rain. Oats and flax made good advances.

Winnipeg wheat opened 1c to 1⅛c lower, and closed 1½c to 3½c higher.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 6.—A very excited feeling has developed in the local market and prices under an active demand from local and country buyers are fairly booming, the advance in oats being 2c to 3 1-2c per bushel, with sales of car lots of No. 2 Canadian western at 50c to 51c and of 100,000 bushels of No. 1, sold c.i.f. bay ports at from 46c to 47 1-2c per bushel. Manitoba barley was also strong and C. P. R. with sales of car lots of No. 4 at 62c and of rejected at 60c per bushel ex-store. Beans are very strong, with sales of 20 to 50 bag lots of three-lb. pickers at $2.75 per bushel. There is no further change in prices for flour, but the condition of the market is strong under an active demand from local and country buyers and the continued upward tendency of prices for wheat, and in consequence some of the leading millers have withdrawn travelers from the road and are refusing sale of round lots of spring wheat grades, while dealers in winter wheat flour say it is impossible to get any offers from Ontario millers and stocks on spot are about exhausted, with prices for 90 per cent. patents quoted as high as $2.75 per bag.

In rolled oats the feeling is very strong and prices have scored another advance of 15 cents per bag, with a good demand. Mill feed is very firm under an active demand. The demand for butter is good and the undertone to the market is strong, with prices working toward a higher level. There is considerable demand for cheese between houses and a fair trade is doing at strong price. Eggs active and firm.

Woman's World

Leader of the New Woman's Educational Movement in the Orient.

DR. MARY MILLS PATRICK.

The most remarkable woman's college in the world is Constantinople college, where women from all parts of the orient are sent to be grounded in the arts and sciences of the occident. Forty years ago the small school which was the beginning of the college was established in Constantinople. It was a missionary enterprise, and in those days the orient looked with suspicion on the occident and with disapproval on anything like the higher education of women. All this is changed, however. The sultan has set the seal of his approval on the school and recommends the education of Turkish young women, while from Armenia, the Balkan states, Greece and the farther orient girls of the best families are sent to enjoy the educational advantages of an institution which is as well equipped as the average American woman's college. Many rich Americans have contributed generously for improvements, the total cost of the college buildings and equipment being about three-quarters of a million dollars. Recently five splendid new buildings were dedicated.

The head of this college is Dr. Mary Mills Patrick, an American, to whom are due the high standard and the success of the institution. She was born at Canterbury, N. H. From New England she removed to the state of Iowa with her parents, residing during her school years at Lyons and there being graduated from Lyons college.

Soon after her graduation she went to Turkey under appointment received from the American board of foreign missions and first spent several years in the eastern part of Asia Minor, where her work was chiefly among the Armenian people.

Here she acquired a knowledge of the Armenian language that marked her from the beginning of her career as gifted especially in linguistic faculty. Besides the Armenian, she speaks fluently Turkish, Greek, Bulgarian French and German.

After several years' residence in the Armenian provinces Miss Patrick was called to the American school for girls at Constantinople, to which institution she has devoted more than thirty years of untiring effort, establishing there a standard for the education of girls that has changed the entire attitude of the various races of the near east and the ideas of the Ottoman government as well on this most important subject. From a high school, established in 1871, this American institution for the higher education of young women has grown under the able direction of Dr. Patrick into the strong and well equipped college, the only college for girls in the Ottoman empire. Seeing the need of such a college in Constantinople, which draws to itself people from all parts of the entire Levant, even influencing the thought and life of Persia and Arabia, Egypt and southern Russia, as well as the whole of the southeast of Europe, Miss Patrick early determined to work for the establishment of a permanent educational work of high standard. Spending all her vacations in study and research work, taking courses successively at the universities of Heidelberg, Zurich, Leipzig, Berlin and Berne, she finally took the doctor's degree from the last named institution, her major work being in the field of Greek philosophy. She has done notable work in psychology also and in ethics, as well as in Greek literature and history. In 1890 the school over which she had for nearly ten years presided was incorporated into a college, and it is due to the splendid efforts of Dr. Patrick that this institution is now established in its beautiful new home on the European shores of the Bosporus, the center of intellectual life for the women of the near east.

HOW A BEAVER WORKS.

The Industrious Little Fellow Is Perfectly Silent When Busy.

Although a beaver exercises, undoubtedly, an intelligence which is most remarkable when overcoming difficulties, and often constructs his house and dam in a way that shows he realizes the necessities of the situation, nevertheless he seems sometimes to be very careless; and sometimes his plans miscarry. Whether they work upon their structures only at night, or also by day, depends on their sense of safety. When they feel secure they do much work as well as play by daylight; and when they are hurried they take the risk of it.

Enos Mills, who, during 27 years, as he assures us, has had wild beavers under almost constant observation, hiding for hours at all seasons, near their resorts, in order to watch them when they were offguard, finds this true, and also that each seems to work independently, yet is probably under some sort of direction by the patriarchs of the society. Here is a paragraph from his admirable book, "In Beaver World":

"Beavers may well be called the silent workers, no matter how numerous or crowded, or busy they are, their work goes on without a word and apparently without a sign, although I have seen them at work scores of times, in the twilight and in the daylight, singly, in pairs and by the dozens, doing the many kinds of work which beavers perform, yet this work has always gone quietly and without any evidences of management. Since the quality of his work improves as the beaver increases his experience it appears natural and probable that each colony of beaver has a leader who plans and directs the work. I am familiar with a number of instances which strongly indicate leadership. In times of emergency, when an entire colony is forced to emigrate, a beaver—and usually an aged one—takes the lead, and wherever he goes the others willingly follow.

"Both the Indians and the trappers have a story that old beavers who will not work are driven from the colony and become morose outcasts, slowly living away the days by themselves in a burrow. I have no evidence to verify this statement. Nor is the work of all beaver alike. The ditches which one beaver digs, the house one builds, or the dam one makes, may be executed with much greater speed or with more skill than those of a neighboring beaver. Many houses are crude and unshapely masses, many dams haphazard in appearance, while a few canals are crooked and uneven. But the majority do good work, and are quick to take advantage of opportunity, quick to adjust themselves to new conditions, or to use the best means that are available."

A thin coat of potash left on the sink over night once a week will remove the ugly stains that will not yield to kerosene. It should be applied with care, as it is poisonous.

Little five-year-old Bessie was telling about some medicine she had taken while ill.

"Yes," she said, "I took some compulsion of cod liver oil, and"—

"You mean emulsion, don't you, dear—not compulsion?" said the visitor.

"Well," rejoined Bessie, "there was a good deal of compulsion about it."—Pittsburgh Press.

WHY THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE COLLAPSED

For years past students of European history have pointed out the weakness of the Triple Alliance, and have predicted that it would hardly survive the first strain placed upon it. The announcement that Italy will remin neutral throughout the present war means that the Triple Alliance has come to an end. Moreover, there are signs that Italy is more likely to be found upon the side of Britain and France than upon the side of Austria and Germany, should she ultimately become involved. In the Alliance Italy was in the position of a minority stockholder in a concern where all the profits were handed out to the other stockholders in salaries and no dividends paid. Italy is Catholic; Germany is Protestant; Italy is Latin; Austria is Teuton. The alliance between Austria and Germany is a natural one; a necessary one. The alliance between Italy and the other two was not natural, and was entered into by Italy in default of a better one from France.

Hostile Allies.

As Henry Wickham Steed says in his "Hapsburg Monarchay": "Save at rare intervaals, the character of Austro-Italian relations since the formation of the Triple Alliance in 1882 has been allied and inimical rather than allied and friendly." Before entering into the alliance Italy had wavered between France and Austria, her diplomacy being directed toward securing the friendship of both. Her attitude of neutrality in the Franco-Prussian war had made a most unfavorable impression in France, and Italy was accused of ingratitude. Moreover, at that time France was a much more religious country than she is now, or rather, was much more interested in the Papacy. Italy's invasion of the Pontifical State and her capture of Rome had strengthened French animosity. On the other band, Italy feared that France harbored some ambition of restoring the temporal kingdom of the Pope. Finally she sought refuge from the danger of Frannce by an alliance with Germany and Austria, her decision being hastened by France's occupation of Tunis.

Bismarck Scheming.

In the light of after-events it is plain that much of the ill-feeling between France and Italy was produced by Bismarck's diplomacy. his end being to leave France without a friend in Europe. For Italy he cared little, nor did the Austrian Emperor think this ally of much importance. She was, however, one friend detached from France, and on this account was welcomed into the alliance. But once in the alliance, it was the part of German statecraft to cultivate resentment and animosity between Austria and Italy in order that they might not combine against Germany. In fact as long as Bismarck remained at the head of German affairs, he pretended to the Austrian emperor that Austria's real friend was Germany, and to the King of Italy that Italy and German had much in common and that both had better keep a watchful eye upon Austria. As Mr. Steed puts it: "For long periods in the history of the Triple Alliance the Italian 'wire' to Vienna, like the Austro-Hungarian 'wire' to Rome, ran through Berlin, and Berlin has rarely failed to levy a charge for the transmission of messages."

"Alliance or War."

However, within the past few years statesmen in Austria have perceived that an Italian alliance is important for their country, and they have shown a tendency to come to a good understanding with her independent of machinations from Berlin. There can be no doubt, however, that popular feeling in Italy was hostile to Austria's annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, but her statesmen were firm, and Italy stood aside, having been promised some "compensation" for her attitude. Then when Italy occupied Tripoli. Austria remained benevolently neutral, and in 1912 the alliance was renewed with more friendly feeling upon both sides than had existed for many years. Prine Buelow once declared that the only alternatives for Austria and Italy are alliance or war, and in 1912 it appeared that alliance was preferable.

Austria Persecutes Italians.

However, it is to be borne in mind that these alliances were never approved by the masses of the Italian people. They were considered necessary by their statesmen, but there are thousands, if not tens of thousands, of Italian subjects, who have experienced Austrian insults and Austrian oppression For instance, the Lord Lieutenant of Trieste, an Austrian municipality that once belonged to Italy, and that is still chiefly inhabited by people speaking the Italian language, has been expelling Italian subjects from Trieste, Istria, and Dalmatia, sometimes at the rate of ninety per month. Quite recently all Italians were expelled from the employ of the municipality of Trieste. There are old insults, too. the Italians will not forget, as, for example, the visit that Humbert paid to Franz Josef at Vienna, and which was never returned. Had it not been for German machinations it would now be in alliance, and with Russia would have formed a combination that might well have held Austria and Germany in check without the support of Great Britain.—Mail and Empire.

EXPERTS PREFER FRENCH CANNON

Believe Republic's Preparations Have Borne Fruit

With the news that France and Germany have begun hostilities, military experts are beginning to compile statistics to show the relative fighting strength of the two nations.

Foundation for their figures are based upon the strength of the two nations exhibited in the Franco-Prussian War, with the later changes in the potentialities of their armies and navies noted.

Since the war of 1870-71, the French army, particularly in the artillery arm, has been wholly reorganized. Almost constantly since the Franco-German war the general staff and war ministers have been preparing for conflict with Germany.

Forty-four years ago France was wholly unprepared, according to military experts and historians. There were no plans for mobilization of the reserves, uniforms and rifles could not be obtained in sufficient quantities, and it even is recorded that many soldiers marched barefoot. Officers leading their men to the frontier had no maps of the country which they were expected to invade.

Now, it is believed, that such mistakes have been avoided. Railroad lines have been built and stand ready on notice from the government to transport troops. Uniforms and equipment of all kinds are stored in arsenals ready to hand. All available food supplies have been confiscated by the government, according to dispatches.

The standing army is on the frontier and the reserve system, in use in all European countries, is expected to provide France with an army of nearly 4,000,000 men. War office plans contemplate complete mobilization of this force within eleven days.

But the French enlistment does not require the soldier to return to his unit to brush up his training at yearly intervals as the German reservist must. So the experts point out that, although the size of the armies which might be put into the field by the two powers do not differ materially in size, the effectiveness of the Germans may be much greater than that of the French, since thousands of the latter have not handled a rifle or obeyed a military command in years.

Experts believe France has the better artillery, while German infantry is believed to surpass the French foot soldiers. Arms of the infantry of both powers are as modern as can be obtained.

Cavalry, generally believed the world over to be ineffectual for any purpose except scouting, it is expected, will receive its death blow if Germany and France go to war. Just as high-power rifles of modern warfare have mad cavalry useless in actual fighting, the aeroplane and dirigible ballon are expected to render the horse branch useless in a second Franco-German conflict.

Both France and Germany have been foremost in experimenting with aerial scouts. France has attempted to develop the aeroplane or heavier-than-air machine, while her rival has favored the dirigible. Military experts are waiting anxiously for a first real test. The aeroplane was used with some success for this purposeo in Mexico, and before that, during Italy's war with Tripoli, but its actual efficiency has not been rigidly tested.

AGASSIZ AND A HERRING.

And a Student Who Finally Succeeded in Making a Discovery.

A student enrolled in Agassiz's class. For several days Agassiz paid no attention to him whatever. At length, tired of standing around idle, the student asked Agassiz to give him something to do. Agassiz's reply was to hand him a herring and to say, "Study this." The student was bewildered, but set about "studying" it. The next day Agassiz asked him what he had learned about the herring. The student replied that it had two eyes, so many fins and such and such markings.

"No, no!" Agassiz cried. "Study it more. Those things are not important."

The next day and the next the experience was repeated. The fourth day Agassiz again demanded information about the now rotting specimen. In a desperate attempt at humor the student replied, "Well, it's the same on both sides."

"That's it!" shouted Agassiz. "That's it! A starfish isn't the same on both sides, an oyster isn't, thousands of specimens of the sea are not. When you find one that is, you've found a starting point in a new stage in the evolution of life."

Obviously, that student learned more from that one lesson about the scientific method of study than he would have learned in a year's reading and lectures. The textbooks would have taught him the facts; Agassiz taught him the method of learning all facts.—World's Work.

A Painful Process.

Little Prescott had been leaning out of an upstairs window.

"Come away from the window, son," his father said sternly. "You might fall out and get a bump on your back—like the camels you saw yesterday."

The little boy was silent for a few minutes. Then he asked, "Father, do all the little camels have to fall out the window to get their humps?"—New York Post.

DELIBERATE BRIBE OFFERED BY GERMANY DECLARES ASQUITH

TRIED TO BUY BRITAIN

She Proposed to Barter the French Colonies and Belgium in Exchange for Britain's Neutrality—Huge War Vote Passes In a Moment—Kitchener Wants Half a Million More Men for Service

LONDON, Aug. 7. — One of the most sensational features of the day's developments has been Premier Asquith's exposure in the House of Commons last evening, of what he characterized as the "infamous proposals" made to the British Government by Germany in its desperate efforts to induce Great Britain to take up an attitude of neutrality in regard to the war.

It was announced Wednesday that the Premier would make a statement in the House concerning the negotiations which took place between the British and German Governments preceding the declaration of war, and it was anticipated that he would have some startling revelations to make. The most daring predictions concerning the nature of the revelations fell short, however, of the actual facts and Mr. Asquith's exposure of what is universally denounced as Germany's infamy, caused a tremendous and painful sensation. The Premier stated that the Kaiser's Government went so far as to propose to barter the French colonies and Belgium in return for British neutrality, and his statement that the British Government promptly and indignantly declined to entertain the "infamous proposals," was greeted with round after round of cheering.

There was another stirring scene when the House of Commons was asked to vote a war credit amounting to £100,000,000 sterling $500,000,000). The enormous appropriation was passed almost in the twinkling of an eye, and with complete unanimity, the members rising and cheering vociferously.

The Premier made a brief reference to the appointment of Field Marshal Kitchener as Secretary of War. He said that Earl Kitchener's connection with the Government did not identify him with any political party. In a great public emergency he had responded to a great public call and he would have in the discharge of his most arduous task the complete confidence of all.

In behalf of Lord Kitchener, the Premier asked power to increase the army by not less than half a million men.

"I am encouraged to ask this," he said, "not only by reason of our own sense of the gravity of the circumstances, but, the knowledge that India is prepared to send us two divisions, and everyone of the self-governing dominions has spontaneously tendered to the utmost limits of its possibility, both in men and money all the help it can afford the Empire. The Mother Country must set an example, while at the same time respond with gratification and affection to the filial overtures of the outlying members of her family."

Feeling here is growing much calmer since Chancellor Lloyd George's reassuring statement on the financial position in the House of Commons yesterday. By Friday the money crisis should be over with the lowering of the bank rate and the issue of pound and ten shilling notes, while postal orders can also be used as currency and the mint coining more silver, of which there has been a great store. The Government is also taking measures to prevent a rise in prices of necessaries of life and big purveyors of food and provisions had a consultation at the Home Secretary's office yesterday.

King George and Queen Mary have set an example of frugality to their subjects by ordering that nothing but the simplest fare shall be supplied at their table while the war lasts. At the House of Commons the members only take shilling dinners, while a majority of the motor owners are laying up their cars so as not to uselessly consume petrol.

Over thirty alleged German spies were arrested in the last twelve hours in various parts of the country; in one case two suspected of planning to blow up an important line between London and Chatham dockyard The anti-German feeling is running high and Germans are now rarely seen in public places.

The Bank of England yesterday reduced its discount rate to six per cent.

The reduction of the bank rate yesterday is regarded here as an official intimation that the financial situation in the British Isles is now well under way.

Business circles are making ready for the reopening of the banks today, when paper currency in small denominations is to be put in circulation.

Lt. Williamson Receives Orders

Lieut. Williamson, first lieutenant of the First Grenadiers of Montreal, who had been in the city on business, left last night for Montreal, in response to a wire from his colonel, which ordered him to report for duty at once. Lieut. Williamson gave an interesting interview to the Review a few days ago. When asked last night what post the regiment would be ordered to, he stated he could not say, but he expected it would be sent to one of the coast stations or to be held in readiness to go to the front, which turn in affairs he did not expect would materialize, although he said he would be delighted to get into action with the enemy.

A Boat Survival.

The dghaisa (pronounced dysa), the gondola of Malta, is a survival, says John Wignacourt in "The Odd Man In Malta," of the oldest vessel ever used and varies little in shape from the Egyptian boats of the dead. Actually the eye of Osiris is still to be seen upon the prow. It is propelled by two experienced oarsmen, one of whom always stands. When the Gregale wind is sweeping the harbors and the steam ferries are unsafe you can still use the trusty dghaisa. It is a gay little craft, painted in brilliant colors—in this respect a contrast to the somber gondola of Venice.

SUGGESTS ACTION BY CITY AND COUNTY COUNCILS

Editor Review:

Dear Sir:—In these unsettled days it may not be outside the scope of my duty as representative for me to make a few remarks on things as they appear from the inside at present. Canada's export trade has been increasing rapidly. Her import trade has been decreasing almost as rapidly. Consequently our revenue is going down, but our real prosperity has been going up. War, however, has intervened. We can do without our imports since we can and ought to do our own work in that respect, but the blow to our exports is a serious one. It means the throwing out of work of large numbers of able men. The point I wish to make is that many of our men can go on land if they will. Canada can defy starvation. When people are compelled to go back to first principles they are fortunate in being able to do so. Now is the time to take the matter up. Our able Mayor and Council might well confer with the County Council and make preparations if not so much for this winter, at any rate for the next. I venture to say that a resolute grasping of the situation would mean its complete solution. There is no good in standing back waiting for something to turn up, all the while giving quiet utterance to sleepy stuff, that may do only for an old maid's tea-party or something of that sort. We have the land — the people who want to work and are short of cash should have work provided for them, and it is the duty of the State and of the public to wake up. If we do not, the war will have its full effect upon us in creating poverty and disaster, a situation entirely uncalled for, which should not come about if we put some action into our talk. I beg leave to make this suggestion.

Yours truly,
J. H. BURNHAM.

More Gypsies Come to Town

Peterboro is evidently a gypsy haven. Today a large crowd of the dark skinned race evidently a band of horse traders came in from Lindsay. The women as usual solicited money for fortune telling while the men were engaged in dickering for horses. The usual bright rags decorated the feminine members of the bunch. The crowd are the same who buncoed several Lindsay residents out of money with the "now you have it and then you haven't," game.

The police are investigating and in all probability the gang will have to vamoose

GOOD SPEAKERS FOR CALGARY CONVENTION

Calgary, Alta., Aug. 7.—The list of speakers at the International Irrigation Congress, October 5 to 9, includes the best known and most authoritative representatives on the subject of irrigation that can be procured on the American continent. Invitations have been issued to those whom the program committee have selected to address the delegates, and a number of them have already accepted the invitation. A large variety of topics will be included in the program, every one of which will be of international importance.

DYNAMITE ON TRACK

Daring Attempt to Blow up C.N.R. Train

TORONTO, Aug. 7.—Grave significance is attached to the news which has just reached Toronto that an attempt was made within the last forty-eight hours to wreck a Canadian Northern Railway train by dynamite.

The attempt occurred at Falding station, near Parry Sound, on the road to Winnipeg. Dynamite in a sufficient quantity to blow up a train was placed on the track. Fortunately it was removed in time and the danger averted.

Partly as a result of this attempt, and partly by arrangements already made, the C. N. R. lines are to be guarded by armed men in the company's employ. Application has been made to the military authorities here for arms and ammunition, which is to be supplied immediately.

Bridges and all the company's more important buildings will be placed under strong guards as soon as equipment is issued.

It is understood that similar precautions are being taken on all the other lines in Canada. An oath similar to the oath of allegiance is being administered to the guards and only the most trusted employes of each company are being placed on duty.

He Got the Autograph.

An autograph collector caused a little scene the other day, when Prince and Princess Alexander of Teck visited Cardiff. When the prince and princess arrived at the City Hall for luncheon a young man entered the parlor and mingled with the members of the corporation, who were being presented by the Lord Mayor. The youth was observed by Mr. Rhys Williams, the prince and princess' host at Miskin Manor, but succeeded in speaking to the prince and obtaining his autograph. He was handed over to the police, to whom he explained that he was an autograph hunter, and on expressing his regret was allowed to go.

Uhlan Trotting King Will Never Step Mile Again

Uhlan, the racing whirlwind, never again will be seen in a race, and never again will appear on a race track in exhibition miles, according to the recent announcement of C. K. G. Billings, his multi-millionaire owner.

"Uhlan, like Alexander, has no more world's to conquer," declared Mr. Billings, "and so I shall put him in retirement. He has done all that ever was asked of him—and has done it well. He has deserved a rest and he shall get it on my Virginia farm, where he will end his days in ease and comfort."

Greatest Horse Ever Foaled.

The passing of Uhlan takes from the turf the greatest race horse that ever was foaled; a horse that never may know an equal. Uhlan, the perfect horse, today holds practically every trotting record. He has smashed so many track records with his wonderful bursts of speed that it would take an adding machine to compute them all. And he rounded out his career on October 9, 1913, at Lexington, Ky., with the most amazing performance of all—trotting a mile, with a runner at his side, in 1.54½, the best mile ever negotiated by either trotter or pacer.

Uhlan holds the world's record for straight trotting, without the aid of a runner or a windshield, with a mark of 1.58, made in Lexington, Ky., in 1912. Lou Dillon's best was 1.58½, made in 1908. But this mark is regarded as at least three seconds slower naturally than the record made by Uhlan, as Lou Dillon had the protection of a windshield in stepping to her record mile, and Uhlan did not.

Uhlan, sired by Bingen. 2.06¼, and whose dam was Blondell, with a record around 2.31, did not give early promise of being a real race horse. As a colt he looked somewhat scrawny, and his legs seemed unsuited for the terrific strain of racing.

But when he grew to be a two-year-old, he developed suddenly, but not even then did his first owner, Arthur Parker of Bedford, Mass., believe that he ever would take rank even among the second rate trotters. But, Uhlan when a three-year-old, surprised his owner and the sporting world as well, by whizzing along the old Readville, Mass., track, hitched to a wagon, in 2.13.

In 1907 Uhlan's consistently good work on the track attracted the attention of Charles Sanders, a horse owner of Salem, Mass. He watched the black gelding in a number of workouts, and in a number of races, noting his courage and his stamina. Then he went to Parker and after some dickering purchased him for $2,500.

Startled World in 1909.

Soon after Sanders secured him Uhlan trotted a mile in 2.07¼, making a record for four-year-old geldings that still stands. Sanders campaigned him in 1908 and the wonderful black horse brought home thousands of dollars in prize money for his owner.

It was in 1909, when he was a five-year-old, that Uhlan really startled the sporting world with his wonderful speed by travelling a mile in 2.02¼ and establishing a record for five-year-old geldings. Earlier in the year before Uhlan had made his 2.02¼ mark, Sanders was offered $20,000 for his gelding, but refused to sell.

"Uhlan will bring me that much money in prize money in less than one season," declared Sanders. "I'll sell him if I get my price. However, $20,000 is many miles away from it."

But in September of that year, 1910, Sanders sold his great black horse to Frank Jones, the Memphis millionaire, who was acting as agent for Billings. The price, $35,000, was about $15,000 less than Sanders would have taken for his horse before he stepped to his 2.02¼ mark, but Uhlan's feat in travelling at such a speed meant that his days as a big purse winner were at an end. That mark put him in the top-notch class, where he could find but little competition, ending his chances at prize money.

In 1911 Uhlan was withdrawn from further participation in purse races, and was groomed for flights against time by Doc Tanner, the veteran reinsman. In that year Uhlan tied the 2.00 wagon record of Lou Dillon, established a new wagon record for geldings, trotted a half-mile to wagon in .56¼, the fastest time ever made for that distance, and drew a sulky around a half mile track in 2.02¾, another record.

Made Record in 1912.

But it was in 1912 that he made his famous record—a mile in 1.58. It was at Lexington, Ky., on the last day of the meeting, that the famous black horse stepped the first quarter in .30, the second in .29, the third in .29, and the final quarter in .30, setting up the wonderful 1.58 mark.

On October 9, 1913, at Lexington, Uhlan, once more startled the world by reeling off a mile, with a runner at his side, in 1.54½. Nowhere on the trotting horizon to-day is there a horse that has the wonderful courage(the wonderful speed, the willing nature of this great black gelding, and nowhere is there a horseman who believes that during the present generation will there come a horse who can equal the wonderful performance of this amazing trotter.

Salvation Army's Part in the War

London, Aug. 6.—The Salvation Army suggested to the War Office today that it could supply 500 nurses. The offer was declined as there are enough nurses at present. The authorities have, however, taken over several buildings occupied by the "Army" to be used for quartering troops.

Among the reservists called to the colors are about 10,000 members of the "Army."

COUNCIL WILL DISCUSS PAVING

Mr. Gleason is Here Meeting City Officials

Owing to money market conditions and the difficulty of raising money by the debenture form and the uncertainty of the future the city fathers are confronted with several problems which may result in the holding up of public work. One question which will be discussed at a meeting this evening will be that of the paving contract. John Gleason of the firm of Foley and Gleason is in the city and had a long talk with the city officials. He stated afterwards that the matter had not been settled and that something definite might be ready for publication tomorrow. It is understood that the firm is ready to go ahead although Mr. Gleason stated that the conditions in Europe were reacting on all Canadian firms.

Another proposition which will be taken up this evening will be the advisability of constructing the North Monaghan sewer. The residents of the district are eager to have sewer service. The proposition will be wrestled with this evening.

Mayor Buller when asked if the sidewalk construction work would be held up stated that he could only give the assurance that the work would proceed for some time yet, but as for the future he could not make any definite promise.

CELEBRATE THE TERCENTENARY AT KAWARTHA LAKES

The Lindsay Warder is in receipt of a letter from Mr. G. Sterling Ryerson, who is summering at Sturgeon Point, to the effect that 1915 will be the tercentenary of the discovery of the Kawartha Lakes. This chain of lakes was discovered in 1615 by Samuel de Champlain, and Mr. Ryerson thinks that a celebration should be held to commemorate this event, along with the Sturgeon Point regatta.

The Warder is of the same opinion as Mr. Ryerson and thinks it would be an excellent idea. The Sturgeon Point Cottagers' Association and the citizens of Lindsay should consider this plan and hold a meeting to discuss it.

Troubled History of Austria-Hungary

Austria-Hungary is the direct heir of the Holy Roman Empire which was constituted in the year 79 by Pope Leo III., with Charlemange as Emperor. In the constant struggles between the Frankish and Germanic feudal lords, the power of the Emperor was often obscured. Not until the time of Conrad I. (911-918) was there a well marked distinction between the two races. The separate sovereignty of France was not fully recognized until the 12th century. Henry III. was Emperor over the German races from 1039 to 1056 and his chief accomplishment was the conquest and annexation of Hungary, a nation of Slavs. Through centuries of strife between Popes and Emperors arose finally the civil wars between the Guelphs and the Ghibelines, respectively clericals and anticlesicals.

Famous Emperors.

Amongst the famous Emperors in the middle ages were Barbarossa and Rudolph of Hapsburg (1273—1291), the latter being the direct ancestor of the present Emperor of Austria. Charles V. was orthodox when most of the petty princelings of the German States were with Luther and the Reformation. In the time of Charles VI. (1711-1740) Prince Eugene became famous as a military commander, sharing with Marlborough the credit of the anti-French campaign.

The rise of Prussia under Frederick Wilhelm, a taciturn military genius, awakened some concern in the Empire which ripened into alarm when his son, Frederick the Great, suddenly plunged into Silesia, an imperial dependency, and began the Seven Years' War. At Rossbach, Kuenersdorf, and on many other bloody fields, the Prussians held their own against the Austrians, although Frederick's genius as a commander was more than once on the point of eclipse. The Empire was staggering for the next thirty years and finally was put out of its misery by Napoleon. When Francis II. assumed the title of Emperor of Austria.

Kossuth's Insurrection.

A Hungarian revolution under Kossuth, broke out in 1848, and was subdued by the aid of Russian troops. Prussia and Austria in confederation conquered the Province of Schleswig-Holstein from Denmark, and then quarreled over the division of the spoils. This resulted in a brief war in 1866 between Prussia and Austria, the latter country being soundly and swiftly beaten.

SHIPS ARE SAFE AT HALIFAX

Mauretania and Cedric Have Arrived

HALIFAX, N.S., Aug. 7. — The British ship Mauretania arrived in Halifax under escort at 10.30 yesterday morning followed last evening at 7.15 by the Cedric, escorted by the British cruiser Essex.

The Mauretania, while on her way to New York, was warned by the British cruiser Essex last Wednesday night to change her course and steam full speed for Halifax. At that time the Cunarder was 380 miles from New York and 140 miles from Halifax. Somewhere, lurking in the darkness and fog, ready to pounce upon her victims, was a German cruiser.

Twenty-three of the passengers will be held in Halifax, prisoners of war, and were handed over to the proper authorities. These prisoners are of all classes.

The Mauretania's passengers and mails will be landed here.

GERMAN FLEET ON RUN

British Force Is Reported to Be Driving It Towards Holland.

Seemingly Official Bulletin Declares That the Opposing Squadrons In the North Sea Have Joined Battle and That Germans Are Being Driven on Coast—Two of Kaiser's Ships Sunk Off Shetland Islands?

LONDON, Aug. 7. — "The British fleet has engaged the German fleet on the high seas. The British warships are reported to be driving the Germans towards the Dutch coast."

This was the information published here early this morning and the fragmentary bulletin is believed to have the sanction of the Admiralty although no details are at hand. The detailed story of the battle may be expected some time to-day unless the pursuit carries the British ships into northern waters. If the British fleet can manoeuvre to a position northward of the enemy and cut him off from the estuary of the Elbe the action may prove decisive.

The many persistent circumstantial reports of the naval fight suggest that the rumor has a basis of truth. Incoming fishing boats brought the first cohesive stories of fighting to Lowestoft. The fishermen said they had seen a lively scrap between two destroyers. After that there was a succession of reports from east coast towns that orders had been issued for the preparation of hospitals.

A ship owner at Whitby has announced that he has been informed that a great battle has been fought and 19 German warships have been sunk. The people of Hull, Grimsby and Harwich are convinced of the truth of this reported battle and have been straining their eyes seaward, but have seen nothing. There is great excitement all along the east coast.

A despatch from Kirkwall in the Orkney Islands says:—

"It is persistently reported here today that British torpedo destroyers have sunk two German warships near the Shetland Islands. No details have been received. Heavy continuous firing was proceeding all through the afternoon."

The hospital authorities in Hull yesterday received orders to prepare to receive 250 persons wounded in the North Sea engagement.

Shipping firms throughout the British Isles have been informed that the east coast is now clear from Hull to London. Coastwise services have been resumed and fishing vessels are free to proceed to Iceland.

Behind this bald statement there is much to be inferred. A cordon of British commerce protectors must be stretched across the North Sea from the coast of Holland to the English coast. The Straits of Dover must be held so strongly that no German ships can pass either inward or outward.

The royal family shares with the homes of its many subjects the suspense of waiting for news of the fate of the different units of the fleet. Prince Albert, the second son of the King, aboard the battleship Collingwood, is one of the many boy midshipmen afloat sharing the perils of their elders.

MADRID, Aug. 7. — A despatch from the Canary Islands says a British squadron has sunk one German cruiser, the name of which is not given, and has captured another, which is being convoyed to Gibraltar.

Further advices here are to the effect that up to date more than fifty German steamers have been captured by the British squadron.

DID NOT BREAK WORD.

Italian Ambassador Issues a Vigorous Denial.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—The moral effect of the German check at Liege has been immense, particularly so as regards Italy. In view of the report, which is not yet confirmed, that Germany has sent an ultimatum to that power, the Ambassador of Italy here has issued a statement as follows:

"First: The neutrality of Italy in the present war is not merely a matter of self-interest, but is in strict accord with both the letter and the spirit of her obligations under the terms of the Triple Alliance.

"However unpopular a war in which she fought side by side with Germany and Austria might have been in Italy, the Italian Government would have undertaken such a war rather than go back on its plighted word."

FIGHTING GRIM AND BLOODY BATTLES ON THE FRENCH FRONTIER

Germans Try to Repeat 1870

INVADE FRANCE ON SAME DAY OF SAME MONTH AND SAME PLACES—STORY OF FRANCO-PRUSSIAN WAR RETOLD.

Born in the blaze of battle 44 years ago, two great nations, France and Germany, are today repeating with uncanny similarity even in date and site, the conflicts of the last great European war.

The war of 1870 began on August 2, with a fierce fight between German and French troops at Saarbrueck—not eighty miles from Longwy, where the first Franco-German battle of this present and most frightful of European conflicts has just been waged, on the SAME day, August 2!

In 1870, just as today, there were three chief points where the big German armies crossed the French border The Germans, in fact, are now repeating the tactics of their last war. But at that time German victory followed German victory with terrible rapidity, and as a result came the formation of the German empire, with King William of Prussia as emperor. And the successive defeats of Napoleon III. of France culminated in his capture and downfall, and the establishment of the French republic.

The two nations thus formed are today flying at each others throats once more, with all the vengeful hostility engendered in that former conflict. To really understand the whole meaning of this bloody European crisis of 1914, it is necessary to call to mind the dramatic history of the struggle of 1870.

It was caused by Prince Bismarck's determination to place Prussia at the head of a united Germany, and by France's jealousy of her hereditary enemy's threatening growth. But hostilities were actually precipitated by a very trivial incident, just as in the present war.

The French Ambassador, Benedetti, demanded of King William of Prussia that no prince of his line should ever accept the throne of Spain The king refused to listen, and made public excerpts from Benedetti's demand. A few days later, July 19, 1870, France formally declared war.

German's "mailed fist" struck before France had half a chance to prepare herself. Germany had a fighting force of over 520,000 men in the field at once. The French had confidently expected to be able to mobilize 500,000 men instantly, but found that only 250,000 were available for the military movements during August.

After the first conflict at Saarbrueck, on August 2, in which the French were victorious, there occurred a fierce attack on the German advance guard near Weissburg, in Alsace. The French troops retired with heavy loss. The German invasion progressed rapidly.

In battle after battle the French inflicted losses much heavier than their own upon the enemy, but were each time defeated. Finally, on September 2, the French emperor and all his army under his command were captured at the battle of Sedan. There was one army left to France, but it was bottled up in the fortified city of Metz, under the command of Marshal Bazaine, who, after a daring attempt at a sortie, was forced to capitulate on October 27.

The German troops now had an open road to Paris, and they invested the capital at once. The Parisian had proclaimed a republic, after Napoleon's downfall at Sedan, and organized a government for national defence, of which Leon Gambetta, the great French statesman, was one of the chiefs.

Gambetta put aeronautics, which are playing so striking a part in the present strife, to the first successful use in war He escaped from beleagured Paris in a balloon and attempted to raise more troops in the south of France. But this dramatic deed was vain, and by the last of January, 1871, Paris was at the point of starvation, and was forced to capitulate.

The amazing exactions of the victorious Germans, in the huge indemnity they required, and their annexation of Alsace-Lorraine, have never been forgotten by France. The hates and fears and alliances which sprang up throughout Europe as a direct result of the Franco-Prussian war of 1870, are, together with the vengeful spirit of France, some of the most prominent causes in this terrific European conflagration of 1914.

Pretty Lively.

Miss Lamb, sister of Charles, the essayist, was fond of mity cheese, and on one occasion her brother was commissioned to procure a piece. When he had selected what he thought would do the shopman said, "Shall I pack it up, sir?"

"N-no, I—I th-thank y-you," stammered Lamb. "If—if you—you'll g-give me a—a string I'll—I'll lead it h-home."

Grenades From Aeroplanes.

Experiments with aeroplanes and grenades have been carried out by the Royal Flying Corps at Aldershot in the vicinity of Jubilee Hill, Long Valley. The grenades were fastened to steel rods, which were inserted in the barrel of an ordinary rifle and fired by the rifleman with the gun at his shoulder.

German Spies To Be Shot.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 7.—Two disguised German officers arrested yesterday at Ostend had in their possession extensive military notes and plans of great value. They are to be shot.

The anti-German feeling throughout Belgium has become intense and many German residents were arrested yesterday and charged with espionage.

Every German discovered anywhere in the city is brought before the police, who have considerable trouble in protecting the prisoners from attack by the excited crowds.

British India's wheat crop is estimated this year at 8,385,000 tons.

HEADS FRENCH ARMY.

Gen. Joffre Is In Command of the Republic's Entire Force.

PARIS, Aug. 7. — France's great army has been placed under the supreme command of Gen. Joseph Joffre, who enjoys great popularity with the men, as he does with the French nation generally. He is known as a man of strong will, and it is a common saying in the army that when Gen. Joffre has once made up his mind nothing will force him to change it. French military men express the fullest confidence in his skill.

Gen. Joffre is 62. He has been married ten years, but is childless. He is of medium height and stout, with a massive head, very fair hair, and thick drooping moustache. He is noted for his excellent horsemanship. He was trained as an engineer, and while on duty in Madagascar constructed the harbor of Diego Suarez, the principal one in the island.

The mobilization plans for the French army were drawn up by Gen. Joffre last April and the results of their execution have exceeded all expectations.

Children To Harvest Crops.

PARIS, Aug. 7. — Food remains plentiful in Paris and prices have only very slightly increased since the outbreak of war. Meat and vegetables are the principal commodities affected, as retailers find difficulty in bringing them from the central depots owing to all delivery wagons having been requisitioned for military purposes.

The problem of getting in the harvest has given much cause for thought to the French Ministry of Agriculture, which is considering a scheme for replacing the men who have joined the army by training all children from 10 to 16 years of age in field work, under the guidance of old people.

Captured By Swiss.

LONDON, Aug. 7. — A Central News despatch from Berne, Switzerland, yesterday states that a half squadron of German soldiers, in their efforts to escape the fierce attack of a French force, penetrated into Switzerland at Bournevessain, but weer immediately disarmed by the Swiss soldiery.

RESEARCH UNREWARDED.

Sir Ronald Ross Seeks Recognition of Great Work.

Of the great men who should receive reward for their services to mankind none are more deserving than the medical scientists.

Recently Sir Ronald Ross forwarded a petition to the Chancellor of the Exchequer asking the Imperial Parliament for some recognition of his discoveries for fighting malaria. His action has been endorsed by all right thinking men.

The medical man is placed in a very different position from that occupied by the engineer. Lord Kelvin's discoveries were of immense value to the world, but by patenting them he received a large revenue The same can be said of the discovery of wireless telegraphy and so forth. Medical men cannot act in that way and patent their discoveries, nor is it desirable that they should, for it would lead to quackery. The fact remains, however, that they spend an enormous amount of time on their investigations, make their results public, and get the credit of the discovery, but nothing further. What reward, for instance, has Sir David Bruce ever received for the investigations that cleared Malta of what till recently was known as "Malta Fever"? Sir Patrick Manson, again, who was the pioneer in connection with the mosquito and malaria by his researches on the way in which the filaria were spread by the mosquito in filariasis received no grant in recognition of the value of his work.

The value of Sir Ronald Ross's work extends far beyond India. The Panama Canal could never have been constructed if that work had not been done. The knowledge that the mosquito carried malaria led to the crusade against yellow fever, and the application of the results obtained enabled General Gorgas to make the Panama zone so healthy that the engineers could carry out their magnificent work.

The French engineers would have been quite capable of doing the engineering feat, but they lost 50,000 men while they were engaged on it, and had to abandon it, simply because their attempt was made before Sir Ronald Ross had done his work. For this reason one feels that the nation should look on his work as being of an exceptional character, and should recognize it. At present nothing is given. Everything is left to be done by the man personally, often at very considerable expense.

But the Colonial Office is beginning to adopt a rather different attitude, and some money is being set aside to send out commissions of inquiry and to enable investigations into the causes of disease to be undertaken. It should be remembered that discoveries of the sort that demand signal recognition from the nation are not many, the work done on sleeping sickness by Sir David Bruce, Dr. Haffkins, India, and Dr. Castellani having to be added to the other examples mentioned.

"The fact that there are no such rewards is having a very bad effect on medicine in this country, for the younger men will not undertake research," said an eminent medical man. "I have not given much consideration to the question as to what would be the best method for arranging that the rewards should be available, whether by Nobel prizes, by petitions to Parliament, or otherwise, but in the present case of Sir Ronald Ross I think that he is doing a public service in presenting a petition to Parliament on the same lines as those followed in the case of Jenner."

Argued Too Long.

"Why did you permit yourself to be drawn into a long argument with your assailant?" asked the policeman.

"A long dispute was just what I was trying to avoid when I called him a liar," explained the man on the hospital cot.—Buffalo Express.

A New Kind of Date.

Perhaps the last thing in the world over which the vagaries of fashion might be expected to exercise any influence is in regard to such an everyday practice as the style of dating letters. Yet even here fads and fancies have their way. A new fancy is said to be the elimination of the date of the month altogether, simply giving the day of the year. For instance, Aug. 1 would be represented by "213-1914," while for New Year's eve "365-1914" would be used.—London Globe.

THE SPORTING WORLD

ANOTHER DEFEAT FOR DE LAVAL BY THE RED CAPS

In Extra Innings, C.G.E. Nine Scored Three Runs and Held Their Opponents Scoreless

The Red Caps finally established their superiority over the De Laval nine by defeating them last evening at Riverside Park by 5-2 in a six-innings encounter. When these teams first met they played a tie, and the next time the Red Caps won, but the De Laval protested, and the game was ordered to be re-played, hence by winning last night the Red Caps won the game scheduled for July 8th.

The attraction was witnessed by a rather small crowd, most of whom were pulling for Jack Pilling's boys. Ernie Rahmel, the Red Cap hurler, allowed but two hits, while Mahoney of the De Laval was touched for four. The game was billed to go five innings, but at the end of the fifth the score was a tie, 2-2, and in the extra frame the C. G. E. crew notched three runs.

Quinlan handled the game to the satisfaction of all.

The play:

First Innings

Red Caps — Hayes, the first man up, walked. Rahmel fanned. Swanson popped to Grieves, and Primeau drove a fly to Mahoney.—No hits, runs, or errors.

De Laval — Callaghan got a life on Primeau's error, took second on the throw, and went to third on a passed ball. Kennealley fanned, and Carson rolled one to Rahmel, who threw home and got Callaghan. Fallon went out, short to first. — No runs, no hits, one error.

Second Innings.

Red Caps — Pilling went safe on Fallon's error. McDougal hit to pitcher, who threw him out at first. Pilling went to take third on the play, but was caught, first to third. Kendry went safe on English's error, but was caught stealing. — No runs, no hits, two errors.

De Laval — Taylor filed to Kendry. English was safe on Kendry's error. Pilling flied to Primeau, Grieves fanned, but went to first on Swanson's error. Mahoney hit to centre, scoring English, but Callaghan died on an easy roller to pitcher. —One run, one hit, two errors.

Third Innings.

Red Caps — Wing fanned. Flaherty went out, third to first, and Hayes missed three. — No runs, no hits, no errors.

De Laval — Kennealley popped to Kendry. Carson dropped a hit over third, for which Kendry made a good try. English went out, second to first. Carson scored when Kendry let Taylor's grounder get away from him. Taylor stole second, and went to third on Swanson's error, but English's best was a fly to Rahmel.— One run, one hit, two errors.

Fourth Innings.

Red Caps—Rahmel went out, English to Fallon. Swanson singled, stole second, and went to third when Primeau went out, second to first. Swanson scored on Pilling's hit over second. Pilling went to third when Callaghan misjudged McDougal's grounder, and scored on a passed ball. Kendry went out, second to first. — Two runs, two hits, one error.

De Laval— Pilling fanned. Grieves went out, Flaherty to Hayes. Mahoney fanned. — No runs, hits or errors.

Fifth Innings.

Red Caps — Wing went out, English to Fallon. Flaherty walked, as did Hayes. Rahmel flied to short, and Swanson hit to third, forcing Flaherty out.—No runs, hits, or errors.

De Laval — Callaghan filed to centre. Kennealley fanned, and Carson went out, pitcher to first.—No runs, hits, or errors.

Sixth Innings.

Red Caps — Primeau struck out. Pilling singled to left and stole second. McDougal singled, sending Pilling to third, and then stole second on the first pitched ball. Kendry struck out. Pilling scored and McDougal went to third on a passed ball. Then McDougal scored on a wild pitch by Mahoney. Wing walked, stole second and third, and scored when Taylor threw Flaherty's third strike high to first. Hayes went out, third to first. — Three runs, two hits, one error.

De Laval — Fallon walked, and stole second, but went out stealing third. Taylor fanned, but English got a life on Hayes' error, and stole second. Pilling brought the game to a close by flying to left.—No runs, no hits, one error.

BUT THEY HAD A GOOD TIME

Harvesters of Hair Mass Things up in Alleged Game of Ball

Left-handed barbers are said to be as scarce as left-handed monkey-wrenches, according to those who patronize the face-scraping and hair-harvesting shops, but if anyone had been at Riverside Park yesterday afternoon they would have noticed numerons of the port-side variety among the tonsorial fraternity. The game was between the married and single men of the trade, and the benedicts scored a win over the hopefuls by the close score of 27-17. It was a great game in which numerous frills were not introduced and numerous thrills eliminated. As handlers of the steel and scissors the barbers of this city have called upon their customers to take some awful chances, and in order to get rid of the chances they have received from the gang the barbers took them in yesterday's game. Hits were very numerous, while errors were in the majority, but every one had a good time, and that is what the game was staged for. "Buck" Quinlan served up the slants for the "marred" troupe and he uncorked the shampoo ball, which has the spitter faded like a quince in an orange field. He shaved it around the necks of the wife-hunters in great style, while the losers could do little with herpicide sprinkler. "Next" piped the umps as "Buck" mowed them down. In fact, that was about the only way "Buck" could be sure of a win, as his fielders fielded in a very sensational manner and uncorked some loop-the-loop stabs and some aerial throws which kept Firstbaseman Throop stretching like a bowl full of pulling taffy on Hallowe'en. Verily, gents, it was some game.

One of the strongest men on the single men's team was Algernon Snelgrove, who played third base for the wedded bliss brigade. Algernon poked the leather in good style, but he frankly admitted that he could not see the pill when it was hit toward his territory. Along about the second innings he proclaimed the neutrality of third base and thereafter refused to take part in the onslaught so far as the field was concerned. Gainey, behind the bat for the married gang, tried to "rub it in" on the umps, but his Royal Umpess of Petersky merely smiled like a child with an all-day sucker. For the single troupe Donoghue dished them up, but met with anti-brilliant success, while his team mates were on the same par The scorer ran out of lead pencils and is unable to give an official box score, but outside of about twenty-seven errors it was a good game.

After much engineering of facts and figures during which the adding machine played a prominent part owing to the largeness of the figures the box score has finally been struck off it shows 27 errors for the married brigade and 49 for the not yet but soon crowd. The horrible details follow :

COMMENT

As You Like It

THE SENATORS by winning yesterday's game from the Petes made their record for the last twenty-one games read, seventeen wins and four losses. "Shag" is certainly making a bid for the pennant but the London club will not relinquish its hold on first place without a fight. The Senators were extremely lucky to win three of their games against the Hamilton crew while London has had to come from behind or battle out its victories to the end. The Erie club has no chance for first place but may spill the beans between Ottawa and London while the Senators will have to hump some to get away with the series with the Petes both in Ottawa and on the home ground, next week.

THE MOST NOTICEABLE improvement among the International League clubs is that of the Providence crew. Coming from the second division Bill Donovan's Clams are now in third place, just eleven points behind Baltimore. The Clams have a look in for the flag and will make them all step hard to the wire before they are disposed of.

IN THE AMERICAN LEAGUE it looks like Connie Mack although Boston is playing great ball. Detroit seems to have been shaken off by the leaders while Washington with Walter Johnson pitching only fair ball has not a chance to cop the rag. With Johnson in last season's form the Senators would have been in the thickest of the hunt. Frank Chance is still fighting along in seventh place. His Yanks have improved considerable and may yet climb into fifth place. The St. Louis Browns which cut such a figure in the early stages are slowly slipping back to where all St. Louis teams belong.

THE BOSTON BRAVES are comingLing Hi! Ho! Hi! Ho! John J. McGraw is worrying over the showing made by the Stalling's crew. The Braves have climbed from the bottom to fourth place and are within striking distance of Giants. Part of the climb was made without the services of Evers who was out of the game or about ten days which fact makes it all the more remarkable. Chicago is still chasing the Giants while the much despised Cardinals are still in third place. Herzog's "Dutch company" from Cinney are receiving as many set backs as the Kaiser and are now in sixth position.

A BLANKET would cover the first four in the Federal League. and Chicago, Baltimore, Brooklyn and Indianapolis all have a chance to cop the bacon.

THE SCOUTS overlooked a great bet yesterday when they failed to get in on the barber's clash. Some real sensational stuff was pulled and for old gents the married bunch looked like real come backs. The rules committee could have received some tips for revisement of the code One barber said he was sure there was a rule allowing a man to over run second or third

"SHAG" HAD HIS FINGER in the schedule pie again Leave it to the king pin financier of the league. The Senators have 21 more games at home out of the thirty or so which will be played. Of course if a team is fighting it out for the pennant those home gates on the home stretch look good and then again a team which has 21 out of 30 home stretch games at home has the edge on his less unfortunate rival. Since the Canadian League was organized the schedule has been grossly unfair to some of the clubs Brantford and Hamilton are playing another home and home series which is about the 'steenth since the season opened. The Petes have been asked to hop to London, back home again, then to St. Thomas and then to London or jumps of such a nature on a few occasions this year. At the first of the season Peterboro jumped to London, from here, then to Ottawa from London, home here for three games and back to London. We cannot find any such foolish jumps for teams owned by the schedule managers. President Fitzgerald should get all his data together and either make the schedule himself or have some uninterested party do the work. Surely by this time, J. P. knows what would be best without letting "Shag" run rough shod as he has over some of the umpires.

TWO GAMES IN THE MERCANTILE

Double Bill at Riverside Saturday Afternoon

Two games in the Mercantile League at Riverside tomorrow afternoon promise to attract a good sized crowd as there is great rivalry among the clubs at the present time. The first game will bring together the De Laval, the supreme kickers of the league and the William Hamilton Clubs. The Hams are out after revenge and say they will get it in large quantities. The second game will be between the Bankers and the Printers and the type slingers are anxious to slip one over on the alleged financiers so a good battle should result.

YOUNGSTER HAD BETTER OF VETERAN

The Senators Scored Victory Against Schettler

Louie Schettler and Roberts staged a pitcher's battle at Ottawa yesterday and the Toronto cast off had a little the best of the argument. Each team bunched hits in the opening innings and the game was won and lost in that frame. Belting or Tracey will work for the Petes today.

At Ottawa—The Senators took the first game from Peterboro, Roberts holding the Petes helpless after the first inning. In the first a single by Welsh and Dolan's three-bagger. followed by Bullock's error on the throw gave the visitors their two runs. The champs came back with two singles, a three-bagger by Rogers, which with Fox's error, a passed ball and walk to Dolan, gave them three runs. In the third a walk to Shag, his steal, a sacrifice and Dolan's single scored another. After that Schettler held the Senators well in hand, and neither team had much chance to score. The score :

The Men of the Northern Zone

Oh, we are the men of the Northern Zone.
Shall a bit be placed in our mouth ?
If ever a Northerner lost his throne,
Did the conqueror come from the South ?
Nay, nay—and the answer blent
In chorus is southward sent.
Since when has a Southerner's conquering steel
Hewed out in the North a throne ?
Since when has the Southerner placed his heel
On the men of the Northern Zone?

Our hearts are as free as the rivers that flow
To the seas where the North Star shines ;
Our lives are as free as the breezes that blow
Through the crests of our native pines.
We never will bend the knee
We'll always and aye be free ;
For liberty reigns in the land of the leal ;
Our brothers are 'round her throne ;
Southerner never shall place his heel
On the men of the Northern Zone.

Or, shall we shatter our ancient name,
And lower our patriot crest ;
And leave a heritage dark with shame
To the infant upon the breast ?
Nay, nay—and the answer blent
In chorus is southward sent ;
'Ye claim to be free—and so are we—
Let your fellow freemen alone ;
For the Southerner never shall place his heel
On the men of the Northern Zone.

Shall the mothers that bore us bow the head,
And blush for degenerate sons ?
Are the patriot fires gone out and and dead ?
Ho ! brothers stand to the guns !
Let the flag be nailed to the mast
Defying the coming blast ;
For Canada's sons are true as steel,
Their mettle is muscle and bone.
The Southerner never shall place his heel
On the men of the Northern Zone.

Oh, we are the men of the Northern Zone,
Where the maples their branches toss ;
The Great Bear rides in his state alone,
Afar from the Southern Cross.
Our people shall aye be free,
They never will bend the knee;
For this is the land of the true and leal,
Where freedom is bred in the bone,
The Southerner never shall place his heel
On the men of the Northern Zone.
—The Khan.

Treaties in War Time

New York Herald.

Germany's violation of the neutrality of Luxemburg and of Belgium seems to have shocked many estimable persons who have been placing faith in the efficacy of treaties, conventions, and other types of international agreements. In time of peace these are well enough, for they make excellent reading and are, perhaps, helpful in furthering hope of an approaching millennium.

But when a nation is satisfied that its involvement in war with another nation is inevitable, these engagements are not worth the paper they are written on, nor will they ever be so long as self-preservation is the dominant instinct of nations and races of men.

In the "Book of War," the oldest treatise on the "gentle art" extant, the Chinese strategist laid down the principle that victory is likely to be with the army that strikes the first blow. When Japan struck Russia before war had been formally declared there went up from all quarters of the world a cry of criticism, but Japan came out of it a victor. The Kaiser, convinced that war was inevitable, struck, and is striking. And neither pledges of neutrality nor treaties nor conventions are permitted to stand in the way. As it is with those in existence, so it may be remarked in passing, and in no spirit of captious criticism, would it be with Mr. Bryan's "breathing spell" treaties.

It may be that some day in the far distant future civilization will have succeeded in wiping out the human instinct of self-preservation, but evidently that time has not yet come.

NEEDLECRAFT.

The latest bath slippers are of white Turkish toweling. They are embroidered in blue in a French knot design.

Long, pointed bags of white ratine show a design of blue French knots. Women can easily embroider one of these.

The dainty Mosaic embroidery is still popular. Its airiness and its pretty colorings as well as by the ease with which it may be worked recommend it to women.

Fillet lace is the thing nowadays. Baby irish may be bought for a song, but fillet is growing gradually more expensive every day. Even the tiniest medallion of it makes a gown, while for the table it is being much sought after by women with long purses.

When watering a garden remember that a thorough soaking is better than frequent sprinklings.

REUNION AFTER EIGHTEEN YEARS OF SEPARATION

Springfield, August 7. — Eighteen years ago Mr. and Mrs. John Deforge, then living in North Adams, sent their nine years old daughter, Bertha, to Cape Cod, to live with an aged couple who had taken a great fancy to the little miss. On the day after her departure her sister, Elizabeth, aged 14 years, left home to work in another city. From the day of Bertha's departure until last Tuesday the sisters had seen nothing of each other.

Bertha had lived on the Cape since the time she left home. In 1913 she married Whillis Moody in Pocassett. Their present home is in West Falmouth. Meantime Elizabeth travelled throughout the length and the breadth of the United States, working in different cities and touching 22 States in the course of her wanderings. She was married five years ago to Robert Guiltanan in Saratoga Springs and they come to Springfield a little more than three years ago and are now living at 558 Main Street.

Mrs. Moody and her parents were led to believe that the sister had died about 10 years ago. For years they wrote to different cities, seeking some trace of Elizabeth Deforge, now Mrs. Guiltanan, but no trace of her was found. Meantime the parents moved to Burlington, Vt., so that when Elizabeth made efforts to find her parents she could get no trace of them.

Mr. Guiltanan is employed at the Hendee factory in this city and a little more than a week ago one of his fellow-workers who came from Greenfield told him that he knew a young man in the Franklin county town named Deforge. This set Mr. Guiltanan to thinking and he and Mrs. Guiltanan took a trip to Greenfield a few days later. After considerable search they found Deforge and Mrs. Guiltanan discovered he was a brother. There was a jyoful reunion there.

Mrs. Guiltanan then learned that her sister, now Mrs. Moody, was living to West Falmouth. She sent a telegram saying that she would go to West Falmouth and last Tuesday there was great joy in the Moody home. Now Mrs. Guiltanan and Mrs. Moody together with her son, are in Springfield, at 558 Main Street. In about a week there will be great rejoicing in the home of the parents in Burlington, Vt., for the lost daughter will go there to see them.

"I can hardly believe it is true," said Mrs. Moody in talking of the reunion.

"When that telegram came to me in my home, I hardly knew what to do. It was like a voice from the grave, for 10 years I had thought my sister dead."

"It is hard for me to realize that I have found my sister and that I shall see my parents," said Mrs. Guiltanan.

"Three years ago I was in Springfield and stopped at the Worthy, but had no idea my sister was living nearly within a stone's throw of me." Mrs. Moody remarked. "If I had only known," said Mrs. Guiltanan.

Then these united sisters smiled in each other's eyes, each clasped the other's hand, as if for fear they might again be separated. But there will be many joyous reunions of the sisters in the years to come, but no home will be happier than that of the parents in Burlington next week when Mrs. Guiltanan and her sister arrive there. Mr. and Mrs. Deforge have been informed that the long-lost daughter has been found and they are eagerly awaiting her coming.

Repairing Fractured Hearts by the Dozen.

Thirty-one patients in a Russian hospital have recovered from stab wounds of the heart!

Dr. Zlider says the patients were put under the influence of ether very soon after the injury, part of the chest wall was removed, the heart lifted from its bed and the stitches quickly introduced between pulsations. The bony chest wall over the heart was not put back in place, that organ being left covered only by skin and muscle. This was done to give the heart room to expand and to prevent adhesions from embarrassing the heart's action. Several of the patients have resumed their usual employment.

The probable reason for the success of the experiment was prompt and rapid operation.

th RED COATS RESPOND TO CALL

Scenes of Enthusiasm at Armories Where Company Captains Take Names of Soldiers of the King

Peterborough men showed their mettle last evening when, on the occasion of the parade of the 57th Regiment, more than 150 members of the regiment pleaded, asked and urged that they be placed on the list among those who were willing to go to the front to bite the shot and shell of the enemy. The enthusiasm displayed in the Armouries both by the citizens and the men of the regiment was beyond description. Cheer after cheer greeted the companies as they marched by, to the rumble of the drums and the call of the bugles. Considering that orders were only issued yesterday for the parade the turnout was magnificent, which is only an indication of the earnestness shown by the men of this country, English, Irish, Scotch, French and Canadian, to go to the aid of the Motherland, the land of the free and the advocate of democracy.

The applications for enlistment were made to the officers of each regiment. The volunteers were given the preference, but after all the names had been handed in, several others applied to Col. Clegg and asked leave to be taken along. One Englishman approached the Colonel and gave him a great argument as to why he should be accepted. The man was more than forty-five years of age, and it was with reluctance that the Colonel turned him away. "I can fight even if I am more than forty-five. I want to fight. My country calls me, and the freedom of the world depends on British and French success," said the man, who was only forty-six, as he argued to be taken on. When finally refused, he turned away with tears in his eyes.

The men who volunteered were quickly brought into the officers' headquarters, examined, and either accepted or dismissed. The lot could not be examined last night, and the examination will be continued today.

10th Brigade.

Recruiting for the 10th Brigade of artillery also took place. Lt.-Col. Young had a fine response. Owing to government instructions, the exact number cannot be given out. The 10th Brigade includes the 14th and 24th Batteries. Assisting Col. Young is Major Hall. Recruiting for the artillery will take place again this afternoon at two o'clock. "Colonel Hughes ordered us to be shy on giving out information," said Colonel Young.

Activity This Morning.

This morning the armouries was a scene of activity. Numerous men who volunteered last night were on hand prepared to face the medical examination which Dr. Eastwood is putting them through. The required height is 5 feet 3 inches, and when men are just that height they have to be very good in all other points of the examination. The armouries will be open all day for the examination of those desiring to join the overseas contingent, and it will open to-morrow at 10 o'clock, and will remain open until further notice, for the acceptance of volunteers and the examination of those already enlisted.

None of the local officers placed their names on the list last night except Major Bennett. The other members of the staff are expected to offer their services as soon as the ranks are creditably filled. The response has been very gratifying to Col. Clegg.

Col. Clegg could not say when the volunteers would be ordered away, as he has not received any orders, other than those instructing him to be prepared.

Supply of Food by Canada for Fighting Line

Mr. Burnham, M.P., received an immediate answer from the Prime Minister thanking him for forwarding the Resolution of the Peterborough Trades and Labor Council with regard to the supply of food by Canada to those on the fighting line. The Prime Minister states that the Government is giving its earnest attention to the suggestion and he expressed his gratification for it. This patriotic and excellent suggestion coming from the Peterborough Trades and Labor Council received as it has been evidently eagerly and gratefully by the Prime Minister shows that people may well have ideas and present them. Sometimes ideas may have already been provided for. Sometimes they may not be possible. Sometimes, as in this case, they may be amongst the gems of the occasion. It is a great honour to the Peterborough Trades and Labor Council both to have made the suggestion and to have had it received in the prompt and grateful manner indicated.

Captain Kendall is Again in Limelight

London, Aug. 8.—Captain Kendall, commander of the Empress of Ireland at the time of the disaster, has again proved himself to be equal to an emergency.

The Canadian Pacific S. S. Montrose was laid up at Antwerp when an urgent message came to the London office that she be manned and used to bring away over four hundred British refugees. Kendall picked out four engineers who had shore-leave, took them to Antwerp by the last regular boat, obtained a scratch crew and stokers, then sailed.

He piloted the boat made famous as the scene of Crippen's arrest, through miles in the Channel, until a British torpedo-boat destroyer picked her up. The latter then escorted the Montrose to the mouth of the Thames, and the passengers landed at Gravesend this afternoon.

Captain Kendall refused to talk of his experiences.

A GOLD MEDAL PRESENTED TO GEO. W. ROGERS

On Tuesday evening last the citizens of Frankford gathered in Albert Park to present Mr. George N. Rogers with a gold medal in recognition of his brave attempt to save the life of Mr. Everet Ketcheson, who was drowned in the river on 11th of July.

It will be remembered that Mr. Ketcheson went in bathing and waded into a deep hole, and being unable to swim, was drowned.

Mr. Rogers from a distance saw the commotion among the onlookers and ran to see what was the cause, and at once stripped and swam out and dived three times, and at last brought up the body inside of ten minutes after Mr. Ketcheson went down. Owing to heart failure it was found impossible to revive him.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. B. B. Ostrom, postmaster, who, after a few eulogistic remarks about the late Mr. Ketcheson and Mr. Rogers, called upon Dr. Malone to make the presentation.

Dr. Malone complimented Mr. Rogers on the brave attempt which he had made to save the life of Mr. Ketcheson. He said that there was little doubt that Mr. Ketcheson would have been alive to-day were it not that he had had an affectation of the heart, which had prevented him from being resuscitated. He spoke of the high opinion in which Mr. Rogers was held by all who knew him. He was a man who was kind and gentle, but when occasion called was firm and resolute. Such a man was an inspiration to the whole community. Dr. Malone also spoke in a kindly manner of the foreigners who worked on the canal under Mr. Rogers' superintendence, and who had shown their high sense of appreciation of a noble act in subscribing so liberally to the purchase of the medal. Some people thought that because they were not of our own nation that they had no appreciation of noble deeds; but the speaker knew from personal contact with them that they had many fine traits in their characters.

After the presentation was made, three cheers were given for Mr. Rogers, and the whole assembly sang, "For he's a jolly good fellow."

Dr. Simmons was also called upon and made a few remarks, complimenting Mr. Rogers and also complimenting the foreign element among them, and called upon the assembly to give three cheers for the Italians, Roumanians and Polish workmen, who had been so generous in their subscriptions to the medal.

THE NEXT MOVE IS MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL BOARD

Monaghan Sewer Proposition is Still an Unsolved Puzzle — City Dads Meet

(a) The city to do the necessary excavation work and laying of pipes, etc., with as little delay as possible, the roads to be in as good condition as before, and to indemnify the township and its ratepayers against all loss or damage which may be occasioned by the use of the streets.

(b) If at any future time the township should reasonably require the substitution of some other street or the raising or lowering of an existing sewer, this might be dealt with by some tribunal to be agreed upon. We would suggest the County Judge.

(c) The township or any ratepayer to have the right of connection with the sewer on reasonable terms.

(d) All expenses of, and incidental to, the present application to be borne by the city.

The above comprises the proposition offered the City Council by the law firm of Peck, Kerr & McElderry, solicitors for the township of North Monaghan, in connection with the proposed sewer extensions through that township

Accompanying this proposition was a deputation or Mr. F. D. Kerr, of the above law firm, Reeve Howden, Acting Municipal Clerk W. H. Bradburn, and several councillors. The Mayor explained to them that the Solicitor agreed with the terms of Clause a, but the other three met with their reverse decision.

Clause b is almost an engineering impossibility, and hence the city would certainly not agree with it, while the phrase "on reasonable terms" in Clause c was far too indefinite.

Ald. Johnston thought that the complications should be straightened out by lawyers and engineers, but the Mayor held that since one party had offered their proposition and the other refused to accept a part of it, the proper people to settle it was the Provincial Board of Health.

After a great deal of discussion, during which Ald. Green suggested that North Monaghan build a sewer of their own and pay the city a certain amount for carrying the sewage away, it was finally decided that the city and the township of North Monaghan be represented at the meeting of the Provincial Board of Health in Toronto on Tuesday next and the matter be settled there

To Be Four Feet Wide

Mr. Thomas Barrie, at present erecting a large store on George street, waited on the City Council and asked permission to place his prism lights on the outside of the sidewalk. By doing so, these lights would be four feet wide, instead of five. The request was granted.

Sugar Supplies Ample For Canada

Mail and Empire.

Mr. Huntley Drummond, president of the Redpath Sugar Refinery, Ltd., on being interviewed at Montreal said: "There is no necessity whatever for alarm as to sugar supplies here and anyone who orders a barrel of sugar for 'storage purposes' besides having his work for his pains merely bids up the price for himself and others."

"There are sufficient stocks," he said, "in Canada to supply all legitimate needs of the country and the refiners do not propose to allow speculators to unduly enhance the price.

"It is the duty of every good citizen to keep his head at present as any other course invites unnecessary suffering and cost. Let me repeat, there is sugar enough for everyone and no need whatever at present to pay an increased price, whatever the future may hold in store for us."

PETERBOROUGH, SATURDAY, AUGUST 8, 1914

STAGES IN THE EUROPEAN STORM.

THE SPEED with which events have moved in the last fortnight has amazed the world, but the stages are clearly marked.

When Austria annexed Bosnia and Herzegovina, there were complications and talk of war. The storm, however, blew over, like a passing cloud, doubtless because the diplomats were not ready.

Then, a short time ago, big headlines announced that a Servian student had assassinated the hope of the Austrian monarchy, the heir and his wife. The public have become accustomed to assassinations, thought it merely a gruesome piece of news, moralized a bit on the nemesis of the House of Hapsburg, and prepared to forget all about it.

Out of a clear sky came the Austrian demands on Servia, and Servia's reply, which agreed to all the demands save one, and offered that one to be decided by arbitration. This one request was that Austrian officers should be on the board of inquiry into the agitation in Servia against Austria. Servia refused to grant this, but would have submitted it to arbitration. Then Austria declared war on Servia.

Russia at this point intervened as the ally of Servia. She asked Austria to give a guarantee that she would not annex Servian territory in the event of victory, if Russia refrained from engaging in hostilities. Austria refused, backed up by Germany. Russia mobilized her army and navy. Germany then demanded that Russia stop mobilising. Russia refused, but offered not to move her forces if Germany would agree to a conference. Germany not only refused, but declared war on Russia.

France and England were backers of Russia and guarantors of the integrity of Belgium and Luxemberg, but were not, at this point, bound to support Russia. Germany then invaded France without declaring war, as well as Belgium and the Luxemberg, thus violating her own written word. That necessitated France and England taking up arms against Germany, who at once declared war on England.

So there you are, and a jolly good war is started.

Trace these steps back, and, behind every one there looms the sinister shadow of Berlin's mad emperor. Had Germany said the word, Austria would have been satisfied with Servia's answer. Even farther back had not Germany supported Austria, there would have been no annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Germany has been the disturbing element at every stage leading to this colossal struggle, with its gigantic waste of men and money. That is why the public opinion of the world condemns Germany and hopes for its defeat.

THE NAVIES IN THE NORTH SEA.

It is evident that Great Britain places her reliance on her great navy, and a big battle in the North Sea may be looked for at any moment. The British fleet in the North Sea is superior to the German, and if the Germans show a desire to fight, the British will likely give them battle.

Great Britain has 29 battleships, 4 battle cruisers, and 12 armoured cruisers in the North Sea, as against 25 battleships and 4 cruisers possessed by Germany. This fight in the North Sea will largely be determined by the super-dreadnoughts with their tremendous guns. The first Dreadnought launched by Great Britain in 1906 saw the commencement of the all-big-gun ship carrying ten 12-inch guns, eight of which could be fired on either broadside. Such a ship was protected with 11-inch armour amidships, and around her turrets, and was able to steam at the rate of twenty-two knots. The super-Dreadnoughts have a speed of from 28½ to 29½ knots per hour, are fifty per cent. heavier than the original Dreadnoughts, 170 feet longer, and in a race from Liverpool to New York could give the original Dreadnought twenty-four hours' lead and overtake her. A broadside from a super-Dreadnought weighs in the neighborhood of eight tons, the 15-inch guns mounted on these ships being able to hurl a projectile weighing 1,910 pounds a distance of eight miles. These projectiles, weighing almost a ton, will go through 27 inches of wrought iron at a distance of eight miles. It is upon her super-Dreadnoughts with their marvellous equipment that Great Britain depends, although in this respect she is not as superior to Germany as her friends would desire.

The following table shows the strength of the British, German, French, Russian and Austria-Hungary nations:

		Great Britain	Germany	France	Russia	Aust.-Hung.
1. Capital ships	(a)	52	19	17	9	4
	(b)	10	7	..	4	..

2. Cruisers	(a)	9	2	..	1	..

1. Capital Ships (a) Modern ships of 15,000 tons or over. (b) Battle cruisers. (c) All other battle craft.
2. Cruisers. (a) Ships mounting 9-2 inch guns or over. (b) Ships of 6,000 tons or over not included in (a). (c) All other heavy protected cruisers.
3. Light Cruisers. (a) Any armored cruiser not included in Class 2. (b) Any protected cruiser not included in Class 2. (c) All other cruisers.
4. Destroyers. (a) Ocean-going craft of over 500 tons. (b) All other destroyers.

Note.—Torpedo gunboats and torpedo boats are excluded as belonging to obsolescent types, though there are still many which might render useful service.

THE FIRST ENCOUNTER IN THE AIR.

THE FIRST CONTEST in the air has not shown that air craft are well adapted to battles. Aviator Garros performed a feat of almost incredible reckless daring. In driving his machine straight into the gas bag of a great German dirigible he accomplished the destruction of the German air machine, together with the twenty-five men it carried, but at the cost of his own life. If such a victory is to be won every time at such a cost, it is prohibitive. Defeat could scarcely be less costly.

This first encounter is noteworthy in showing the bitter spirit that animates the French against the Germans. If such a hatred extends thoroughly to the rank and file, we may expect battles the like of which has not yet been seen, for stubbornness in fighting.

Undoubtedly this great war will develop the practice of fighting in the air, but, as for the efficiency of present air craft, the test has yet to be made.

First Offence Overlooked.

Colonel the Honourable Sam Hughes is a simple but hearty eater. An old soldier, he makes his meal off the first dish that is set before him. This conversation was overheard at the Rideau Club:

"William," said the War Minister to the waiter, "what did I have for breakfast this morning?"

"You had six fried eggs and a piece of toast, sir."

"Well, I wish you to tell the cook that of those six eggs five were bad. I have eaten them this time, but don't let it occur again."

Will the Alliance Speak?
Montreal Mail.

A member of the Dominion Alliance asked Mr. J. H. Roberts, through the Mail, some pointed questions, which should be answered. As long as Mr. Roberts poses as a publicist, and parades his office in the public prints, he should heed queries which strike at the details of his conduct as it concerns the public. If the statement is correct that Mr. Roberts' reports as secretary have been intermittent or worse — one in five years — the subscribing public have a clear license to ask for further details.

Shades of Holbein.

A Montreal millionaire, whose knowledge of art is even more recent than his money, returned from Europe the other day and was describing his wanderings to a group of friends.

"Yes," he said, "we visited most of the famous galleries."

"Did you see any of Holbein's work?" asked one of the group.

"Holbein! Holbein!" said the millionaire, tapping his forehead. "Oh, yes! I remember. We came across him in London. He built the Holbein Viaduct, didn't he?"

They Certainly Will.
St. John Times.

Great Britain will be drawn into war the moment the German sword comes out of the scabbard. Canada, an integral and loyal part of the Empire, will instantly accept the full measure of responsibility in the expenditure of blood and treasure. Our country's duty and its honour, and the call of the blood, demand such a declaration from our people, and they will be found more than equal to the obligaton. War is to be lamented and to be avoided so long as it can be avoided with honour—but no longer. When the British Lion moves by field and by flood to meet the challenge of the foe the Lion's whelps must keep step. And they will.

The World War.
From Tennyson's "Locksley Hall."

For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the Vision of the world, and all the wonder that could be;

Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;

Heard the heavens fill with shouting and there rain'd a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue;

Far along the world-wide whisper of the south-wind rushing warm,
With the standards of the peoples plunging thro' the thunder-storm;

Till the war-drum throbb'd no longer, and the battle-flags were furl'd
In Parliament of man, the Federation of the world.

The Great Emancipation.
Toronto World.

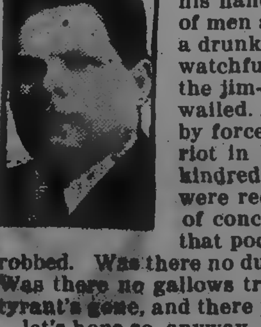
The Kaiser believes and consecrates his best energy to the end that Germany ought to be highly organized industrially, educationally and economically, in order that the military machine of which he is the hereditary, and he believes himself to be the divine head, may be further strengthened and organized in its efficiency for human slaughter.

The people of the British Empire have got past all that; and we think and try to live up to the idea that a country and a nation ought to be organized, educated and reared in religion, in order to improve the lot of the millions of our race who find themselves submerged by centuries of mis-rule under these self-constituted sons of the Almighty!

If one of these great machines can be smashed in Europe it means a new era for mankind and a New Christ. The mass of the people of Germany are ready for the Year of Jubilee if it can be brought about. We have no quarrel with the German people. But apparently in no way can the change come but by war. It may be the unwished-for destiny of Britain to bring it about. If so, it is our destiny, too, and we must not flinch from it.

But if, by the aid of Britain's ships and her navy, by her army and by the help of her sons in the great dominions, even the German navy can be smashed, we must all take our share and help to smash it forever. For years now, we have been menaced by the peril of these fighting machines. The people, under them, if given clearly to know what we have at heart—their liberation, as well as ours—will help in the work. It is the Last and the Greatest Emancipation.

WATCHFUL WAITING
By Walt Mason



The Huerta reign is done, and watchful waiting won. The crazy tyrant hung to office long, and clung, with equal strength and zeal, to gin and lemon peel. The symbol of his cause a pocket corkscrew was; a bottle in his hand, he ruled his bleeding land. What sort of men are they who'd tolerate the sway of such a drunken freak? Are they insane or weak? But watchful waiting won, and toward the rising sun the jim-jim despot sailed, and justice must have wailed. All loaded down with wealth he'd swiped by force and stealth, he sailed across the sea to riot in Paree, or booze in London slums, with kindred thirsty bums. The man whose hands were red with blood of countless dead, the man of concrete heart, was suffered to depart from that poor land he jobbed, and harried, rent, and robbed. Was there no dungeon deep, where slimy reptiles creep? Was there no gallows tree or ax for such as he? Ah, well, the tyrant's gone, and there perhaps will dawn a brighter, better day—let's hope so, anyway. Peace has an inning now—let's hope so, anyhow. But should the dove depart, and should the fireworks start, with bloodshed as before, we'll watch and wait some more.

FOR SALE

Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald is offering for sale some beautiful Building Lots on Benson and Geraldine Avenues.

This property lies within two minutes' walk of the Street Railway and within ten minutes' walk of the heart of the City. The City water, gas, light and sewer service are installed, the property already being completely surrounded by beautiful homes. The site is an ideal one, with a gentle southeasterly slope, and being considerably elevated above the city and not in the immediate vicinity of any manufacturing industries. The air is always pure, healthy and invigorating. Nearly all the lots are already beautifully wooded with foreign and domestic shade trees, and for anyone contemplating the erection of a home, there are certainly no lots in the city that offer equal advantages.

Copies of Registered Plan No. 149, which covers the property, may be seen and all other information may be had at the offices of Mr. R. J. Kidd, J. T. O'Connell & Co'y, C. J. Carroll & Co'y, also at the office of the owner, Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald, Ontario Land Surveyor, 435 George St. 'Phone 385.

A Legend of Switzerland

By F. A. MITCHEL

In those days when the confederated states of Switzerland were fighting to free themselves from Rudolph, Duke of Hapsburg, whose descendants now sit on the throne of Austria, four cantons, Lucerne, Schwyz, Uri and Unterwalden, formed the original nucleus of the Swiss republic. Now, there was a time when both Rudolph and the four cantons were anxious to form an alliance with Zurich.

The heads of the four cantons got together and sent a spy to Rudolph's court with a view to heading him off in his negotiations with Zurich. The name of this man was Thorwald, and he took with him his daughter, Anna. The two settled themselves at the base of Rudolph's castle and waited an opportunity to make his acquaintance. Anna was fond of painting and occupied herself sketching the Austrian scenery about her. One day while she was sitting on a rock just beneath the base of the duke's castle painting the valley below Rudolph rode by and, seeing the maiden at work, stopped to look at what was on her canvas. So pleased was he that he bought her picture and gave her orders for others. Thus did Thorwald through Anna gain access to the duke.

Thorwald wormed himself into the confidence of Rudolph, pretending that, though a Swiss by birth, he was an Austrian in feeling. He endeavored to persuade the duke to send him on a mission to Zurich for the purpose of persuading the authorities to submit themselves to the house of Hapsburg. But Rudolph was too shrewd to trust any but one Austrian born on such an important mission and sent one of his tried ministers, Count Rapperswill.

Count Rapperswill was a soldier as well as a diplomat and in one of his battles had lost an eye, which had been taken out of its socket. Thorwald no sooner heard that the count was to go to Zurich than he began to think how he could cause his mission to result in failure. Meeting Rapperswill, he asked him why he did not wear a glass eye in the empty socket. The count replied that he had tried to find an eye that would match the natural one, but had failed. Thorwald told him that if he would give his daughter Anna a glass eye and sit for her to paint it he would guarantee that she would do the work to perfection. To this the count gladly agreed.

The next day he appeared at Thorwald's lodgings with one of the artificial eyes he had discarded and asked Anna to paint it to match his natural eye. Anna did so, but was not satisfied with her work till the count had given her a number of sittings. The truth is her father had instructed her to put off finishing her work till the count was ready to set off for Zurich. Rapperswill was delighted with the eye as it was and begged for it, but received it only at the last moment.

Count Rapperswill had scarcely departed before Thorwald and Anna set out in great haste for Lucerne, and Thorwald told the governors of the four cantons to send an ambassador at once to Zurich to meet and defeat if possible the one sent by the Duke of Hapsburg. Thorwald could not go himself, for he would be recognized by Rapperswill. So one Thunwalder was sent at Thorwald's suggestion, not because of his shrewdness, but because he possessed a very amiable countenance.

The two diplomats arrived at Zurich at the same time, and a meeting was called of the government authorities to hear their arguments and decide between them. Rapperswill with true Austrian arrogance claimed to speak first and last, and the amiable Thunwalder assented.

Count Rapperswill was an admirable speaker and presented his case remarkably well. But he had not been speaking long before his auditors noticed a very crafty look in one of his eyes This naturally prejudiced them against him, and the longer he spoke—his crafty eye giving a crafty interpretation to everything he said—the greater grew the prejudice.

When he had finished the opening address and Thunwalder arose, the envoy of the confederates being a very tall man, the audience expected to hear him bellow like a bull. Instead, he spoke with a soft voice and great complaisance. He had scarcely opened his mouth before he won the entire confidence of his hearers, and when he sat down he was greeted with a round of applause.

The Austrian ambassador, at a loss to know why he was making a failure at the hands of one who made no effective argument, arose to finish with a determination to meet Thunwalder's amiability in kind. He spoke with frankness and a great regard for the Swiss people and their interests That crafty eye belied him. It seemed to those who saw and heard his voice that he meant the opposite of every word he spoke. When he had finished he was greeted with a grim silence.

The four cantons had won, and Zurich entered the confederation.

Thorwald was made a baron, and his daughter, who had put the crafty look in the artificial eye, was presented with a thousand florins and voted the freedom of Lucerne.

This episode in the formation of the Swiss confederation is not mentioned in history, but there is no historical reference to the legend of William Tell.

Butchers' Common.

William, Earl of Warren, in the time of King John, while standing upon the castle walls saw two bulls fighting in the castle meadow till all the butcher dogs pursued one of the maddened bulls quite through the town. The sight pleased the earl so much that he gave the castle meadows, where the duel of the bulls began, for a common to the butchers of the town, after the first grass was mowed, on condition that they should find a mad bull the day six weeks before Christmas day for the continuance of that sport forever.—London Standard.

MAY TAKE OVER N.T.R.

Government Needs Levis-Moncton Line For Transport.

It Is the Only All-Canadian Road Beside the I. C. R. and Cabinet Is Considering Move — Canadian Contingent Likely To Go Straight to the Front — Men's Families Will Be Provided For.

OTTAWA, Aug. 8. — The Government has under consideration, it is understood, a proposal that it should take over from the contractors the eastern section of the National Transcontinental from Levis to Moncton and equip and operate it. The reason given for this proposal is that the C.P.R. could not handle any troops or war supplies sent down to the Maritime Provinces since its line runs through the State of Maine, and the United States as a neutral country could not allow it. This would put the whole traffic on the Intercolonial in addition to its regular business and it is represented that the I. C. R. might not be able to stand the strain. The taking over the eastern section of the N. T. R. it is urged would solve the whole difficulty. The contractors of the eastern section, it is said, would be glad to see the suggestion adopted.

When Parliament meets in special session on Aug. 18 one of the questions to be seriously considered will be the provision for the men who go to the front, and who may be incapacitated in any way, as well as for the families of the men who are incapacitated or killed. This is a matter that many men are compelled to take into account when they think of enlisting, and there is every reason to believe that Parliament will make full provision so that those who go forth to fight for their country will not need to worry about what will happen to those dependent on them if they do not return.

Recruiting is in full swing to-day all over Canada. In addition to the Canadians who are volunteering, applications have been received from many British army officers who cannot get passages home and would join the Canadian contingent.

The arrangements for transportation of troops to Quebec are not completed, but officials of the railways are here now and no difficulty is feared in this. The railways had a splendid practice in June in mobilizing the 13,000 men who came to the Petawawa camp.

The Militia Department in order to keep in touch with all the war news received through the press has subscribed to the Associated Press and gets its full news service.

The wireless station has been moved from Petawawa and placed on top of the Militia Department building. The Department is now in direct communication with the stations down the gulf and in the Maritime Provinces.

The announcement that it is the intention of the British War Office to send the Canadian contingent to the front has tended not one whit to dampen the ardor of the members of the Ottawa corps. Enrolment of the various corps began last night and there was a steady stream of young men registering their names with the attesting officers of the various local regiments.

The German consuls in Canada have been given 48 hours to leave the country. The reason is that they were used to get their reservists to return to Germany and they could also send out important information. The Austrian consuls are in the same position. Canadian citizens acting as agents for these countries are not forced to leave.

Steps will be taken to see no trouble results from the assembling or passage of bodies of reservists in the west. While no cause has yet appeared to fear any disturbances all necessary precautions are being taken.

The men of the Canadian contingent will wear the khaki uniform with probably the maple leaf on the helmet or arm.

The Government yesterday began the purchase of supplies for the British War Office. Seven hundred thousand bushels of oats were taken over at a uniform price of 47 1-2 cents. Most of it is stored in elevators at the head of the great lakes. The Government is also purchasing 10,000 tons of hay for the same purpose.

ONLY ONE SHIP LOST

Churchill Definitely Denies Stories of North Sea Battles.

Mine-Laying In Open Sea Is Startling Phase of Warfare Says First Lord of Admiralty, But Britain Is Not Dismayed — Official Press Bureau Will Be Started In Charge of F. E. Smith, M.P.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—Winston Spencer Churchill, First Lord of the British Admiralty, announced yesterday in the House of Commons that there had been no fighting and no losses of any kind other than had already been officially made public. The First Lord said:—

"Apart from the loss of the small British cruiser Amphion and the German mine-layer Koenigin Luise, there has been no other fighting and no other loss as far as we are aware.

"On Wednesday a flotilla of torpedo-boat destroyers while patrolling the upper reaches of the Channel found the Koenigin Luise laying mines. The destroyers pursued and sank her. About 50 of her crew, which probably numbered 120 or 130 men, were humanely saved by the crews of the British destroyers.

"The Amphion continued to scout with the flotilla and while on the return journey was blown up by a mine.

"The indiscriminate use of mines not in connection with military harbors or stragetic positions, and the indiscriminate scattering of contact mines about the seas, might, of course, destroy not only warships, but peaceful merchant vessels under a neutral flag, and, possibly carrying supplies to a neutral country.

"This use of mines is new in warfare and deserves the attentive consideration of those who are engaged in war and of the nations of the civilised world.

"The Admiralty is not at all alarmed or disconcerted by this incident."

Mr. Churchill added that arrangements had been made such as would reduce the possibility of accidents caused by mines to a minimum.

Referring to the disconcerting war rumors spread by the newspapers, Mr. Churchill said they were probably due to the very strict censorship prevailing, and this caused the papers to fill their columns with reports from irresponsible and nervous people on the coast.

Mr. Churchill announced that the British Government had decided to establish a press bureau, presided over by Fred. E. Smith, a member of Parliament, and from this bureau is to be issued a steady supply of trustworthy information from both the Admiralty and War Office without, however, placing in danger the naval and military interests of the country. In this way, he said, the country would be kept properly and truthfully informed of the state of affairs from day to day.

Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd George informed the House of Commons that the Government was considering the question of taking over the entire harvest throughout the British Isles.

The Chancellor declared that the banking business was normal everywhere and that the people were paying in money quite freely.

The German banks in London have been obliged to close until the British Government grants their applications for licenses.

The response to Field Marshal Earl Kitchener's appeal for recruits for the British army surpasses anything in the memory of British military men. Huge crowds of all ages and all stations of life, silk-hatted men and poorly-clothed laborers stood in long lines all day in front of the recruiting stations awaiting their turn to go before the medical officer.

Plans to prevent unemployment through the war and for the systematic relief of the distressed are being arranged on a large scale. Instead of economizing on public works in the interest of military expenditures, the British Government has adopted the policy of greatly increasing Government employment for the purpose of providing for those who will lose their work through the shutting down of factories. Road building will be one of the principal employments, and the board for the development of roads has a fund of several million pounds which it will spend.

The building trades' strike, which has kept 30,000 men out of work, has been settled, and a truce has been declared in the marine engineers' strike, which began in June.

SOCIALIST DEPUTIES SHOT?

Report for Buenos Ayres Papers Say German "Reds" Were Executed.

NEW YORK, Aug. 8. — A Berlin cable received by the correspondent here of La Prensa, of Buenos Ayres, the biggest newspaper in South America, states:

"By order of the Emperor, 100 Socialist deputies have been shot in Berlin, among then the Socialist leader, Herr Liebknecht."

There is no confirmation of the report from other sources.

The New York Call, commenting on the despatch, yesterday said:—"It is believed that the charge of treason may have been laid against the entire Socialist delegation in the Reichstag for some action by the German Socialists, knowledge of which has not been permitted to get out of the Kaiser's closely guarded domain. The Socialists' delegation numbered 111."

Other papers ridicule the idea and say the report is absurd.

MRS. WILLIAMS' LONG SICKNESS

Yields To Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Elkhart, Ind.:—"I suffered for fourteen years from organic inflammation, female weakness, pain and irregularities. The pains in my sides were increased by walking or standing on my feet and I had such awful bearing down feelings, was depressed in spirits and became thin and pale with dull, heavy eyes. I had six doctors from whom I received only temporary relief. I decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial and also the Sanative Wash. I have now used the remedies for four months and cannot express my thanks for what they have done for me.

"If these lines will be of any benefit you have my permission to publish them." — Mrs. SADIE WILLIAMS, [illegible] James Street, Elkhart, Indiana.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., seem to prove this fact.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

THE MODERN FATES--NOT THREE MYTHOLOGICAL SISTERS, BUT THREE VERY ORDINARY KINGS

In three places sat three monarchs, each close to the telegraph.

These three kings, just men, like the rest of us, owning their place to the merest accident of birth, were interchanging messages in the endeavor to decide whether millions of human beings, as fond of life as themselves, should be sent as pawns in the world's greatest war, to suffer, to bleed, to die.

As the key of the telegraph clicked, fate hung heavy on each sound. The world waited. The world listened, with bated breath. But only the emperor of Germany, the emperor of Austria, and the emperor of Rusia knew what the wires were saying.

The millions whose very life blood was in the balance were not represented, were not consulted. Most of them were wholly unaware of what was going on. In a million homes they were singing, playing, sleeping, with never a thought that a few hours might see them hurled into frightful battle, to do a despot's will.

How grim the satire on Twentieth Century democracy. How awful the responsibility with which those three kings dealt.

The will of the people must become the law of every land.

ONLY TWO METHODS OF FIGHTING HIDDEN MINES

British Government Has Always Opposed Mine Laying in Shallow Water.

Submarine mines are probably the most treacherous war auxiliaries used in modern warfare owing to their location being so well hidden from the all unsuspecting vessel. Once they are hit, all is over. It was one of these which sunk the "Amphion."

The use of the submarine mine as a legitimate weapon of defence and offence in warfare received the seal of international authority for the first time during the American Civil War. Tactical and local conditions determine the location of the system of submarine mines for any harbor, the former dealing with the relation of the mines with reference to the other elements of the defence; the latter with width and depth of channel, swiftness of current, and variations of tide.

Submarine mines are either buoyant or ground mines and in general are of four kinds: (1) observation mines; (2) electro contact mines; (3) electro mechanical mines, and (4) extemporised mines. Ground mines of the second and third classes have the firing mechanism in a floating buoy Controlled on Shore.

Observation mines are controlled from a distant observation station, generally on shore, and fired by electricity when the target arrives over the mine. These mines are usually only about ten feet under the water and this method is sometimes called judgment firing.

Electro contact mines are intended for explosion in actual contact with a ship's bottom, and explode upon receiving a violent blow, or upon being tilted sidewise to an angle sufficient to close the electric circuit contained in the mine. In some cases this circuit-closing device consists of an iron ball in a circular seat, which rolls against contact springs, and in others of a body of mercury which comes in contact with a spindle when the mine is tipped, and this completes the electric circuit. This method is called automatic firing. Mines are usually arranged for combination firing, that is, for either judgment or automatic firing

Electro mechanical mines differ from electro contact mines in that they themselves contain the firing battery.

Extemporized mines may be made by filling a barrel or box with gun powder or gun cotton, and fitting an electrical fuse to it.

Submarine mines, except purely automatic floating mines used in emergencies, are controlled from the mining case-mate on shore, which receives its information and orders from the mine commander stationed in his observing tower. The mines are planted in several lines, so as to compel hostile vessels to pass in range of more than one mine.

Destroying Them

Submarine mines are usually attacked by counter-mining, which consists in laying a fresh line of mines across or near a mine field, and in causing the explosion of the old mines by the concussion resulting from firing the new ones. Another method of attack is by sweeping, which consists in sending a pair of boats, connected by means of cables fitted with grappling irons, and sometimes with explosive charges, to drag over suspecting mine fields.

Innocent Suffered

Owing to the havoc created among neutral vessels during the Russo-Japanese war, and among all shipping for several years, by drifting mines floated in the vicinity of Port Arthur, The Hague conference in 1907 forbade the use of unanchored mines or of anchored mines broken loose from their cables except they were of a type which became harmless soon after; also the placing of mines along the coasts and in front of the ports of an enemy with the intent to destroy commerce. At the close of a war all belligerents are to remove mines they have planted. The rules were to remain in force seven years.

The British Government has always opposed mine-laying in shallow water as a disloyal and cruel form of war, cruel because it is directed largely against merchant shipping, and so may cause heavy sacrifice of life among innocent non-combatants, women and childre, because it is often carried out, as in this case, by vessels taken over from the merchant marine British envoys to the Hague conference in 1907 made earnest efforts to secure prohibition of mines, but were defeated by the opposition of Germany for reasons which are now clearly understood.

Was in Tornado.

Captain Fox, who was in command of the Amphion, was a midshipman on board the British warship Calliope, the only warship which escaped destruction in the terrific Samoa tornado of 1889.

The Lance, which sank the German mine layer, Koenigen Luise, is one of the newest types of destroyers, developing 27,000 horsepower, with a speed of 33 knots. She is armed with three 4-inch quickfirers and burns oil. Her tonnage is 5,000 and her complement 100 men.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Disordered Digestion.

Dyspepsia, anaemia and neurasthenia follow as the logical results of disordered digestion and faulty nutrition.

This condition has given rise to the charge that Americans are a race of gluttons. It is alleged that they eat too much and that the remedy is a reduction in the amount of food taken. Some "experts" even go so far as to urge frequent and long continued periods of fasting. Says one popular science expert and physical culture trainer:

"The dyspeptic, anaemic, neurasthenic type of people, who are becoming so common, are, in my opinion, slowly starving to death. A reduction in the amount of food may give temporary relief from their symptoms by lessening the amount of poison generated from undigested food, but such a course does not strike at the real cause of the trouble, which is undernutrition. The remedy for this class of people is not less food, but more, provided they take sufficient exercise in the open air to bring about a more perfect assimilation of food. Plenty of physical exercise or work and fresh air will work wonders for them. Another important point is to rest at least half an hour after eating. Sufficient sleep is also absolutely necessary."

To a girl, the greatest tragedy in life is apt to be the fact that she permitted her nose to get shiny at the dance the evening before.

Judging from events in Europe Andy Carnegie's universal peace money seems to have been wasted.

HAVE PRETTY HAIR

Soft, Fluffy, Abundant—Use Parisian Sage. It Stops Falling Hair and Itching Scalp.

If your hair is not as soft and beautiful, or as fresh and full as that of some friend, do not despair—do as she does—give it daily attention. Beautiful hair is largely the matter of a little care. If it is too thin, make it grow. If it is too dry and brittle, soften it up—lubricate it. If you have dandruff, it is because the scalp is too dry and flakes off. Freshen up the scalp and dandruff will go.

Parisian Sage, sold in fifty cent bottles at drug and toilet counters, is just what you need—it softens the scalp, nourishes the hair roots, immediately removes dandruff, and makes the hair wavy, lustrous and abundant.

Parisian Sage quickly stops itching head; cleanses the hair of dust and excessive oil; takes away the dryness and brittleness, makes it seem twice as abundant, and beautifies it until it is soft and lustrous.

You cannot be disappointed in Parisian Sage. Always sold by The Warne Drug Co. on money back if not satisfied plan. Look for the trade mark—"The Girl with the Auburn Hair." It's on every package—accept nothing else.

ART AT THE "EX"

Paintings From England, Scotland, United States and Canada

The display of paintings at the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, this year promises to be more varied and interesting than ever before.

From the United States is coming an exhibit by the famous artists who paint pictures of the Great West. Scotland is sending those splendid pictures of loch and ben that have carried the fame of her scenery around the world. England's foremost painters will be well represented, while our own Canadian artists will uphold the reputation of our native land.

Into this list are woven the names of the greatest living artists. The art exhibit at the Canadian National has a grand reputation to sustain. This year it will add to that reputation.

Canadian General Offers Corps of Electricians

A patriotic offer has been made to the Premier on behalf of the Canadian General Electric Company for the equipment and services of skilled and mechanical electrical operatives, which has been warmly appreciated.

The following is a copy of the telegram to Sir R. L. Borden.

"Toronto, August 6th, 1914.

"The Right Honorable
Sir Robert L. Borden,
Prime Minister, Ottawa, Ont.

"The Board of Directors of the Canadian General Electric Company after full consideration, and having regard to the present serious war situation, have resolved to submit to your Government an offer to raise, equip, and pay the salaries of a company of twenty-five skilled electrical and mechanical operatives who would be available for service in any part of the Dominion, and be under the control of the Minister of Militia as part of the Canadian forces. Probably their services could best be utilized in the erection, repair and maintenance of wireless telegraph stations, bridges, transport vehicles, artillery, etc.

"(Sgd.) Frederic Nicholls,
"President."

A prompt reply was received in the following terms:

"Ottawa, Ont., Aug. 6th, 1914.

"Frederic Nicholls,
President, Canadian Gen. Elec. Co.
Toronto, Ont.

"The Government of Canada warmly appreciates the patriotic offer of the Canadian General Electric Company embodied in your telegram just received, and send their sincere thanks. Your telegram has been submitted to the Minister of Militia, who will communicate with you thereon.

"(Sgd.) R. L. Borden."

IN NATURES WILDNESS

The attractiveness of spending one's summer holidays in the open is appealing to the large army of summer pleasure seekers more and more every year, and instead of looking for the fashionable resorts where one has to dress for dinner and where gayety reigns supreme, the younger generations are taking to the woods, the lakes, and the streams in which they find, in a two or three weeks' outing that rest and bodily upbuilding that fortifies them for the arduous duties that a strenuous twentieth century business life demands—ALGONQUIN PARK is just the out-of-way sort of place for you—log cabin camps in the heart of the wilderness surrounded with unrivalled scenery and in the midst of the best fishing and with the comfort of city homes, await you. Hotels with reasonable rates offer good accommodation. Two thousand feet above sea level assures you of cool evenings and the purest of air. Only 285 miles west of Montreal, 170 miles west of Ottawa, and 200 miles north of Toronto. Ask Grand Trunk agents for all information, rates, etc. B. A. HARVEST HELP EXCURSIONS

$12.00 to Winnipeg August 11 and 18th

The Grand Trunk Railway System will run Harvest Help excursions via Chicago and Duluth on August 11 and 18, from all stations in Ontario, Kingston, Renfrew and west at low rate of $12.00 to Winnipeg, plus half cent. per mile from Winnipeg to destination. First excursion on August 11 applies to all points in Manitoba. Second excursion on August 18 to certain points in Saskatchewan and Alberta and all points in Manitoba. Returning, half cent per mile to Winnipeg, plus $18.00 from Winnipeg to destination in Eastern Canada.

The route via Chicago is an attractive one, many large cities and towns being passed en route, which breaks the monotony of the journey. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is the shortest and quickest route between Winnipeg, Saskatoon and Edmonton and traverses some of the best farming country in Manitoba and the most rapidly developing section of Western Canada.

Full particulars at all Grand Trunk Ticket Offices or write C. E. Horning, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto, Ont.

Rose to the Occasion.

A successful agricultural show is carried on each year in a certain village in the south of Ireland. Among the many competitions for the encouragement of thrift and cleanliness is one for the best turned out donkey and cart. The prize for this was usually won by the local doctor or the local solicitor. After one year's show the farmers and working classes protested that it was not quite fair to expect their hardly-used animals to compete successfully with the well-cared for and well-groomed animals of those who generally won the prize. In consequence of this protest the following proviso in connection with this competition appeared in the show placard for the following year: "All legal and medical donkeys excluded."

are not a new and untried remedy—our grandfathers used them. Half a century ago, before Confederation, they were on sale in nearly every drug or general store in the Canada of that day, and were the recognized cure in thousands of homes for Constipation, Indigestion, Biliousness, Rheumatism and Kidney and Liver Troubles. To-day they are just as effective, just as reliable as ever, and nothing better has yet been devised to

TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL

Notes by Official Scribe.

President J. J. Hartley called a good showing of delegates to order at the usual fortnightly meeting held this week in the Labor Hall.

In response to a letter raising the question, James Watt, Secretary of Local 132 of the Tailors' Industrial Union, Toronto, made it clear that the Globe Tailoring Co, who are operating a branch in this city, paid the union scale of wages.

Labor Day Arrangements.

The Secretary of the Sports Committee read out the proposed list of sports which appeared lengthy to the delegates, who thereon decided that the parade would start from the Central Park at 12.30 instead of 1 p.m. as heretofore. The committee are promised a silver cup to be won three times, prominent men have shown liberality in the line of prize giving, and he will be a very mild type of athlete who does not succeed in winning a prize on the big day, so numerous are the gifts for the purpose. Mr. R. J. Soden has placed one of his windows at the disposal of the committee, where the prizes will be shown in due course.

A Topic of Interest.

Attention was drawn by representative Duggan to a paragraph in a Toronto paper announcing the fact that buyers from Armours had cleaned up the Toronto market with a view to canning the product and selling it probably to England at war prices. The warm discussion that followed showed that the labor men want Canada's beef kept for Britain in her hour of need, and demand that an embargo be placed at once on the necessities of life. Representatives Duggan, Robertson and Palmer were chosen to wait on Mr. Burnham the next day regarding the matter.

One Man, One Job.

The question was raised whether it would be possible to suggest to the many retired farmers working round the city that, in view of the prevailing shortage of jobs and a probable very hard winter ahead, that they be content with what they have and leave a job open for some needy brother who spurns charity and wants work. To dictate to anyone is not the idea advanced, simply a suggestion that may be acted on for a neighbor's good. It is generally felt in the labor world that a retired farmer, not being entirely dependent on a weekly wage, can and does work for less that the ordinary working man is able; in the present crisis is a chance to display a little interest in the cause of humanity.

The Hod Carriers' and General Laborers' Union are holding an open meeting on Friday the 14th instant, to which all will be welcomed.

Next meeting of the Council August 19th.

COLUMN FOR BOY SCOUTS

The following artists have promised to assist in the program: Mr. T. Jones, Mr. T. Ward, and Miss Hanson. Admission to the social, ten cents. Tickets may be obtained from members of the troop or from the Scoutmasters. Come one, come all.

SOME RAILWAY EMPLOYES ARE OUT OF WORK

Traffic in Grain Transportation Through City Has Been Curtailed

The absence of grain cars, passing through this city as a result of a government order to cease shipping grain from the elevators to foreign countries, has caused the Grand Trunk Railway between Lindsay and Belleville, to lay off fifty section men, all the bridge carpenters with the exception of the foremen and as many shed men as it would be possible to do without.

On inquiring at the C.P.R. offices this morning the Review learned that there were very few grain cars passing over their road but up to the present they have not found it necessary to dispense with the services of any of the employes.

CHEESE MAY SELL AT NEXT MEETING

G.A. Gillespie, representative of the Hodgson Bros. and Rowson Co., of Montreal, cheese buyers, informed The Review to-day that in all probability the purchasing of cheese would be continued by the Montreal firms this coming week. It will be remembered that no small amount of disappointment was experienced by the farmers of this vicinity when there were no sales registered on the Cheese Board last Wednesday. The next meeting will be held next Wednesday.

OBITUARY

MRS. A. R. RINGER.

A well known and respected resident of Peterboro, passed away Friday afternoon at four o'clock, in the person of Mary Ann Blade, wife of Mr. A. R. Ringer, 226 Murray Street.

Mrs. Ringer had been ailing since the fall of last year. She was born in Suffolk, England, sixty-eight years ago, and came to Peterboro in 1881. During her residence here, she made many friends, who will regret to learn of her demise. The late Mrs. Ringer was a member of St. John's Anglican Church.

Surviving besides her husband are two sons, John of Revelstoke, B.C., and Arthur of this city. Mr. Arthur Blade of this city is a brother, while three others reside in England and one in Australia.

The funeral will be held from the late residence, 226 Murray Street, Monday morning at 9.30 to the Little Lake Cemetery. Service at the house at 9.15.

W. H. MINCHIN.

The late W. H. Minchin, who passed away at his home in Stirling early on Monday morning, was a man who worked his own way in this work. Left fatherless in a new country in 1849, shortly after landing, at the age of 10 years, he educated himself, and entered the profession of school teaching. He served thirty-three years steady work at this, and always loved his life work, and attained a pronounced success. His labors in early days were in Marmora township and Marmora village. Early in the seventies he went to Spring Brook, where he taught twice, the last time eight years leavinv there in 1887, and later taught in Peterboro county. He retired in 898, but has taught for short periods since.

There are a great many of his old pupils who have scattered throughout the world and attained prominent stations in life, all of whom will look back with respect and affection over the life of he who has gone on before. Mr. Minchin moved to Stirling in 1899, where he has since lived, and made many new as well as kept close to many old friends, and there will be a lonesome feeling in the heart of both old and young, as he is missed from his accustomed haunts.

He leaves a widow, one daughter, Mrs. Baldwin Reid, of Ivanhoe, and two sons, Howard of Rochester, N.Y., and George of Chillicothe, Ill. Also two brothers, John, of Warren, Ohio, and Ralph Laycock, of Deloro, to mourn his loss.—Stirling News-Argus.

The remains will arrive in the city this evening and the funeral will likely take place Sunday afternoon from the residence of Mrs. Miles Henry, Brock Street.

CALGARY EXHIBITION

Calgary, Alta., Aug. 8.—During the past few years there have been millions of acres of idle land brought under cultivation on the American continent. Canada has done her part in bringing up this total, and recognizing this the International Irrigation Congress wil be held in Calgary, October 5 to 9 this year. This will be a convention of worldwide importance.

CAMP IS CLOSED.

The T.A.S. Camp, which has been held for three weeks at T.A.S. Park closed this morning for the present season. As was stated when opened the camp this year was but an experiment and so successful has it been that in all probability it will be a permanent fixture on the Otonabee River all next summer.

CHICAGO, August 7.—After a serious decline, wheat today rebounded 3 3-4c, owing mainly to baseless rumors of an overwhelming British victory in the North Sea. Closing prices were easy at 1-4 to 1 1-4c above last night. The other leading staples, too all showed net gains—corn 1 1-8 to 1 3-8c, oats 1 to 1-8 to 1-4c and provisions 15 to 55c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 7.—Wheat prices were again soaring after a weak opening. American houses were selling while exporters and local traders were heavy buyers, and at noon prices were on the rise. 3 1-4 for October, 3 3-4 for December and 3-4 for May, all higher than at opening.

Oats also made a sharp advance, October being sold at 3 1-2 higher; Flax opened unchanged and at midday stood at 3 to 4 3-8 higher.

The cash demand for all grades of wheat was good, and cash oats were selling at 3 1-2c higher than yesterday's close. The buyers were principally houses with eastern connections. The British government bought all the cash oats available. The weather while greatly improved as regards temperature, keeps dry only two points in the whole map recording moisture, these being Calgary and Edmonton, and it was light.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 7.—The excitement which prevailed in the local grain market yesterday was more pronounced than ever today, and prices fairly boomed under a continued brisk demand for supplies from all over the country, and a very active business was done. Dealers in some cases found it impossible to keep pace with the orders coming forward. Oats scored another advance of 4c to 5c per bushel, and Manitoba barley No. 4 sold 2c higher at 64c, and rejected at 62c. Sales of round lots of No. 2 Canadian western oats, including 25,000 bushels, were made for shipment from Fort William, 55 1-2c per bushel, c.i.f., Montreal. It is understood that the government bought several round lots.

The flour market is very excited and spring wheat grades have advanced 60c to 80c per barrel, with orders pouring in from all sources, and a very active business. Winter wheat flour is 50c per barrel higher, but even at this advance buyers found it impossible to fill their wants, as the market is bare of stock, and some dealers are talking of importing from the United States. Mill feed is active and strong, but prices show no further change. Rolled oats have advanced another 5c per barrel. Old crop baled hay is excited owing to the sale of stock on spot and new crop hay coming forward, consequently prices are fully $1 per ton higher. The butter market is excited and strong with prices 1c per pound higher. Offerings of finest creamery at the auction sale today sold at 27 3-4c, and in a jobbing way prices have advanced to 30c. Cheese is strong with a good demand. Eggs firm and active.

All Well With Lusitania.

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—A wireless was received from the Lusitania that the British liner which is running gauntlet of German cruisers is on her way to Britain.

The message was dated 2 p.m ship's time and bore only the two words, "All well." It came by Marconi wireless.

The Lusitania should be nearly half way across the Atlantic by now. After her departure there were many rumors that she was pursued by German war craft.

ALL ATTEMPTS TO TAKE LIEGE UNSUCCESSFUL

Over 120,000 Germans Fail in a Second Attempt to Take the City.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 8.—Germany has lost 25,000 men in killed and wounded at Liege. The Belgian defence is unweakened and the forts untaken. It is officially announced that Germany has asked for a 24-hour armistice to bury her dead. This is the startling news sent to King Albert by the Belgian commander.

It is presumed that the German commanding officers are unwilling to take chances on the demoralization of those of their forces who are advancing on Liege by allowing them to see the terrible carnage which accompanied the earlier attacks.

Lieut.-Gen. Leman, Governor of Liege, has not yet replied to the request. The feeling here after the developments of the past week is that the German officers are not to be trusted. They may take advantage of the armistice to bring up reinforcements.

Some 120,000 German troops were hurled upon Liege late yesterday afternoon, in a third desperate attempt to capture that city. Reinforced by fresh troops that arrived shortly after the Kaiser's forces retired Thursday night and camped on the left bank of the Meuse. Gen. Von Emmich's regiments moved forward en masse.

Before the infantry got into position the German batteries along the Meuse shelled Fort Fleron and put three of its mortars out of commission.

Under cover of their artillery, the German infantry dashed forward, and within a short time had captured Bressoux, a suburb of Liege, only a short distance from Fort Fleron.

At the time this despatch is sent desperate hand-to-hand fighting is going on in the street.

The forts about Bressoux are unable to fire upon the combatants for fear of killing Belgians as well as Germans. If the Germans retain Bressoux they probably will be able to take Liege, the main city, in a few hours, as 120,000 Germans are now attacking. They have penetrated a suburb and fighting is now going on in the streets.

When the siege guns had demolished many of the buildings at Liege, another assault in force was attempted. Like the others, it failed, and the German soldiers were again driven back completely crushed.

Yesterday's assault was one of the most sanguinary episodes in the history of European warfare. The Germans themselves admit that they have lost 25,000 men.

The defenders of the town made a show of evacuating the outer fortifications. The Germans accepted the retirement as genuine and a large force pressed forward. Immediately they entered the circle of the fortifications, however, the Belgians, whose manoeuvre had been an artifice, poured a deadly artillery fire on the Germans. Caught in a trap the invaders fought fiercely, but almost the entire force was annihilated. The Belgians captured 27 field pieces in the rout of the Germans. The invading forces lost the temporary advantage of position they had gained in two days' fighting.

An all night artillery bombardment from the mortar batteries was kept up inflicting much damage to the forts. The entire front is covered with German dead and wounded, but accurate estimates of the German losses are as yet impossible.

Not a single fort has fallen into the hands of the Germans.

Several German howitzers have been placed in position near Huy, and large German forces are lying in wait on the other side of the frontier.

An attack on the village of Cornesse was repulsed by the Belgians.

The excitement in Brussels since the arrival of the wounded, has increased, if such is possible. There is much optimism, however, concerning the military situation. The events before Liege are considered as merely the raising of the curtain, and that Belgium may once more be the country where the destinies of Europe will be decided.

The Daily Mail's Paris correspondent names three Belgian fortresses, Liege, Namur and Herve, as seeming likely to hold a proud place in the history of the present war, for they held back the head of the advancing German hosts, and have given the French army time to make up for the thirty hours' disadvantage in mobilization which they suffered through Germany's earlier preparations.

It was never expected that Liege would offer any serious resistance, says the correspondent, yet already it has stemmed the German onset fo two precious days, and only today have two of the ring forts fallen before the concentrated attack of the German army.

Russia Calls Out 6,000,000.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times says that ukases published yesterday show that Russia is determined to fight to the bitter end. Practically the whole of her population capable of bearing arms has now been called to the colors. When the present mobilization is completed Russia will have considerably more than 6,000,000 under arms.

THE BELGIAN KING'S WORDS

Addresses Subjects Before Leaving For Front.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 8. — Before departing for the front King Albert addressed a proclamation to the Belgian army saying:—

"Without the least provocation on our part our neighbor, proud of its force, has torn up treaties bearing its signature and has broken in upon the territory of our fathers because we refused to forfeit our honor.

"An attack has been made upon us, and the world marvels at our loyal attitude.

"Be comforted by our independence.

"Our menaced nation shudders, and its children have bounded to the frontier.

"Brave soldiers, I salute you in the name of Belgium. You will triumph because your strength has been put to the services of the right.

"Glory to you soldiers and defenders of the liberty of our menaced fatherland."

SPORTING WORLD

London,

'S SALARY KEEPS HIM WITH CLEVELAND

P

There's only one reason why Napoleon Lajoie is still a member of he Cleveland team, and that is because no other American League club feels it can afford to pay Larry the big salary he is getting. Larry's generous contract has another year to run.

Manager Frank Chance, of the Yankees, wanted Lajoie, but when he learned how much Larry was being paid and the conditions of his contract, he backed down.

"Larry would play better ball in any other city," said Clark Griffith, manager of the Washington team. "I think the player has slumped simply because he is discouraged. Larry, and all the other Cleveland players, expected to be in the race for the flag this season, and when old Col. Hard Luck gave them several punches in the midriff, they collapsed.

"If Larry were a younger player, he would have been snapped up the moment the Cleveland club asked for waivers on him. The salary figures in his contract would have made no difference.

"Lajoie is one of the most popular players who ever played in the American league. He has worked harder for the Cleveland club than any other player, and it didn't surprise me in the least when he began to slump after the team began to play such poor ball.

"Larry had his heart se ton helping Cleveland to win a pennant this year, and the complete failure of the club simply took all the heart out of him.

"I know exactly how Larry feels. I felt that way myself once over in Cincinnati. My team had a chance for the pennant. Things began to break against the club and we were soon floundering around near the bottom of the second division. Everybody lost heart and the club couldn't climb again no matter how hard the men tried."

TWO GAMES WITH OTTAWA THE CIVIC HOLIDAY PROGRAM

The Petes will be home on Monday to give battle to the fast going Senators from Ottawa. Two games will be staged, one in the morning and another in the afternoon, and Curley Blount's men should put a crimp in the Senators' pennant aspirations. It will take some playing to beat "Shag" and his bunch, but the Petes should at least break even on the home series, which will help some.

Tyson, the former Canadian Leaguer made good on his first start with the Buffalo Internationals. He held Baltimore to five hits in ten innings and pounded out a double with three on the paths. Tyson should have hurled last year, but as his arm was not in the best of shape, Knotty Lee played him at first and in the field.

Clark Griffith of the Washington Senators has detailed a scout to look over Paddy Dougherty, the youthful Hamilton southpaw, and there is a chance that the sturdy son of Ireland will go up. The writer stated before that Dougherty was the best prospect in the league. In our opinion, he is superior to Heck, because he is young and has enough stuff right now to warrant a trial, and in good hands the youngster would make good. He has been ill for a few months and is just rounding to form, and should be heard from regularly from now on.

Detroit is to play an exhibition game with London, Hamilton is to meet the Athletics of Philly, and Brantford is doing likewise. It may be all right for the big leaguers to break into a couple of near real cities but we hate to think what Connie Mac, Eddie Collins, et al., will say when they are asked to get off the train at Brantford. The song says something about last night being the end of the world, but the Athletics will probably sing, "This is the End of the World," when Tom Nelson says, "Gents, this is Brantford." Then when the world's champions get a peep at Rube Deneau and his crippled cellar diggers, the picture of Deadville will be everlasting.

Kaiser forced Austria out in the second and a lightning double retired the side, Britain to France to Russia.

Hank Dink from Dink's Hollow, called in yesterday. Hank wanted to know what all the stir was about, and when told Germany and England and France and some other countries were at war, Hank replied, "Well, I'll be gal darned if they aint havin' a fine day for it."

SENATORS BEAT TWO TWIRLERS

Petes Were Hitting but not in Pinches

Special to The Review.

Ottawa, Aug. 8.—By bunching hits off Creswell in the third and fourth innings, Ottawa captured another from Peterboro. Kubat and Creswell, both left side flingers, started the battle, but Creswell was relieved by Tracey in the sixth after two runs had been pushed over. The long, lean one from Peterboro had little stuff and was wild. On the other hand, Kubat was touched up for eleven hits, but kept them scattered to a certain degree. He was good in the pinches and was backed up by some lucky stabs with men on the paths. The score:

Peterboro—
	1 0 1 0 1 0 0 0 0—	3	11	1
Ottawa—
	0 0 2 2 0 2 0 0 x—	6	7	2

COMMENT
As You Like It

Sir Thomas Lipton made his bow as a challenger for the America's cup just sixteen years ago yesterday, the first announcement of his ambition to lift the trophy having been made in a letter from the Royal Ulster Yacht club to the New York Yacht Club, dated August 6, 1898. This epistle gave the name of Sir Thomas Lipton as the owner of a yacht to be called Shamrock, and her length on the water line as 89.5 feet. A committee of the Royal Ulster Yacht Club, accompanied by the new yacht's designer, William Fife, jun., carried the challenge from Belfast to New York, and presented it in person to the officials of the New York Yacht Club. There were five large and husky men on the letter-carrying committee, and they got it across the Atlantic safely, without any mishap. J. Pierpont Morgan and four other prominent members of the New York Yacht club were appointed as members of America's cup committee, and received their distinguished visitors and their letter. The preliminaries having been pulled off with due decorum and without undue haste, Sir Thomas went ahead with his yacht, while Mr. Morgan put up the money to build a defender. The Columbia was the first to take the water, as she was launched at Bristol, R.I., on June 10, 1899. Just two weeks later the Shamrock I took her first dip at Millwall on the Thames. In August, 1899, the first of the Shamrocks, in charge of Capt. Archie Hogarth was towed across the Atlantic by Sir Thomas Lipton's steam yacht, the Erin. All the Irishmen in New York and vicinity turned out to welcome the Shamrock and the Erin, and not a few loyal Americans of Hibernian descent were torn by conflicting emotions generated by a desire to root for the Columbia and the Shamrock at the same time. The first race was held on October 16, 1899, and the Columbia breezed home under the wire, by a margin of 10.08. The next day the Shamrock was disabled and the Columbia won in a walk—if it be feasible to describe a yacht as walking. The Shamrock made her best showing in the third race, but it wasn't good enough. Thus ended Sir Thomas' first lesson. In 1901 he returned to the assault, and the Shamrock II did better than her predecessor, but the Columbian won all three races. The Shamrock III was equally unsuccessful, but Sir Thomas did not despair, and in the Shamrock IV he has a boat which he firmly believes would turn the trick.

If the Pirates had gone on strike and taken with them their brother Feds, how happy the Pittsburg fans would be today.

Fred Clauss, a brother of Bert Clauss, the southpaw pitcher with Detroit last season, has been added to the New Haven club's roster.

First Baseman Hoblitzel's bunting and base running have been a big factor in the sensational climb of the Boston Red Sox up the pennant ladder.

Jake Boultes, one time Boston Brave, is playing a star game at third base and also with the war club for the Bridgeport team of the Eastern association.

Clemson college boasts of a pitcher who can twirl equally well with either hand. Wonder "how well" this ambi-dextrous fellow can pitch with either band.

Monte Cross, who is now officiating as an umpire in the Federal League, is laid up in a Philadelphia hospital as a result of stopping a batted ball with his ankle.

In blanking the Pirates three times straight the Braves have established a season's record. So far this season no other major league team has shut out the same opponents three times in a row.

St. Joseph, Denver, Sioux City and Lincoln are staging a great race for the Western League pennant. The four teams have been jammed together so closely at times that a postage stamp would cover the whole bunch.

Larry Chappell has notified the White Sox management that it will be impossible for him to play this season. Chappell has been laid up since last March with a severe attack of blood poisoning.

Nearly all arrangements have been completed for the all-star baseball tour to the Pacific coast this fall. The tour will start from Cincinnati on Oct. 18. The team will go by way of Omaha, Denver and Salt Lake City, reaching San Francisco Nov. 1.

Manager Robinson of Brooklyn has been doing considerable weeding out of extra men lately. Outfielder Hummell and Infielders Egan and Elberfield are the only men now with the Superbas

Winning that double-header in Pittsburg last month must have put the "jody" on the Brooklyn Superbas. After cleaning up the Pirates the Superbas lost eight straight and landed in the cellar.

Ownie Bush holds third place among the leading run-getters and sixth among the leading base stealers in the Amercan League. He leads the Detroit Tigers in both departments.

Monday's Ball Games.

Monday's morning game at Riverside Park will be called at 10.30 and the afternoon game at 3. Tuesday will be ladies' day, the game starting at 3.45, and also on Wednesday.

PENNANT RACE FAR FROM WON BY MACK'S ATHLETICS

Shibe Park Chieftain Will Have to Work His Team at Full Speed.

By Frank Chance

The wonderful spurt of the world's champion Athletics is likely to assure Connie Mack another pennant unless some of the western teams of the American league open their eyes. Philadelphia has been tearing through the West at a great clip, and now for the first time this season has a really decided advantage.

But the race is by no means over yet. Mack will have to drive all the way. But he seems to have been lucky enough to organize a sprint where it would do the most good. All of the other five top teams, which have won practically half of their games or more, must be seriously considered so long as they hang on But no doubt better than any other club in organized baseball the White Elephants know how to make use of a lead. That is a great front-running team, especially when the world's series money is in sight. I think that if Philadelphia manages to get back to Shibe Park as well off as it is now, there will be no dislodging the champions.

Carrigan's Good Trade.

Bill Carrigan made a very judicious trade, in my estimation, when he secured Vean Gregg from Cleveland. Rankin Johnson, who several times this season has humbled Walter, his great namesake, is a young man who is likely to be heard from latrr. But he lacks the experience of Gregg. Besides, such a southpaw as Gregg is at his best, should be of inestimable benefit to Boston when the fight thickens. If the Red Sox are to keep on the heels of the pacemakers they will have to stop such slugging aggregations as the Athletics and Tigers, whose heavy artillery runs mostly to the left,-handed type. Good southpaw pitching is the best answer for the Bakers, Collinses, Cobbs and Crawfords. Almost without exception the sluggers of the Ban Johnson circuit bat from the near side of the plate.

I have seen little of Gregg this season, but I know enough of him to realize that he is one of the best portsiders in the game. I expect his change to a team with a fine fighting chance will be of much benefit to him. It is pretty tough for any good man to keep up his ginger with a consistent loser.

Pitching Not So Good.

The pitching in the American league is not as good as it was a month sons why the world's champions ago. That is one of the main reahave been able within the last two weeks to shake off the teams which pressed them most closely at the beginning of the season. Plank and Bender have both been going so well for Connie that he has been able to get by with ordinary work from his younger players. Earlier, when the twirlers of Callahan, Jennings and Rickey were in better shape, the Athletics were not so apt to slub their way to victory

Carrigan has been somewhat unfortunate with his pitchers, especially Joe Wood. Smoky Joe lost several very valuable weeks as the result of an operation for appendicitis. He came back strong, only to contract a lame arm. I am told that Joe has just about recovered from this handicap. With Vean Gregg's assistance, the speed ball merchant is likely to make a good accounting from now until the season's close. Gregg did not have a very successful debut with the Hub team, but that game may be thrown out, as he had not the time to familiarize himself to his new associations.

Senators Miss Milan.

Washington has done quite as well in the West as could be expected with Milan off the team. Griffith's ultimate chance is quite likely to be decided in the remaining games with the champions of the world. The Senators cause about as much trouble for other clubs as do the Athletics, but for some perverse reason of fate the Capital City boys seldom show to their very best against the Quakers. If the old fox can keep his team close until Milan recovers he may accomplish the unexpected, for Milan should be pretty much himself by the time that the eastern teams engage one another in the next series.

Detroit's play has improved from home influences, and there might have been an entirely different answer from Jennings if Ty Cobb had been in the battle line the past few weeks. Ty is fixing up to get back soon. He was able to do some pinch running the other day as a starter toward his return. Both High and Veach have done very well under the circumstances, but neither of course anywhere nearly ap[illegible] the spectacular Georgia peach. He is about half a team himself.

Detroit's pitching has been somewhat unreliable of late, a fault which has cropped out also in the camps of the White Sox and Browns. There is hope for an upward trend in Callahan's case, as Ed. Walsh showed an excellent performance against my team. He will never again be able to shoulder half of Chicago's pitching burdens, but the master of spitball manipulation will win the majority of his battles if he rested four or five days between starts. Chicago, St. Louis and Detroit were all forced to overwork their most dependable pitchers in the effort to keep up among the leaders when the fight was anyone's.

My club has ben playing pretty good ball wihin the past two weeks and if the hitting continues it may have something to say as to what team will win out. New York is so far behind just now that there is only scant hope of a first division berth, and to accomplish it the improvement in my team will have to continue unbroken, while come of those above us will have to buckle even worse than they have within the past two weeks.

Pathetic Cleveland.

Cleveland's plight is rather pathetic. The sorry position of this team is as hard to figure as that of Pittsburgh in the National league. I am told that in both clubs cliques have been formed and that these have disorganized the aggregations of Birmingham and Fred Clarke Of course, such stories are always circulated about tail-end disappointments. In the case of Cleveland there appears some foundation for the talk. The writers of that city openly accused Vean Gregg of not having the club's interests at heart. These critics intimate that Birmingham expects to clean house in a most sensational manner. He has one or two players for whom I would go the limit. However, New York doesn't seem to possess the happy faculty of securing the desirable castoffs of rival teams.

I am just as well pleased now that Boston got Firstbaseman Dick Hoblitzel from Cincinnati. He has improved none with the change to American league pitching. I really cannot understand it, as previous to this season he was a rattling good firstsacker. If he had come back with his shift to the Red Sox, Carrigan would have had a strong infield to supplement his wonderful outfield trio.

Walter Knox is World's Champion

A Canadian now holds the all-round pro. championship of the world. He is Walter R. Knox of Orillia, coach of the English Olympic team.

Pames G. Merrick of the Canadian Olympic Committee yesterday received a cable that Knox had, at Manchester, beaten T. H. Crane, the Scotch champion, in an all-round world's championship struggle. Knox won six out of eight events. He took the sprint, hurdles, shot put, pole vault, discus, and broad jump, while Cramb took the high jump and the hammer throw.

Knox beat the American pro. champion, John Macdonald, at the Island, Toronto, last spring.

ENTHUSIASM AT PARK CONCERT

Patriotic Selections Have Their Effect

Victoria Park was crowded last evening on the occasion of a band concert by the band of the 57th Regiment and keen enthusiasm was displayed in the playing of patriotic numbers. Bandmaster Gliddon selected a program of songs of home and patriotism and they proved very appropriate. The playing of O, Canada!, Rule Britannia, songs of Scotland, and France created warm applause. The playing of the Maple Leaf was also the signal for an outburst. It was the largest crowd that has attended a concert in the park this year, and evidently the war situation has stirred everyone, as the women seemed even more enthusiastic than the men when a national air was played.

Did Toe Dancing in Early Egypt

London, Aug. 8.—Toe dancing is not a comparative modern French invention, as is popularly supposed, since a piece of Egyptian pottery over 2,000 years old, now exhibited by the Institute of Archaeology, shows a girl taking steps in modern ballet style.

The antiquity of toe dancing is only one of the things revealed by the Egyptian collection brought from Meroe in the Sudan by Prof. John Garstand. Stones of astronomical buildings there show considerable knowledge of the heavens. On one stone was sketched an instrument for measuring angles and taking elevations, while another drawing tends to show that an effort was made to measure the circumference of the moon. Certain marks measuring the shadows of the sun indicate an effort to get the latitude and longtitude of Meroe.

An entirely new language, which is at present a mystery, was also discovered by archaeologists here, in certain inscriptions.

Church Services

Miss Dorothy Allan will sing at both services at St Paul's tomorrow.

At the morning service she will sing Sir Edward Elgar's great patriotic song "The Land of Hope and Glory."

At St. James' Methodist Church, J. O. Fife will speak at the morning service on the subject of Praise. Wm. McLaren will take the evening service, subject, Almost.

At Knox Presbyterian Church Rev. D. A. Thomson will preach at both services. Soloist, Miss Hinchliffe.

HYMN BEFORE ACTION

(Rudyard Kipling.)

The earth is full of anger,
The seas are dark with wrath;
The Nations in their harness
Go up agains our path!
Ere yet we loose the legions—
Ere yet we draw the blade,
Jehovah of the Thunders,
Lord God of Battles, aid!

High lust and forward bearing,
Proud heart, rebellious brow—
Deaf ear and soul uncaring,
We seek Thy mercy now;
The sinner that forswore Thee,
The fool that passed Thee by,
Our times are known before Thee—
Lord, grant us strength to die!

For those who kneel beside us
At altars not Thine own,
Who lack the lights that guide us,
Lord, let their faith atone;
If wrong we did to call them,
By honor bound they came;
Let not Thy wrath befall them,
But deal to us the blame.

From panic, pride, and terror,
Revenge that knows no rein—
Light haste and lawless error,
Protect us yet again.
Cloak Thou our undeserving,
Make firm the shuddering breath,
In silence and unswerving
To taste Thy lesser death!

E'en now their vanguard gathers,
E'en now we face the fray—
As Thou didst help our fathers,
Help Thou our host today!
Fulfilled of signs and wonders,
In life, in death made clear—
Jehovah of the Thunders,
Lord God of Battler, hear!

Paving Question for Board of Works

The question as to whether it would be advisable to go on with the street paving or not during the present money stringency, which was billed to attract the attention of the City Council last night, has been referred to the Board of Works. In all probability ordinary improvements such as sewers and sidewalks will be executed as usual.

PRESS COMMENTS ON THE WAR

CAREFUL KINGS.

(Grand Rapids Press.)

The ability of the Czar and Kaiser in massing their armies in the foreground is only equalled by their skill in keeping themselves in the background.

WHAT WAR MEANS.

(Detroit Journal.)

One difference between war and hell is that hell is supposed to be a punishment for the guilty, while war piles its heaviest suffering upon the innocent.

WHAT OF ISLAM?

(Springfield Republican.)

If Islam, long restive, should take the moment for a jehad, Europe would have big trouble on its hands in addition to the trouble it has brought on itself.

MAY DO GOOD.

(Detroit Free Press.)

Out of the sorrow and suffering of the war a longer era of peace may come. Out of the quarrel of kings may come a new order, in which the people who do the fighting must be consulted before war is declared.

In this way some great good may come to all humanity.

ALL STANDING TOGETHER.

(Sydney Post.)

If the enemies of Britain are banking on the dissensions in Ireland in seizing on the present time for the bringing on of hostilities, they are assuredly reckoning without their host. When Ireland has had tenfold greater grievances than at present, none have served the empire more readily and more valiantly than the Irish soldiery in the armies of Great Britain. The Irish problem is a difficult, intricate and delicate one, but it is not likely to afford much aid or comfort to the enemies of Britain in the event of Europe becoming an armed camp.

THE POWER OF THREE MEN.

(New York World.)

In Vienna there is a doddering old man, the offspring of a tainted house, who sits on the throne of the dual empire.

In St. Petersburg there is a weak, well-meaning neurotic, who by the accident of birth happens to be the Czar of All the Russians.

In Berlin there is a brilliant, talented, ambitious manipulator of politics, who is German Emperor by grace of the genius of Bismarck, Moltke and Roon.

Of these thre men, only the one in Berlin has more than mediocre abilities; yet the three are permitted to play with the lives of millions of men, with property worth thousands of millions of dollars, with the commerce and industry and prosperity and laws and institutions not merely of empires and kingdoms, but of continents It is left to them to determine whether the world is to witness the most deadly and devastating war of all history.

The thing would be laughable, ridiculous, if it were not so ghastly.

GIRL RULER OF LUXEMBURG IS BELOVED BY HER PEOPLE

Her Kingdom, Which Has An Interesting History, Has Been Coveted For Years.

The eyes of the world are now upon the tiny mountainous Dutchy of Luxemburg and its youthful ruler, the Grand Duchess Marie Adelaide, for Germany, ignoring the treaty of 1867, has invaded the Dutchy so as to be able to gain easy access to France By the treaty, Luxemburg was declared a neutral territory and all its fortifications dismantled

However, because of its strategic position between France and Germany, Luxemburg has been coveted by the great powers of Europe for years, and it was only the treaty of 1867 that secured to it any degree of protection and independence. Kaiser William of Germany endeavored to get a hold on the Dutchy in 1907, by supporting the pretention of Count von Merenberg, who opposed the succession of the Grand Duchess Marie Adelaide to the throne, and now, taking advantage of her weakness and unprotected condition, he has invaded it on his way into the French territory.

The ruler of Luxemburg, the youngest sovereign of all Europe, is described as a slender, fragile slip of a girl with a world of earnestness and thoughtfulness in her sweet young face She was crowned ruler of Luxemburg on her 18th birthday, in 1912, and since that time she has won the allegiance and the undying devotion of every subject in her little realm.

The story of her kingdom and the description of its quaint towns and countryside reads like a bit of mediaeval romance, and in fact the history of Luxemburg does go back into mediaeval times, for it was from Luxemburg that the great crusader Godfrey de Bouillon came.

The father of the present ruler was the Grand Duke William Alexander, a descendant of William of Orange, and her mother, the Dowager Duchess Marie Anne, is a Portuguese princess of the house of Braganza. The Grand Duchess Marie Adelaide is the eldest of six daughters, and for a time some anxiety was felt in the kingdom lest in the absence of a male heir to the throne the Duchy pass into the hands of another family. However, Dr. Eyschen, the present minister of state, and a valiant supporter of the little Grand Duchess, discovered an old law which declared that in the absence of a male heir, the eldest daughter of the ruling family should succeed to the throne

When the Grand Duke William Alexander died in 1907, the little Duchess was only 13 years old, so her mother, the Grand Duchess Marie Anne, ruled as regent until she was of age.

In June, 1912, in the midst of national rejoicing, through the crooked streets of the quaint old capital carpeted with roses and draped in the national colours, the little Grand Duchess rode in triumph to the chamber of deputies, there to be proclaimed ruler of the Duchy of Luxemburg.

Long years of preparation had been gone through for this event. From the time she was a mere baby siv years old, in fact, she has been trained and educated with the fact of her succession to the throne in view. Her father, the Grand Duke, made a companion of her, instilling into her mind the honours and duties of her position. French, German and English professors and governesses were procured for her. One of the statesmen of her father's court taught her statecraft, and her old friend, Dr. Eyschen, instructed her in the principles of international law.

The life of the Grand Duchess has been one of extreme and unusual simplicity. With her five younger sisters she has spent most of her childhood at their beloved home, Castle Burg, where they romped and played and had a happy normal time much the same as any ordinary, well brought up children. At Christmas time the Grand Duchess personally visits the poor in the neighborhood of the castle, bringing with her gifts that she knows they will appreciate, for they are friends and she knows each and every one of them personally. In fact, there seems to be a real personal note in the love and devotion bestowed upon her by all her subjects. Her advisers, old white-haired veterans of state many of them, stand ready to defend her rights in the face of the whole world. In fact, it was the minister, Dr. Eyschen, who established her right to the throne by a brilliant legal battle in the law courts. However, Luxemburg is unarmed, and in spite of her loyalty and devotion her subjects are powerless to help her in this new extremity. She had only the faith of her great neighbors to depend upon, and since Germany, the strongest of them, has broken this faith and flooded her land with an army of invaders, her position seems hopeless.

With the passing of the Duchy of Luxemburg the history of one of the most picturesque kingdoms in Europe will come to an end. With its mountains and precipices, its winding passes and crooked waterways, its old little towns with their gabled houses, dismantled battlements and ancient churches and monasteries, it has been a favorite spot for lovers of quaint places and artistic scenery.

BELGIUM'S PART IN THE WAR

A fortnight ago, though the war clouds were hovering over Europe, and a general war was expected, nothing was said about Belgium. Eyes were turned from Servia to Austria, and to Russia, Germany and France, but Belgium escaped notice. Now this little country, with an area of a little more than 11,000 square miles, and a population slightly larger than the population of Canada, is earning the plaudits of the world for the gallant resistance she is presenting to the German invasion. The Belgians feel that they are fighting for thier homes. The tide of war has rolled to their very doorstep. They know that should they fail, and their allies fail, Belgian independence is lost, and that she will be swallowed up in a huger German Empire Moreover, Belgium is spurred on by one of the greatest insults, one of the grossest and most deadly affronts ever offered by one nation to another. Germany has tried to brush her aside contemptuously, has laughed at her own treaty obligations and is slaughtering the sons of Belgium, whose worst crime is that they are defending their country.

Germany's Broken Pledge.

The attack of Germany is like the attack of a grown man upon a newsboy. Belgium in 1830 was made what is called a neutral state. That is to say, Belgium pledged herself never to attack another country upon any pretext, and the countries that signed the covenant with her pledged themselves never to attack Belgium nor to permit any other country to invade her. The signatories to their treaty were Austria, Russia, Great Britain and Prussia. When it became almost certain that war was to break out between Germany and France, Great Britain, as one of the guarantors of Belgium's neutrality, asked France for a pledge that she would not invade Belgian territory in case of conflict with Germany. France immediately gave the undertaking. Then Germany was asked. Germany refused to promise, and that was the immediate cause of Britain declaring war upon her.

Neutrality Observed in 1870.

The resistance that Belgium is putting up is evidence that she was not altogether unprepared for some country breaking its pledge to respect her neutrality. Only once before was it seriously threatened, and that wast at the time of the Franco-Prussian War. Then, as now, before the outbreak of hostilities, there was grave uneasiness in Belgium, and Britain, which has acted throughout as the guardian of the little nation, asked both Germany and France if they would keep their armies off Belgian soil. Both agreed, and the promise was kept. After the war France spent millions of money in protecting her frontier against German aggression, but the 340 miles of frontier between France and Belgium was not strongly fortified. It is on this account, and also because the nearest road to Paris from Germany lies through Belgium, that the Kaiser has torn up the treaty and is now attempting to force his way through the little buffer state.

Belgium Apprehensive.

In recent years the people of Belgium have been apprehensive more than once that their neutrality might be disregarded, and always it has been German invasion that was feared. In 1910, however, Holland, as a result, it was thought, of German pressure, began to fortify her sea coast about Flushing, and in the neighborhood of the Scheldt river, which is in Belgium. These fortifications, it was feared, were designed as a menace to Belgium, and military critics then began to point out signs that proved Germany to have prepared for the invasion of France by way of Belgium. There is a multiplicity of railroad tracks leading to within a few miles of the Belgian border, and at Treves and Aix there are large yards and great terminal facilities, cut of all proportion to the needs of the country in times of peace. Apparently the invasion of Belgium has been part of Germany's plan. To have abandoned this plan at the challenge of Britain would have been to abandon the whole scheme of French invasion and to invent a new one within a few hours. This Germany was incapable of doing.

British Force for Belgium.

While Belgium has always realized that her sole hope was in Britain she has not failed to take some precautions on her own acount, as the stiff battle she is offering to Germany proves. She is capable of placing 170,000 trained men in the field, and from her population of more than 7,000,000 she can draw many more at need. Her idea has been that if she were invaded by Germany, Britain, having control of the sea, could land a large expeditionary force at Antwerp. This force, co-operating with the Belgians, might attack the German army in the flank as it was on its way to France, or it might cut it off from its source of supplies. It is fortunate, indeed, that the great fortifications that Holland contemplates building at Flushing are not complete, and that even should Germany occupy this city, she would not be in a position to command the Scheldt River, upon which Antwerp is situated.

Strange Vessel Sighted in Gulf

Canadian Press Despatch.

Montreal, Aug. 11.—The news of the presence in the lower Gulf of a strange vessel caused Federal authorities yesterday to order all ships on the way down the river to stop. Some were held at Quebec, and some at Father Point, but to-day the order was cancelled, the nationality of the cruiser having been found to be British. The Royal Edward sailed this morning from Montreal with five hundred French reservists. There were scenes of fervent patriotism. The Allan liners Victorian, Alsatian and Corsican will not sail until further orders, having been taken over by the Imperial Government for transportation of troops and supplies.

Judge Clute decided that the ballots marked in ink are valid and the ballots not bearing the returning officers' stamp are invalid. For the latter reason four Sinclair and two Mayberry ballots were thrown out, while two Mayberry ballots rejected in the recount, were restored in the appeal. The recount, Sinclair 2586, Mayberry 2581, after the appeal vote stands Sinclair 2582, Mayberry 2581.

OTTAWA, Aug. 11.—An offer of $500,000, to be applied for defence purposes in any way that the Government deems fit, was received yesterday by the Minister of Militia from a prominent Montreal millionaire, whose name is not yet divulged. The offer has been accepted, and it is probable that this splendid donation will be devoted to the purchase of some quick-firing guns, this being considered the chief need of the Canadian forces at the present juncture.

TWO THOUSAND DEAD, TWENTY THOUSAND WOUNDED, NINETY SEVEN HUNDRED PRISONERS

An Official Announcement of the German Loss in Fighting in Belgium --- Fighting Continues at Liege With Terrible Scenes of Bloodshed---Defenders Are Making Gallant Stand

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 11.—A news despatch from Brussels says it is officially announced there that the German loss in Belgium in the recent fighting was two thousand dead, twenty thousand wounded and ninety-seven hundred prisoners.

Brussels, Aug. 11.—Germans made a desperate attempt on Fort Seraing, south of Liege, Sunday night, and were repulsed with heavy loss. It is estimated that eight hundred Germans were killed within an area of half a square mile.

London, Aug. 11.—Despatches to The Times from The Hague and to The Telegraph from Maastricht sent under yesterday's date, agree that a struggle for the possession of forts at Liege was going on continuously, and giving rise to terrible scenes of bloodshed and horrorism. At noon the Germans were making fierce efforts to silence the forts nearest the city proper, and the defenders were gallantly holding out against an almost constant bombardment.

London, Aug. 11.—The Standard's military correspondent explains that Germans were able to enter Liege by taking advantage of the woods and hilly ground after the screen of the Belgian light troops between the forts had been withdrawn. He thinks it probable that there are only a few hundred German troops in Liege, sufficient to overawe the citizens, and not enough to make their cutting off, a catastrophe.

MILITARY BASE WILL BE ESTABLISHED IN B.C.

Col. Hughes Also Announces That a Whole Regiment of Servians in Detroit Want to Join Canadian Force.

OTTAWA, Aug. 11.—Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes stated last night that mobilization would start at once on the Pacific coast. He also announced that Servians resident in the United States had asked to be allowed to enlist with the Canadian troops. A whole regiment of Servians in Detroit wish to be allowed to join the contingent which will sail from Canada. The mobilization points in British Columbia will be Vancouver, Victoria and New Westminster. While no definite reason was given for the mobilization out there it is known that there has been some anxiety at the coast on account of the presenc of German cruisers on the Pacific.

The closing of all the Canadian Atlantic ports, including Montreal, simultaneously with the closing of the British ports has started speculation here about the possibility of a big naval battle having taken place and some German warships having escaped. There has been no report of any such conflict, however, and the closing of the ports is generally taken as only a precautionary measure. When the German cruisers on the Atlantic have been removed, there will be no danger to British ships and the ports can open again.

The requests from the Servians in the U. S. who want to join the Canadian troops come from various parts of the country. They are reservists and are anxious to join in the fight in defence of their country against the Austrians and Germans but find it impossible now to cross the Atlantic. The Detroit regiment has drilled and is all ready to leave. The request of the Servians is being considered by the Government and the advice of the Imperial authorities will be obtained. French reservists especially in the west, are also anxious to join the Canadian contingent also and their case is being considered as well as that of the Russian reservists.

A suggestion which is being made, and which has support in very important circles, is that it would be well to establish a patriotic fund for the relief of the families of men who go to the front and for the men who are taken sick or wounded, the same as was done during the South African war.

During the South African war, a fund of some $500,000 was secured and $150,000 of this was never paid out. This would do as a beginning of the new fund, it is suggested.

The expectation now at militia headquarters, is that some of the Canadian troops will begin to assemble at Valcartier, near Quebec, about the end of this week, while the first contingent will all be there in two week's time and it will sail for the scene of the war in the first week of September. There will be about 24,000 in all, including the first army division of 20,000 men, the regiments of a thousand men each to be equipped by New Brunswick and Manitoba. Hamilton Gault's regiment, the automobile battery, which has been offered and accepted, and the battalion of 500 mounted men offered by the City of Calgary.

The Government has closed the port of Montreal as well as the port of Quebec, and as far as any invading ships entering the St. Lawrence are concerned there is not felt to be much danger. If they came up to Quebec they would meet the battery of heavy guns of the embankment, which have a range of ten to twelve thousand yards. Then if they turned to leave again, they would find themselves trapped by British cruisers, four of which are now on the North Atlantic and can be often reached by wireless. Invading ships would be trapped in the same way in the Bay of Fundy if they tried to reach St. John, and as for Halifax the entrance of the harbor is well protected by powerful guns. In addition the St. Lawrence and the maritime ports are protected by mines.

ARE AFRAID OF BAYONETS

Germans Unused to Charges Says Correspondent

LONDON, Aug. 11. — Correspondents of various London papers at different points and out of touch with each other comment upon the terror with which the Germans face a bayonet charge. They show inflexible courage in the face of heavy or light rifle fire, but a charge with fixed bayonets invariably makes the defence waver and usually makes it break.

Reports continue to come in of the lack of provisions among the German armies of invasion. It seems that the wonderful German organization has partially, at least, broken down in the commissary department.

Entire Available Army is Under Orders For Continental Service.

LONDON, Aug. 11. — Great Britain will raise a new volunteer army of 100,000 men for the war.

This announcement came yesterday afternoon from Premier Asquith, in the House of Commons, and is interpreted as signifying that the entire available British army is under orders for continental service, and that a considerable portion of it is already on the ground.

It is reported that a great army, composed of British and French soldiery, is being mobilized to help the Belgians retain Namur.

The previous published announcement that the British battleship fleet had sunk the German submarine U15, definitely locates the fleet, which must be somewhere off the German naval base at Heligoland, since the U15 was designed for coast defensive work exclusively, and therefore has a limited steaming area. As the Germans apparently are utilizing their coast defence submarines, it is taken to mean that the British fleet must have closed up on them and has them bottled. It is also probable that the British fleet is now subject to continuous attacks by submarines, destroyers and torpedo boats.

Reports from Madrid insist that a naval engagement has occurred near the Canary Islands, in which a German battleship was sunk and another captured. A message from Corfu reports heavy firing in the vicinity, which, if true, would indicate an engagement between the two elusive German cruisers and some British or French men-of-war.

While it is known that many British troops are on the continent, the closest secrecy is being maintained here regarding the soldiers' movements.

FIRE AT BARN.

A fire in the barn at the rear of Collin's Grocery Store, corner of Driscoll Terrace and Hunter Street, caused the firemen a run about three-thirty this afternoon. A child put a match to some waste paper and the blaze spread to the interior of the barn. The fire brigade were on the scene before any damage resulted.

Small Forces Are Dispatched in Westerly Direction of the North of River Meuse but Will be Driven Back

Canadian Press Despatch.

Brussels, Aug. 11.—An official statement issued by the Belgian War Office at half-past eleven this morning states that the Germans have despatched some forces in a westerly direction from the north of the River Meuse.

The detachments did not appear very strong, and it is expected that the allied army will drive them back. Some outpost engagements were reported to-day in which the Germans were repulsed. The feeling among the allied troops is very cheerful, and their equipment is excellent.

SET BACK FOR COSSACKS

Canadian Press Despatch.

London. 4.50 p.m., Aug. 11.—A Central News Despatch from Vienna via Amsterdam says Austrian troops have occupied Miechow in Russian Poland, ten miles within the border after defeating a body of Cossacks whose losses are given as four hundred killed and wounded.

The Austrians loss was one hundred and forty wounded.

Eight Hundred War Prisoners

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, 2.50 p.m., Aug. 11. — England now holds [illegible] prisoners of war, eight hundred merchant sailors taken off ships captured by British war vessels or seized in British ports.

ENROLMENT WILL BE COMPLETED TO-NIGHT

Daughters of Empire Meeting Thursday

The 57th chapter, Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire, will hold a meeting at the armouries, Thursday afternoon at three o'clock, to discuss the hospital ship fund, in which chapters throughout Canada are now interested.

All ladies of the city are cordially invited to this meeting.

TO AWAIT ORDERS.

Louis Houdrey, the French reservist who left this city about a week ago with the intention of proceeding to France returned home this morning to await orders. In speaking to a Review scribe Mr. Houdrey stated that there are no boats leaving the Atlantic ports for the other side at all and the steamship companies are anxiously awaiting word from the British warships which are endeavoring to clear the Atlantic and make transportation safe.

Mr. Houdrey was very enthusiastic over the patriotic demonstrations in Quebec and Montreal.

Not Known Yet Where the Local Contingent Will be Sent

It is expected that the local battery will leave the city next week for Quebec or some other Canadian military base. Enrolment will be completed this evening, the officers say, after which the time will be devoted to preparatory work, prior to leaving the city. It is not known yet whether the battery will join the overseas force but it is thought that it will. The squad from here will take two guns with them.

The 57th men who have volunteered to the overseas force will parade this evening. Recruiting for the force is completed but all the men have not passed their medical examinations as yet but that work will be finished this evening. It is thought the 57th section of the first contingent of 20,000 will be rushed across the Atlantic to the Motherland where they will either be used to strengthen the home army or sent to France under General French.

No definite orders have been received but the general feeling is that the Canadians will be rushed to the front and recruiting commenced for a home force which will be used in case any serious emergency arises.

Great Britain Makes Important Capture of Wireless Station

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 11.—By the capture of the German African possession of Togoland, Britain acquires a wireless station with a communicating radius of three thousand miles. As the result of the establishment of martial law in Paris, there is close supervision of telephone conversations and the French language only is permitted as it is suspected that Germans were using English.

The Morning Post says relations between Austria and Italy are becoming more strained.

Between Five and Six Hundred Thousand Under Arms

London, Aug. 11.—The Times says Britain is now well on with her mobilization and has between five hundred and six hundred thousand men under arms, not counting national reserves. "We should therefore view the situation with comparative equanimity," says the Times, "and not be turned from any masculine resolve by the threat of an assault by the German navy."

PETERBOROUGH, TUESDAY, AUGUST 11, 1914

THE LATE MRS. WOODROW WILSON.

CANADIANS universally regret the great bereavement that has fallen on President Woodrow Wilson. His late wife was a lady in every sense of the word, and, as mistress of the White House, won the admiration of the American people for the manner in which she discharged those arduous duties. Being the first Southern woman to occupy this position, she is all the more entitled to praise, for, the problem of reconciling the Southern States depends very much on social work such as a President's wife could accomplish, and Mrs. Wilson's popularity indicates her success, and the loss the American people have sustained in her rather early death. While most people know but little of what it means to occupy such a position, it is very important politically in preserving the respect and good-will of the leaders of both parties who take part in the social life at the capital. Often a word carelessly spoken in society means serious complications, and the success of President Wilson in carrying through difficult measures with so little friction shows that his wife was a capable woman in so high and exacting a position.

DIME NOVEL VS. SEX NOVEL.

SO FAR as morals were concerned, the old dime novel was a Sunday school book compared to our modern problem novels, disgusting and erotic, with the accent on the second syllable. The only "problem" was whether the villain would get it in the neck in the final chapter or in the one just before. There was never any doubt in the mind of the youthful reader that virtue would triumph. If undue emphasis was laid on the heroic qualities of the train robber, at least the lesson of some good in the worst of us was taught.

CANADA'S WAR FINANCE.

THE VIGOROUS ACTION of the Borden Government in making preparations for the great war now taking place have called forth words of praise from all quarters. Besides direct military and naval preparations, measures for the protection of commerce and finance are among the most important. The great cost of modern war has a very strong effect on prices and credit. In a country like Canada, where such a tremendous volume of business is done, with extended use of credit, the protection of the credit and the monetary wealth of the country is of vital importance. Once let the currency of the nation depreciate, and the people feel the pinch of war in abnormally high prices, with little use of credit and an inadequate currency to meet obligations. Professor W. W. Swanson, of Queen's University, in an article to the Montreal Journal of Commerce, says, regarding the Borden Government's action:

> "The action of the Canadian Government in coming out strongly and emphatically in favour of a bold financial policy, has met with the instant approval of the people. The significance of the steps taken may not as yet be fully appreciated, but undoubtedly the position of our banks has been enormously strengthened. In a word, the Canadian chartered banks are now able to face any emergency that may arise with perfect calmness and confidence.
>
> The banks have been preparing against the possibility of a financial crisis in Canada for the past eighteen months. They have, fortunately, not had to meet any exceptional demand upon their resources. Indeed, the bankers of no other country in the world have handled the financial situation of the last twelve months with greater skill or ability than have Canadian financiers.
>
> The net result of this policy is that the banks find themselves in an exceptionally strong position today. They have weeded out any questionable accounts. Their securities are gilt-edged, and their commercial paper sound and dependable. They are, therefore, ready to meet any emergency that may arise out of the present wars and rumours of wars.
>
> The Minister of Finance has shown not only ability but courage in facing the present situation. He has come to the aid of the banks in three ways. He proposes to issue to the banks any amount of Dominion legal tender notes in exchange for approved securities. Second, he virtually empowers the banks to suspend legal tender payments; and, third, he sanctions the issue of an emergency currency to the extent of fifteen per cent. of the combined paid-up capital and rest funds of the banks.
>
> Fortunately, Canadians are accustomed to a paper currency. Practically no gold circulates within the confines of the Dominion. What has been done by Mr. White, therefore, will not disturb in any way the confidence of the people in the banks, while at the same time it will permit our financial institutions to deal promptly with any emergency that may arise.
>
> The Canadian bank note is as good as gold. It is fully protected. There is no sounder currency in the world, and it can be confidently predicted that Canadians will continue to place absolute trust in the banks and their note issues."

ITALY'S DIFFICULT POSITION.

ITALY occupies a very difficult position in the European war. She is the third member of the Triple Alliance, yet her connection with Austria and Germany has never been popular with her own people. In the present war she has declared her neutrality, and, at the same time, the German Kaiser is making every possible effort to embroil that country. If the Italians still persist in their neutrality they may have to defend themselves against their erstwhile friends. The outcome of the Kaiser's ultimatum to Italy that that country take up arms with Germany and Austria may be a declaration of war by Italy against her late allies of the Triple Alliance.

Italy's hate for Austria is well known, and the Austro-Italian alliance has never been popular with the people of the latter country. Italy insists that its position of neutrality will be adhered to, and in these circumstances it is expected that the Kaiser will declare war against Italy.

King Victor Emanuel and his advisers have taken the position that the Triple Alliance is for defensive purposes only and that Italy is in no sense obliged to aid Germany and Austria. It is further charged by King Emanuel that Austria violated the terms of the Triple Alliance by failing to inform Italy of the measures contemplated against Servia.

Germany's attempt to sweep across Belgian territory to obtain a strategic position for a march on Paris has been the greatest blow suffered by the Kaiser since the opening of hostilities.

It is the general opinion of war experts that no decisive land battles will be fought for another week or fortnight, by which time both Germany and France will have their big armies in the field thoroughly equipped for the bitterest warfare the world has ever seen.

A great sea battle is believed to be impending in the North Sea. The British Government has taken possession of all schools and other buildings on the North Sea coast and converted them into hospitals, so that the wounded from a North Sea engagement could be brought ashore at points convenient to the emergency hospitals.

At any rate, the next three or four days ought to bring about the passage of momentous events that will give some direction to the progress of the war, as well as to Italy's position in the struggle. If fortune goes with the Entente Cordiale, it is almost safe to say that Italy will not, at least, be on the side of Germany and Austria.

THE MONTREAL MAIL and the Montreal News, two newspapers dominated by the same control — a condition which we remember one of them not very long ago condemned in almost intemperate terms — have taken a biff at the Montreal Gazette in a series of cleverly arranged quotations. Obviously the Gazette strove for peace by combatting a war attitude to Germany. It may have been illogical, but it was disinterested, and is to be commended on that account. Realizing that every possible effort was made by Britain to maintain peace, the Gazette supports a war policy.

FOR OUR FRENCH confreres' benefit, we may say that some time ago The Review wired Le Devoir for an opinion on Canada's duty in the present war. No answer has up to the present time been received, and that shows that some French-Canadians, happily few in number, are not for the Empire.

THE ST. CATHARINES STANDARD of the 7th inst. says its net circulation on the day before was 10,791. In view of the fact that St. Catharines has a population of 13,400, this statement of circulation is truly remarkable.

Couldn't Sleep With It.

The Tattler.

Vicar—You know, Thomas, you set the younger men of the parish a bad example by going into public houses on Sunday. Why don't you take your gallon of beer home on Saturday nights?

Thomas—Aye, sir. A' couldna gang t' sleep wi' a gallon o' beer in the hoose!

In English Homes.

Brockville Times.

Just imagine the terrible anxiety of the people of Britain at this critical juncture! There is hardly a home in Britain which has not a son, husband or relative either in the army or navy. If this is an anxious time for Canada what must it be for Britain, by whom the brunt of the battle must be borne!

Britain's Duty.

Toronto Telegram.

There must continue a German power—Great Britain could not tolerate its crushing out as a force to be counted upon, even more than it can brook its present attempt to dominate the continent of Europe. The Teutons stand as the bulwark of western Europe against the waxing and awakening Slav. Their rulers have been wardens of the Marches. It is the guilt of Kaiser Wilhelm that he has betrayed his trust and has sought to upset the balance of power which it was his task to uphold. The false steward must go. But the need of stewardship will remain. Great Britain's course is clear. She must battle until the Hohenzollern is abased from the position he has abused. But she must not lay down arms till the German nationhood, under a truer guidance, is prepared again to assume, in the interests of peace, the wardenship of the Marches.

Germany Cannot Repeat 1870.

Montreal Journal of Commerce.

It is evident that Germany is not going to be able to repeat the experiences of 1870. In that war with France, which broke out exactly forty-four years ago, the German army scattered the French troops and within five weeks from the commencement of hostilities, one French army was imprisoned at Metz, another army was destroyed, Emperor Napoleon III a prisoner and the road open to Paris. In that war, the first conflict took place on August 2nd, or fifteen days after France declared war. The probability is that mobilization will be carried on more rapidly during the present conflict than was the case in the former and that within the next few days a big battle will take place between the French and German armies. The participation of Belgium in the conflict will undoubtedly retard the progress of the German army and will give the French more time in which to mass their forces.

Germany will be seriously handicapped once the Russian and French armies get underway, as she will be forced to divide her forces between the east and west. It is true, however, that the German railroads have been constructed with the idea of rapid mobilization. Lines run from east to west, the German idea being to strike a blow at France and then hurl her entire force against Russia on the eastern border. In this case, however, Russia and France will probably have their armies in readiness as quickly as Germany can mobilize hers and the fight will show the disadvantages under which the Germans are laboring. It is to be sincerely hoped that crushing blows will be struck by both France and Russia against the disturber of Europe.

PORTERHOUSE

By Walt Mason

Oh, luscious steak, you seem to make my innards squirm with pleasure! Of all the meat that can't be beat, you are the pride and treasure. The cook has toiled with zest and broiled the steak just to my liking, upon my plate I see it wait, magnificent and striking. The gods are kind, that we can find such meat in steers and cowses; all men with tanks should give them thanks for inch-thick porterhouses. The doctor views my steak and chews the rag about my diet; "you beat the Turks," he cries; "your works will soon be in a riot. You ought to eat the wholesome beet, the turnip and the carrot, the bean and squash, so help me Josh," he jabbers, like a parrot. "That grub's too rich, 'twill give you itch, and mumps and yellow janders; it trouble makes, so cut out steaks, and chickens, ducks and ganders." But man will buy his health too high if he feeds like the horses, and lives on hay day after day, and browses where the gorse is. I'd rather eat the juicy meat, of which no man is fonder, and ere my time cash in, and climb to starry heights up yonder.

France Wants To Know.

PARIS, Aug. 11.—The Foreign Office has demanded a statement of intentions from Austria, following a report that eight Austrian regiments have violated Swiss neutrality by sending eight regiments of Austrian Tyrolese to the Salsatian border to harass the French rear. It seems obvious Austria is trying to provoke a French declaration of war, so Italy can be dragged in, an unwilling aid.

THE HISTORY OF MANKIND.

It May Fill a Library or Be Told in a Very Few Words.

Anatole France tells us the story of a certain Eastern king, who was young and conscientious when he ascended the throne of his fathers, and therefore calling together the most learned doctors in the land he bade them write a history of mankind, "for," he said, "if I would rule aright I must know the story of things past and of kingdoms come and gone." The doctors bowed and went their way.

Thirty years passed, and the king had forgotten his command, when to his palace came a train of fifty camels bearing each ten mighty volumes. The king asked the chief doctor, Zeb, what the train might mean.

"It is the history of mankind," replied the sage.

The king bade them return and abridge the history so that he might read it and not spend the residue of his life upon the task.

Ten years more passed when the doctors returned with five camels bearing each ten mighty volumes. The king, grown old and irritable, bade them to abridge the history into one book, "for," said he, "I have a great desire to read the history before I die."

The doctors began their toil again. Many died, and while the book was still unfinished, the king, too, fell sick with a mortal malady. On his deathbed he summoned Zeb, for a consuming desire had come upon him to know the history before his spirit left him. The doctor came.

"I die in sorrow," said the king, "for I have not learned the history of mankind."

As the king sank back the doctor bent over him and whispered, "Men were born, they suffered, and then they died."—Henry Watterson in Louisville Courier-Journal.

Spirituous Liquors Go Up.

MONTREAL, Aug. 11—War prices went into effect yesterday in all spirituous liquors and struck a hard blow to the many patrons. Beers and ales alone were retailed at the old price.

It was in whiskies, brandies, gins of all kinds that the change was felt. Certain drinks have been practically eliminated, the many brands which retailed at ten cents being now fifteen cents or two for a quarter, and in some places fifteen cents straight. In the more expensive brands, which retailed at fifteen cents, there has been an increase also of five cents.

WAR CORRESPONDENTS.

Tests They Must Pass Before Uncle Sam Allows Them In His Army.

Nor is it an easy matter to secure the privileges of a war correspondent with the United States army in the field. First, the applicant must present proper credentials from the publication he represents with a photograph as well as an account of his career, stating the nature of the work he is expected to do at the front and certifying to his trustworthiness as a newspaper man and his personal fitness to accompany the army.

With this must go a certified check of $1,000, payable to the adjutant general of the army, which is to cover the expenses of equipment and maintenance. He must also give a bond of $2,000 to guarantee his living up to all of the rules of the army. If these are violated the $2,000 is to be payable to any charity which Secretary Garrison may name. The correspondent must also take the military oath of loyalty to the United States and agree to abide "in letter and in spirit" by all the regulations of the army.

Specific precautions are taken to keep out adventurers, and only men with bona fide credentials and actual newspaper careers are to be admitted to these privileges.—Oswald F. Schuette in Leslie's.

SPECIAL CORNER FOR AFTER DINNER READERS

A Revelation

It Came After a Very Unpleasant Experience

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

I was brought up with Agnes Atherton as my girl chum, for I believe that boys may have girl chums as well as boy chums. When we arrived at an age at which the sexes mate there was no change between Agnes and me from friendship to love.

This state of affairs continued between us until I became smitten with Lillian Gray, and the first person—the only person, in fact—to whom I confided the matter was Agnes.

When I told her of it I noticed a slight contraction of the muscles of the face.

"You don't approve?" I said.

"I neither approve nor disapprove," she replied.

"Well?"

"A choice made by one in love is a love choice, not the result of judgment. You have, I dare say, chosen through love, and even if I knew Lillian Gray well enough to make a judgment choice for you it would avail nothing, for you would not think of abiding by it. Indeed, I would not expect you to abide by it."

"Nevertheless I perceive that you are not especially pleased with the girl who has charmed me."

"Nor displeased with her. You have not asked me to pick out a wife for you."

"If I had you would not have picked out Lillian."

"There is nothing to her discredit in that. Suppose I should fall in love with a man, then ask you to pick out a husband for me. Do you suppose you would select the man I had chosen?"

"No, I wouldn't," I snapped.

I could not define even now exactly what it was in her question that caused me irritation. I supposed at the time I was miffed because Agnes did not show any enthusiasm over my sweetheart. My words ended the discussion, and we proceeded to other subjects.

The withholding of Agnes' approval—or disapproval, for that matter—caused me to defer a proposal of marriage for some time to the girl who had enthralled me. I did not relish marrying any girl over whom my chum was not enthusiastic. Indeed, I would have liked Agnes to love her as well as I. In a subsequent conversation with Agnes on the subject after I had become engaged to Lillian I told her this, and her reply was that there was no more reason why she should love any particular girl because I loved her than that I should love any particular man because she loved him.

"That's all bosh," I exclaimed. "Men don't love men."

This was the second time that I was irritated at a remark of Agnes concerning my affair, and a second time it ended a discussion of the subject.

Another matter troubled me. I was not approved by Lillian's parents. But there was an especial reason for this. They wished their daughter to marry a wealthy man. I was doing pretty well and had some prospects, but that did not satisfy Mr. and Mrs. Gray. Their aim for Lillian was an establishment. She had an excellent position in society, which they desired her to keep up after marriage, and they were well aware that this would require a fortune independent of anything they could give her.

I did not blame Lillian for being distressed at their opposition. A very strong love for me on her part was required to induce her to give up a life to which she had always been accustomed, in opposition to her parents' wishes. I saw plainly that a struggle was going on within her, and after deliberation I offered to release her. She declined to be released. I told her that if she felt a reluctance to leave the gay world she would serve her own interests as well as mine by accepting a release, for no couple could be happy together when one was pining for the unattainable. She replied that she could not and would not give me up.

But the matter dragged. Her parents would not give their consent to our marriage, and since Lillian did not like to marry me without it there seemed to be no prospect of any outcome. At last I told her that she must do one thing or the other, either marry me or break with me, and after much deliberation, in which I detected as much unwillingness to give up the fashionable world as to act contrary to the wishes of her parents, she decided to marry me. But she stipulated that our wedding must be without the knowledge of her parents. We would go to a clergyman, be married; she would return to her home, confess what she had done and secure forgiveness, after which we would live together as man and wife.

I did not like this plan at all. I urged Lillian to do nothing secretly. She replied that she knew her parents better than I and could better judge what course was best to pursue with them. I told her that anything clandestine was foreign to my nature and frankly confessed that I would prefer to give her up than act underhandedly. She burst into tears. Every one knows what woman's tears will do with a man. Smiles will draw him to the edge of a moral precipice; tears will drag him over.

One afternoon I called with my car on Lillian, ostensibly to take her for a drive, really to go with her to a clergyman and be married. She had confided her intention to a bosom friend of hers, a Bessie Angell, and desired that she be present at the ceremony. She claimed that there should be witnesses, so I asked my friend Arnold Brown to be of the party. These two were to meet us at the parsonage.

Lillian was trembling when she entered the car. On the way she said nothing to me, and when I spoke to her she replied by monosyllables. I realised that she was not in a condition of sufficient equanimity to take the most important step in a woman's life.

"There is yet time," I said, "to retreat from this step."

"No," she replied faintly. "I am going through with it."

I was half minded to stop the matter where it was, but when we are half minded we are as liable to decide wrong as right. I drove on to the parsonage and pulled up before the door.

"Go in," she said, "and see if they are all there; then come back for me."

"Hadn't you better go in with me?" I asked.

"No; I won't be married without Bess."

Always persuaded to what I did not approve of, I went to the front door, rang the bell and was admitted. I found Arnold Brown waiting for me, but no Bessie Angell. Stepping to the telephone, I called up her home and asked for her. She came to the telephone, and I asked her why she was not at the parsonage. She replied that she had not been certain from what Lillian had said to her when they had last met whether the wedding would come off or not. To this I expressed surprise. After a dialogue, very unsatisfactory to me, it was agreed that she should hold the wire while I went out to Lillian, and if I returned with a request from her friend to come to the parsonage she would come at once. Setting down the receiver, I ran out to the car.

It was where I had left it, but no Lillian.

My heart went down like lead. I looked in every direction, though not expecting to see her. Flight was a fitting climax to the vacillation she had shown. I stood on the steps, wondering what to do.

When we are in a hole we naturally turn to something or some one to pull us out. I thought of Agnes Atherton. My own judgment had been led so far astray by Lillian that I could not at once get it in working order. I didn't know what to do about Arnold Brown. I shrank from telling him I had been left in the lurch by one I was about to make my life partner. Returning to him, I said:

"Arnold, there is a hitch; wait here till I straighten it out."

He saw that I was flurried and told me to go slow; he would wait for me there till the crack of doom. Hurrying out, I drove to Agnes' home, and fortunately I found her there.

I told her the whole story.

I had thrown myself on a sofa, and she sat down beside me, taking my hand in hers soothingly.

"It seems to me," she said, "that there is nothing for you to do but tell the truth to your friend, Mr. Brown, and that will end the matter."

"I dare say you're right, but I would rather do a six months' term in state prison than confess to him that I have been such a fool"—

I stopped short, and for a few moments there was silence between us, at the end of which Agnes asked:

"Has Mr. Brown ever seen"—

"Lillian? No."

"I'll tell you what I'll do for you. You seem all cut up, and I would like to help you out. My law of action is the intent. I will go with you to the parsonage, marry you, and we will have the marriage annulled at our leisure."

Never in so short a space of time was a revelation made to any human being. Here was a woman, worthy of the devotion of the best man living, whom I had turned down for the weakest. It all came upon me with sledgehammer force. Clasping Agnes in my arms, I said:

"It will never be annulled with my consent."

Hastening to a phone, I called up the parsonage, got Arnold and said:

"The tangle is unraveled. I and the bride will be with you presently."

In less than half an hour Agnes and I were in the parsonage. I introduced her to Brown; then the clergyman was called from his study and performed the wedding ceremony, neither he nor the single witness suspecting that in a twinkling there had been a change in the bride.

After the ceremony there were still several hours before the end of the day, and I drove my wife into the country. What passed between us could not be condensed within a few words. I would not care to give it if it were possible. We settled our mutual affairs to the satisfaction of both, Agnes confessing before our return that when I told her of my engagement I gave her a shock since she had always wished me for herself. And so it turned out that instead of getting a girl who was not worthy of me I got one of whom I was not worthy. We arranged our affairs so that no one would be shocked at the hastiness of our marriage and in due time appeared before the world as man and wife.

Lillian Gray is married to a very wealthy man. Whether or not she regrets me I don't know, but I doubt if she realized the weakness she displayed in her relations with me. Agnes says that Lillian is so wrapped up in the world of fashion that she doubtless looks upon her affair with me as a narrow escape from a very foolish move, a move that would have condemned her to a humdrum life.

Spanish Combs.

We have Spanish capes and Spanish toques; now we find the high Spanish comb the most fashionable hair ornament of the season. Three big combs are wonderfully decorative.

The Parisiennes are wearing these high combs instead of giant aigrettes or ospreys. They arrange them coquettishly at the side of the head, jutting out beyond the coils of hair, and in some cases the carved designs are outlined with delicate silver filigree. Apropos of evening headdress natural hair is once more coming into fashion. Powder and patches may continue to be worn, but only by the less conservative women.

Canada's Flax Crop.

Last summer Canada harvested 15,000,000 bushels of flax seed. Of this quantity, 1,000,000 bushels is required for seed purposes, 2,000,000 have already been shipped to Europe and 2,500,000 are required for Canadian consumption. This leaves 9,500,000 bushels for export. In 1912 Europe imported 17,000,000 bushels. The United States will have to import 12,000,000 bushels of flax seed in 1914 to supply normal demands from the linseed oil making industry. Flax is invaluable as a first crop on virgin soil, preparing it for wheat or other cereals another year, by the simple process of disintegration.

THE MARKETS

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—Altho war fever today sent the wheat market coursing higher by far than had previously been known since the crisis began, the ascent was out of all proportion to the amount of business transacted. The trade is still a good deal short of what would be a normal aggregate under ordinary conditions, and it did not take much selling to bring about a decided reaction from top prices. The close was unsettled at 3c to 3½c above Saturday night's level. Corn finished at a net decline of ⅞c to 1⅝c, oats off ⅛c to ½c, and provisions irregular, ranging from 20c loss to a rise of 17½c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 10.—Wheat prices were stronger on unfavorable weather conditions in the Canadian west, and in sympathy with prices in the American markets. By the gift of a million bags of flour to Great Britain by the Canadian Government the flour trade locally will not be affected, is the consensus of the millers' opinion.

Trading in all lines was quiet, there was a good existing demand for all grades of cash wheat, but offerings were nil, and owing to this being a bank holiday business was restricted. Winnipeg wheat opened ⅞c to 2⅜c higher, and closed 2⅜c to 4⅜c higher.

Cash wheat closed 3⅝c to 4¼c higher for contract grades. Cash barley unchanged. The number of cars inspected on Saturday was 90, as against 198 last year. Frosts at seven points were recorded in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, varying from freezing point to four degrees.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 10.—A very firm feeling prevailed in the local grain market today, with a good demand from local and country buyers for supplies, and a fairly active trade was done. The feature of the flour situation continues to be the great scarcity of winter wheat grades; in fact, supplies are exhausted on spot, and dealers state that it is impossible to get any offers from Ontario millers for either prompt or future shipment, and buyers in consequence find it difficult to fill their requirements. The demand for spring wheat flour continues active, and a large volume of business is doing for local and country account at firm prices.

The Dominion Government purchase of 1,000,000 bags have been pretty evenly divided up with all the leading Canadian mills of spring wheat flour. The trade in millfeed is very active, and the tone of the market is firm, with prices tending towards a higher level. Rolled oats are firm and fairly active. Butter is strong, with a fairly active trade passing.

The market for hogs was firmer. Selects fed and watered sold at $10.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Aug. 10.—At the Montreal stock yards, west end market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending Aug. 8 were 1500 cattle, 2500 sheep and lambs, 2500 hogs and 1100 calves. The offerings on the market this morning for sale amounted to 1250 cattle, 1700 sheep and lambs, 1350 hogs and 180 calves.

A feature of the cattle trade today was the good demand for canning stock. The offerings were fairly large, but owing to the keen competition between Canadian and American buyers the feeling in the market was strong and prices ruled fully 25c per 100 pounds higher than this day week, with sales of common bulls at $5.25 to $5.50 and cows at $3.75 to $4.50 per 100 pounds. There was no actual change in the condition of the market for butchers' cattle, but the feeling was very firm under a good demand with ample supplies to fill all requirements, and an active trade was done. Demand was principally for good steers and sales of carloads were made at $8.25 to $8.50, while fairly good stock changed hands at $7.75 to $8 per 100 pounds.

Owing to the stronger feeling in the Toronto market for hogs at the latter part of last week and the advance in prices of 15c to 25c per 100 pounds, a much stronger feeling developed in the local market and prices advanced 25c to 50c per 100 pounds.

Building on the Field of Waterloo.

When the centenary of the battle of Waterloo is celebrated next year visitors to the famous field will find that it has largely lost its rural appearance, as it has become a favorite site for building of country villas. There are no fewer than fifty now on the field where Napoleon met his doom, and many of them are built on the very spots that were occupied by the combatants. The field is an ideal situation for country retreats. The completion of good motor roads from Nivelles and Charleroi has done much to stimulate villa building.

Milk in Greece.

The principal sources of milk supply in Greece are sheep and goats. It is reported that the sheep on the island of Scopello drop two and often four lambs. The milk yield often reaches two to five pints per day, especially the first three months after lambing. There are about 3,000,000 goats in Greece. The indigenous mountain breed gives but little milk, while Maltese goats give from three to five pints per day.

HALIFAX PORT CLOSED

No Reason Is Given For Sudden Move.

HALIFAX, N.S., Aug. 11.—The port of Halifax has been temporarily closed. Naval officials announced no ships now in port will be allowed to sail until this order is countermanded. Any British ships arriving off the harbor will be convoyed in after the regular examination, but once in port they will not be allowed to take their departure. Customs house officials have been ordered not to clear any more vessels. One vessel which had been given her clearance yesterday morning was hastily recalled. Coastwise ships now in port will be seriously affected by this order. Fishing vessels and others from ports along eastern and western shores are not allowed to sail.

The fog signal at Meagher's beach will be discontinued on and after Tuesday morning according to orders given. No reason is given for the order.

Austrians Bombard Antivari,

ROME, Aug. 11.—(Via London.)—Austrian cruisers bombarded Antivari, Montenegro, Saturday morning, destroying the wireless station, according to advices brought to Bari, near Briadisi, by steamer yesterday. Besides the wireless station, several houses, factories and the port warehouses were destroyed. The cruisers also directed their fire on a mountain where Montenegrins had taken refuge. Later they departed towards Cattaro.

British Fleet Moving To Tsingtau.

SHANGHAI, Aug. 11.—A British fleet proceeding toward Tsingtau passed Shanghai yesterday. Cannonading was reported by an incoming ship. It is believed that German warships are bottled up in Tsingtau harbor.

CANADA'S GIFT TO BRITAIN

One Million Bags of Flour to be Shipped to Alleviate Distress---Canada Will Likely be Customer for United States Wheat

OTTAWA, Aug. 10.—The Government offered one million bags of flour as a gift to the people of the United Kingdom to be placed at the disposal of the Imperial Government, and to be used for whatever purpose seemed best. The following reply has been received:

"On behalf of the people of the United Kingdom, His Majesty's Government accepts with deep gratitude the splendid and welcome gift of flour from Canada, which will be of the greatest use for the steadying of prices and relief of distress in this country. We can never forget the generosity and promptitude of this gift and the patriotism from which it springs."

The Canadian Government has since perfected arrangements for fulfilling their offer and shipments will begin in the immediate future.

The Government contract for the million bags of flour with the Western Canada Milling Co., the Ogilvie Co., Lake of the Woods Co., and the Maple Leaf Milling Co. It is understood that the price was about $2.80 per bag.

Ottawa, August 11.—The million bags of flour, which the people of Canada have sent to Great Britain will, it is believed, do a great deal to relieve the food situation in the Mother Country. The price paid was $2.80 per bag.

It is not believed here that this will materially affect the price in Canada as this class of grain is available, and the capacity of Canadian mills is thirty million barrels per year. The delivery is to be gradual and the grain secured before the announcement, so that prices should not go up unreasonably.

Canada is likely to become a considerable market for the United States wheat, judging by reports. One firm has sent 50,000 bushels to Toronto, and another 50,000 bushels to other Ontario points, via Detroit. The price was $1.10, duty paid.

Legislative steps will likely be taken by the Government to prevent any undue inflating of prices because of the war. Already inquiries are being conducted with a view of ascertaining to what extent this has occurred, and also in what commodities.

It is probable that, in the coming session, the powers of the Government will be considerably extended so as to effectively deal with any attempts which may be made to corner the markets.

The gift of flour to Great Britain, and the similar purchase of oats for cavalry mounts, together with a census being taken of meat supplies are salutory steps designed to be of benefit not only to Canada, but to the Mother Country.

France Enrols Alsatians.

PARIS, Aug. 11.—It is officially announced that citizens of Alsace-Lorraine are to be enrolled in one of the foreign regiments being organized to help France. Immediately upon signing for the duration of the war such volunteers became of French nationality and may then be transferred to any regiment.

The personnel of the Russian embassy at Vienna has been conducted to the Swiss frontier and is coming to Paris.

The Belgian Government has given orders to the Belgian state railway management to place itself at the disposal of the French military administration the same as the Belgian.

Students in Paris have formed an anti-collar league, declaring that collars are unhealthy and inartistic.

Dust an Electric Generator.

Raising a cloud of dust produces a considerable amount of electrification. In a late London Royal Society paper, W. A. D. Rudye stated that insulated conductors held in a stream of dust became charged to some hundreds of volts, some particles seeming to be charged negatively by friction and some positively, and the finer material receiving the stronger and more persistent charge.

When air was blown through a wash bottle containing fine material the charge produced in the air continued for quite a long time. The charge varies with the material—mercury sulphide sand, molybdic acid and acid bodies generally becoming negatively electrified, and coal, flour, red lead, alkaloids and basic bodies, positively.

FRANCE AND AUSTRIA.

The Two Countries Are Now at War as Result of Aggression.

PARIS, Aug. 11.—(Via London.)—It was officially announced last night that France had broken off diplomatic relations with Austria-Hungary. The French Ambassador at Vienna has left the Austrian capital, and the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador at Paris has asked for his passports.

There is much speculation here to-day over the effect this declaration will have on Italy's position. Under the terms of her treaty with Austria and Germany she is bound to come to their aid when they are "attacked." However, in the case of Britain and Germany, where there was a dual declaration, the Italian Government took the position that Britain was not the aggressor. In the present instance France acted, taking the initiative, but only after she had raised the point that her frontier was endangered by Austrian troops. Should Italy accept this position she can continue her plan of neutrality and refuse to be drawn into the war."

It's as difficult for some women to get their hats on in the evening as it is for some men to get theirs on the next morning.

"Dead" Soldier Sits Up.

One of the men of the First royal Scots fusileers, who reached Southampton recently from South Africa, was Private McDevet, who, though in the prime of life, has snow white hair. He had a narrow escape from being buried alive in India. After an attack of fever he was pronounced to be dead and was placed on a slab in the mortuary to await burial. Two hours later the sentry outside heard knocking from within. He opened the door and was startled to see McDevet sitting up. The experience turned McDevet's hair white. The sentry was driven mad by the shock and died.—London Mail.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

THE FRENCH PAPERS.

Editor Review,

Sir, — Your editorials on the French papers and their splendid articles in reply on the war show high water mark for the Peterborough Review. Country dailies, like country weeklies, as a rule confine themselves to telling lies about grateful patrons and subscribers who view with dismay if not envy any idea the editor may have that he is a man with a mission, however small, in a corner of Canada. That your position is an important one is indicated by the fact that the French papers of the first rank found that you had "struck oil" and flocked to respond accordingly. You have treated the subject in an earnest and gentlemanly way and those who are able to appreciate the situation and willing to do so without regard to politics, religion and the like will be grateful to you and to the Review for the first strong stand it has taken on a vital question in many years. I know a large number of thoughtful people who may not think, however, of ringing you up and expressing their gratitude who are of the same opinion as my own that you have done a great and noble service in one corner of the Empire to the Empire.

Yours,
READER.

TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL WAR-HOSPITAL SHIP.

Editor Review,

Sir,—A committee of the Trades and Labor Council interviewed Manager Clayton as regards helping the Daughters of the Empire to raise $100,000, proposed by them for a Canadian Hospital Ship to be placed at the services of Great Britain during the present war.

Mr. Clayton was only too pleased to have the committee of the Trades and Labor Council interview him on this important subject, and as a loyal British subject has consented to hand over the receipts of his three moving picture shows, Royal, Princess, Red Mill, on Wednesday next, the 12th August (including matinee performances, in the afternoon, towards this glorious and patriotic effort of the Daughters of the Empire.

It is only those who have seen the horrors of a battlefield, and have experienced the sight of the wounded (many dying) can realize the difference of a Field Hospital and a Hospital Ship.

Hoping the people of Peterboro including our most prominent citizens will appreciate the kindness of Mr. Clayton, and visit his theatres next Wednesday, so as to enable the Daughters of the Empire to equip this Canadian ship for the sick and wounded.

Committee Trades and Labor Council.

P.S.—The Labor Council are supplying ticket collectors for Wednesday next at these theatres.

Peterboro, 10th August, 1914.

FORGET THE FASHIONS.

Editor Review:

Dear Sir:—In this dreadful hour when the dogs of war are let loose and our country is in the throes of the battle and our brave sons are hurrying to the front to defend our peaceful shores against a ruthless enemy, it behooves every patriotic and loyal citizen, male and female, to lay aside all selfishness and such to add their greater quota to the common weal of their country. We are all aware of the terrible suffering and want that follows in the horrible trail of war. Self-sacrifice and self-denial are the best tests of one's patriotism. They may take many forms. The one (but it is only one of the many) that strikes me as the most feasible and at the same time involving no hardships would be for the women (who are always foremost in good works) to get together and resolve that the fall fashions shall be entirely ignored and the money turned over as a war fund. This would not in any way interfere with one's necessary wearing apparel or comfort. The women of Paris, where those abominable fashions originate, are adopting this plan. Surely then our Canadian women are just as loyal and self-denying.

The plan could be the most readily carried out by the women of the different churches taking the matter up and carrying it to a successful issue. There is no telling how many millions can then be contributed to such a fund when spread all over Canada. No doubt the ministers of the churches would co-operate in such a humane and loyal movement, and when supplemented by the power of the press, its success would be assured. What say you, Mr. Editor?

Yours truly,
CANADIAN.

Equal Share of Work for all

Mayor Buller has instructed the works' department to make such arrangement as will give the workmen engaged in outside operations an equal share in the work.

The work on sewers, sidewalks and other local improvements will be proceeded with as long as possible, and while there may not be steady work for all, the Mayor's idea is to distribute the work so that all the men will be employed part of the time.

SMITH FIRE WAS FOUGHT SUCCESSFULLY

Farm Property and Grain Were in Danger

The residents of Smith Township received a bad scare on Sunday afternoon when a fire swept over some fifty acres of pasture land and bush. It was about two o'clock when the fire was first noticed at the rear of Mr. S. T. Millburn's farm which is about three miles from the city on the East Communication Road. A few immediate neighbors were soon on the scene but a minute's glance told them that more aid was needed or the whole section of the county would be burned to the lake. Some of the men commenced working while the rest rushed for aid. One thought of the advisability of requesting the telephone operators to phone around the neighborhood and the ever accommodating "hello girls" performed the task in a manner that the farmers of the Township of Smith are much indebted to them.

All the hotels in the city were notified and in the course of three-quarters of an hour some two hundred persons were on the scene and were waging battle against an enemy far more to be feared by rural folks than the German Kaiser. Five or six teams were busily engaged ploughing a furrow around the burning section while the majority of the men assisted in removing the oats on a field owned by Mr. J. H. McManus.

The fire was held within the part ploughed around and smouldered for hours but didn't break out afresh. Luckily no grain was burned, the damage being confined to the fences of Mr. Millburn and the pastures. Other fires are reported from Mount Pleasant and near Keene

Fire in Douro.

The parishioners of St. Joseph's Church, Douro, were called upon to act in the capacity of fire fighters on Sunday morning while en route to Mass. The pasture land near the residence of Mr. John Leahy was ablaze and it was only after a great deal of difficulty that it was extinguished. Had the fire obtained greater headway all the buildings on the farm would have undoubtedly been burned.

BRUCE KETCHUM FATALLY HURT

Ottawa Athlete Was Nephew of Mr. A. J. Grant of This City

Bruce Ketchum, a well known athlete at Ottawa, died in the hospital yesterday, from injuries which he received at Britannia Park, following the collapse of a diving tower.

The late Mr. Ketchum was a nephew of Mr. Alex. J. Grant, Gilmour Street, and Mr. Grant leaves tonight for Ottawa to attend the funeral.

The Ottawa Citizen reports the accident as follows:

Bruce Ketchum, the well known athlete, son of Mr. Harry Ketchum, head of Ketchum and Co., sporting goods store, lies in the Protestant General Hospital rather seriously injured about the spine and legs as a result of striking a log when he was hurled into the water at the head of the pier at Britannia about four o'clock yesterday afternoon from the top platform of a diving tower which suddenly collapsed. About 15 other young men were on the tower when the accident happened but they all escaped unhurt.

Ketchum was on the top platform 20 feet above the surface of the water with Don Batterton, preparing to make a fancy dive just before the accident happened. A crowd of about 100 people stood on the end of the pier watching him, when they noticed the tower begin to quiver. The next moment it fell over with a crash carrying all who were on it into the water in a promiscuous heap. A few moments later several persons in the crowd on the pier shouted to those in the water that Ketchum was evidently hurt for he lay inert in the water.

Frank Lachance, one of those who was thrown from the tower, but who was not hurt in any way, swam out to Ketchum, who, it was found was unconscious. Lachance shouted for help and others soon swam to help him take Ketchum to the pier. From the pier the injured young man was taken to the club house where first aid was rendered. Dr. David Graham, house surgeon at St. Luke's hospital was summoned from the city and he in turn called an ambulance. Dr. Graham gave such medical treatment as was necessary for the time and then Ketchum was taken to the Protestant Hospital, where an examination by doctors revealed that his injuries were rather serious.

Batterton, who was on the top platform with Ketchum when the tower fell and all the others on the platforms below, were not hurt in any way, though they had narrow escapes from injury.

It was only last Saturday that Ketchum won the Britannia Boating Club fancy diving championship.

WORK FOR THE MILLS.

Saturday afternoon saw the large drive of logs for the Peterboro Lumber Co. tailed in at the Little Lake. All their logs required for the present season are now on hand while those of the McDonald estate will be tailed in in the course of a few days. It is expected that toward the latter part of this week McDonald's Mill will resume operations.

COL. ROGERS PASSES AT VICTORIA

Was Postmaster Here for Many Years

A former well known and highly respected citizen of Peterboro passed away suddenly at the home of his daughter, Victoria, B.C., Saturday evening, in the person of Col. H. C. Rogers, who was prominent in local military circles here, and also postmaster for many years. Information about the cause of his death is very meagre, but is is supposed heart ailment was the cause. Col. Rogers was in his seventy-fifth year. He was born at Grafton in Northumberland County in 1839. He was a son of James Rogers, who was very prominent in the early municipal life of Cobourg and the vicinity, and at one time represented the Newcastle District in the parliament of Upper Canada. Col. Rogers came to Peterboro during the early days of his life and for many years was identified with the lumber and mercantile industries. He was appointed postmaster in 1871 and held the position with credit until 1909, when he retired of his own will. Shortly afterwards he moved to Victoria where he was at the time of his demise. He always showed keen interest in military work and was attached to the 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons as commanding officer of "C" troop. He was an active worker in the Anglican Church, holding the position of warden in both St. John's and St. Luke's Churches.

Col. Rogers' wife predeceased him two years ago. He is survived by one brother, E. J. of Denver, Col., two sisters, Mrs. (Dr.) Burritt, Toronto, Mrs. E. Cuddy, Cobourg, five sons, Walter, Lincoln Inn, London, Dr. Herbert, Victoria, Harry, inspector of prisons and asylums in England, Captain Guy, formerly of the Royal Engineers, but now a professor at the R.M.C., and David, a barrister at Seattle, and two daughters, Ethel Barnard, Victoria, and Helen Robertson of Victoria. Mrs. Barnard's husband is M.P. for Victoria while Mrs. Robertson's husband is a prominent coast lawyer.

No information has come to hand regarding funeral arrangements, but it is thought the remains may be brought here for interment.

MUSIC AND HORSES

Biggest Horse Act in the World at the Canadian National Exhibition

The Musical Ride will be at the Canadian National Exhibition again, of course. It is the biggest and best display of horsemanship on this continent. Those 32 wonderful dragoons, on their spirited horses, whirling through their mazy figures to the music of the band, are old favorites of "the regulars" at the Fair and a never-failing delight to new visitors.

The Minister Was Puzzled.

At a marriage service performed some time ago in a little country church in Georgia, when the minister said in a solemn tone, "Wilt thou have this man to be thy wedded husband?" instead of the woman answering for herself a gruff man's voice answered:

"I will."

The minister looked up, very much perplexed, and paused. He repeated the sentence, and again the same gruff voice answered, "I will."

Again the minister looked up surprised, not knowing what to make of it, when one of the groomsmen at the end of the row said:

"She is deaf. I am answering for her."—Lippincott's.

Jas. Jordan Thought He Was at the Front

"I had a few drinks of beer and I thought I was at the front," pleaded Jimmie Jordan, an old soldier this morning before Magistrate Dumble on the charge of being drunk and disorderly and also assaulting Constable Cookman. He was fined $5.75 on the latter charge, and let out on suspended sentence on the drunk charge.

"I'll bet you forty to one that I never touch another drink," declared Jimmie as he departed from the court room.

While arresting Jordan, Constable Cookman had his left shoulder painfully injured.

LORD'S DAY ALLIANCE AFTER TERRIBLE SHAG

FOR SUNDAY BALL AT HULL

Ottawa, Aug. 11.—Frank Shaughnessy, manager; Thomas Gorman and Malcolm Brice, of the Ottawa Baseball Club, are all sumomned to appear in the Hull court on Friday morning, the 14th, at ten o'clock on the charge of violating the Lord's Day Act.

The first charge is for having allowed the playing of Sunday baseball, the second charge is for having employed ball players for to play on Sunday, or in the words of the summons, "for having employed one Frank Dolan," the third charge is for having advertised Sunday baseball.

The action is taken by the Lord's Day Alliance through their solicitor, J. E. Caldwell, on the grounds that the playing of baseball on Sunday for gain is not in accordance with provisions in the Lord's Day Act.

Another summons has also been prepared for the London Baseball Club, who will also have to appear on Friday morning. The charge against the London Baseball club is for having allowed their players to play and here are mentioned the names of such redoubtable players as F. C. Reisling, Cyrus Reidy, Michael Mullin, Jack Snyder, Henry Steiger, etc.

COMMENT

Peterboro fans for the disgraceful mob scene they attempted to stage during the afternoon game of yesterday. Such demonstrations do not help to popularise the great pastime but instead they have a degrading tendency. There was no justification whatever for the actions of the crowd. The writer ventures to say that those who remained in their places as gentlemen know more about baseball than the motly throng that surged on the field, in rebellious style. Umpire Lush, we venture to say did his best. The Review can hardly imagine that a man would deliberately favor a visiting club, as most umpires have that feeling for "Home Sweet Home." It is not Umpire Lush that should be blamed. He, no doubt is incapable, but really he did his best. Both games were hard to handle. Mr. Fan, sit back and think. When a game is hard to score it is hard to handle and both of the games yesterday, free hitting contests as you know, were difficult to handle. We venture to say that if Umpire Lush had more backbone, some of the old "got back on the bench" or "you're out of the game" spirit he would be a good man. However it is not all his fault.

The fault and responsibility of the actions of Mr. Lush rest with J. P. Fitzgerald, the paid president of the league. Mr. Fitzgerald in the writer's opinion is one of the best posted if not the best posted baseball man in Canada. He is a good fellow from the ground up, but he lacks the iron hand. He receives a salary of $800 per year from the league and we know not what from the Toronto Telegram. The trouble with our president is "He is too good natured." What the Canadian League needs is a pilot who will rule with a firm arm, some one who will curtail the "boss rule" which seems to exist on the field. He has given Peterboro one umpire. His name is MILLER. He is the only real one that has worked here, because he is the only man that runs the game regardless of the players. The man higher up is the man to be criticized, not his employees. The Canadian League has lacked a stern leader since its organization and it will never be a success under its present constitution. Schedules have been "watered" for the benefit of a few and things in general "bottled." J. P. may not have the time and we know he could not give all his time for the money he receives, but the Canadian League's future depends on its executive heads.

Kubat, "Shag's" best port sider will leave as soon as possible for Youngstown, Pa., where he will have his lame salary whip treated by Bonesetter Reese, the famous specialist who has remedied more defects in the flinging wings than any other living man.

The Ottawa Club is travelling at a great clip and London will have to display some very flashy ball to retain the supremacy of the league. The Senators are hitting in deadly fashion and it will take some pitching to stop them. The fielding of the club is also very good and given fair pitching the Senators will make a strong stretch bid.

Mike Mullin who got in bad with the London officials has been traded to Hamilton for Gilhooley. Mullin was hitting .342 and his presence should add batting strength to the Hams while his appearance will plug the gap at third, which Pendry failed to fill.

MERCANTILE LEAGUE.

BESIEGERS WITHDRAW AND FIGHT AT LONG RANGE

They Are Now Bombarding Ring of Forts With Siege Guns—Allies Are Threatening to Cut German Force Off From Base of Supplies—Kaiser's Officers Commit Outrages on Civilians.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 11.—(Via Paris—According to the War Office, the fighting at Liege has now narrowed down to exchanges of shots between the German siege guns, which have been thrown about the unyielding forts, and the artillery of the forts themselves, which are picking off points in the German position at long range. Evidently the Germans have for the time abandoned their efforts to take the forts.

The commander of the forts at Liege, according to an official announcement, reports that all the forts are intact. The soldiers manning them are in fine health and spirits, and are amply supplied with provisions and munitions. There is no cause for alarm.

The population of Liege maintains its calm, and the official view is that the situation is quite satisfactory. All the approaches to Brussels are well guarded, to prevent anything in the nature of a surprise from reconnoitering parties of German cavalry. Small bodies of Uhlans have been signalled in all directions. Generally they had lost their bearings and surrendered immediately on being challenged.

The German army corps at Liege are in danger of being cut off from all sources of supplies. The German army invasion north of the River Meuse is being sharply attacked by the French and Belgian cavalry, [illegible] infantry and field artillery, [illegible] to have broke through [illegible] line of communication [illegible] of points, having blown [illegible], torn up railroad tracks, and in other ways seriously interfered with transportation.

The German base toward the Dutch border is now being harassed by the French and Belgian cavalry, and their supports, all of which have pushed, by a series of dashes, far north of the River Meuse. The Germans already have relinquished the attack along the River Ourthe, which joins the Meuse about a mile from Liege, and are assembling to rebuff the oncoming French and Belgian forces.

There is considerable probability that the allied army is planning to assume the offensive.

The garrison of Liege, with its reinforcements, has retreated, according to the War Office, for "strategic reasons," and is retiring to Namur, where the French, Belgian and British armies are collected.

The check that Germany has received at the hands of the French and Belgians renders France able to place in position her reinforcements, and now Germany will be obliged to contest every inch of the way as she proceeds south.

It is reported that following their arrival at Warsage, in the Province of Liege, the German soldiers assembled all the inhabitants, and after selecting fourteen from among them, shot eight and hanged two of this number. The mayor was arrested, but was liberated by some German officers who had been his guests the previous day. Other instances of alleged outrages by German troops are cited in the Belgian Government press.

That patriotism is rampant is shown by the fact that the Belgian Minister of War has announced that 40,000 volunteers have presented themselves for service.

Hundreds of German spies swarn through Belgium. More than five hundred have been arrested, and one hundred were shot yesterday.

Captured spies were dressed in every conceivable sort of garb, including uniforms of soldiers and officers of the Belgian army, gendarmes, civic guards, etc. Some were found armed with bombs and revolvers, and others were caught while riding in automobiles carrying false numbers. Letters and telegrams bearing the counterfeit signature of the Belgian Minister of War were found on the person of some of the spies.

Kaiser Calls Out Last Reserves.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 11. — Advices reported here from Berlin say that the Kaiser has ordered the mobilisation of another million men for the French invasion. The call includes the Landsturm, the last line of reserves.

A Few Casual Inquiries.

"Now, don't talk too much when you go to call on your neighbor. You may answer questions, of course."

"That is all I ever do," said the child. "And they ask a great many questions. Last time they asked how much salary papa got and if he ever quarreled with you."—Kansas City Journal.

FRENCH ARE ADVANCING IN FAN-SHAPE MOVEMENT

Terrible Battle is Believed to Have Occurred Yesterday in the Vicinity of Neu Breisach.

LONDON, Aug. 11. — A terrific battle is believed to have been in progress during the day between the German and French forces near Neu Breisach for the control of Alsace-Lorraine. Neu Breisach is strongly fortified, and it is said that a division of the second German army has been concentrated there to check the advance of the French, who have already swept through Ferny, Muhlhausen, Altkirch and Colmar.

French reinforcements are reported to be rushing through the pass east of Belfort, in an effort to prevent a force of 40,000 Austrians from cutting the French line of advance between Altkirch and Muhlhausen. The Austrians, it is said, are in force near Basle, Switzerland.

The Germans, it is reported, are hurrying reinforcements to Neu Breisach from Strassburg.

The French War Office reports an important engagement pending between the French and German troops in Lorraine, below Saarburg. It is believed the French artillery is supporting an attacking column engaging Germans coming on from Saarburg.

Muhlhausen, Ferny and Colmar all are now in the possession of the French troops. Alsace is inflamed against the Germans, whose army is now concentrating on the front of Gen. Joffre, the French commander.

Neu Breisach, east of Colmar, and Strassburg, on its north, are the centre of the German advance. The German army of the lower Rhine, meanwhile, is proceeding against the French, whose lines extend across to the Rhine along the Swiss border.

The French cavalry patrol has been driven from the border town of Longuyon, in the department of the Meurthe et Moselle by German Horse, supported by infantry and artillery.

After wresting, in desperate encounters, the passes of Bonhomme and Sainte Marie, on the frontier below Muhlhausen, from the German troops, the French now occupy the village of Sainte Marie, Aux Mines. The fighting continues along the line.

Spread out in fan-fashion, the French army in Alsace, led by Gen. Joffre is moving from the Jura Mountains on the Swiss border through all of Alsace, to a point east of Colmar, now held by the French. This is the second mobilization centre of the French army which has its headquarters at Langris. The Germans, according to the War Office report, after making their first stand at Altkirch, retired rapidly and it was not until Colmar was reached that Gen. Joffre's men encountered any serious opposition. Muhlhausen fell without any long continued fighting.

At Colmar there was considerable sharp fighting, wherein the French are reported to have beaten back the Germans in a succession of brilliant bayonet charges. Many hand-to-hand encounters took place in this battle. The German forces are now said to be trying to dam the Seille river, which forms part of the boundary of Lorraine, being a tributary of the Mosel. This move is said to be intended to prevent the French from assauling Metz.

German troops are said to be moving on France by way of Luxemburg, the main column being reported at Esch.

Eight Austrian regiments are said to have violated the neutrality of Switzerland, according to a Basle report, and they are now said to be on the Alsace border, preparing to attack the French in the rear in Alsace. These are said to be the choice of the Austrian Tyrol soldiery, hardy mountaineers capable of giving vigorous battle to the French. The Foreign Office is said to have demanded from the Austrian Ambassador a declaration regarding the intentions of Austria.

At the capture of Muhlhausen, the French seized a big aeroplane factory, in which they found a number of machines intended for the German army. As they are near completion, they will be finished and then confiscated.

The plan of the German engineers to flood the valley of the Seille has proved ineffectual.

Both the French and German aerial force, in the fighting along the ridges of the Vosges Mountain range, have been most active.

Into upper Alsace yesterday came detachments of the famous Turcos, or native troops from the French colony of Algeria. They are a bold and well-trained body of fighting men.

Queen's Will Send Engineers.

THE SPORTING WORLD

PENNANT CHASERS FOUGHT THEIR WAY TO DOUBLE WIN

Petes Had Satisfaction of Driving Peterson From the Hill Top in Second Battle

'Twas a sad Civic Holiday. The Petes dropped two pastimes to the fast coming Ottawa crew, the morning score being 5-4 and the afternoon final being 7-5. Fight, not of the "pug" assortment won both games for Ottawa, and the games were only another evidence of what a team can do when it tries. We have no hesitancy in saying that the Peterboro crew, realizing they are out of the hunt, failed to get in there and fight. The statement does not apply to all the members of the club, but sad to relate it is a reality, concerning the majority. It may be said that Umpire Lush is the juiciest lemon ever thrust upon the local fans. He was undoubtedly very bad, both from the standpoint of optics and judgment, and his work has prompted us to say that James Patrick Fitzgerald, although a gentleman and all that, is a very bad executive head, if he cannot produce better officials than he has shown the fans of Peterboro. About 1,000 fans trotted out in the morning, regardless of a threatening rain storm, while the afternoon crowd was away above the 1,500 mark. Lush worked the double system in Ottawa, and why should Peterboro fans be forced to sit in misery, under such a loyal response, at the expense of what we term a Mr. Mush?

Truly, a good umpire might have changed the map of the Canadian League. Again he may not have, but at any rate, Mr. Lush proved himself the "creme de incapable." That is sufficient for this column, but news of war on this foolish umps may be read in another column.

The two games were exciting. Of that there is no denying. They were clubfests of the sort which make the fan forget about the gout, the taste of the motorman's glove in the palate, rain and even the fact that he is married. They were nip and tuck struggles from the ground up and dissention on the Peterboro bench helped "Shag" more than the decisions of the umpire did, but that point far from excuses the umpire.

The hurlers for the day could all be flipped for. None of the strong arm crew was great, by any means. Tracey and Roberts hurled in the morning encounter, while Peterson, Gero, Sterling and Schettler served them up in the afternoon. You could not for one moment blame the pitchers. The ball was heavy, soggy, slippery, juicy and everything else while the batters had their pinning clothes on and hung out many a single, double, triple and one homer, which fell to smiling Cosy Dolan of Ottawa. It was a dark, sultry, sticky day and a fan could hardly expect a man to go at top speed in the box under the weather conditions which existed. As it was they did very well and in our opinion a mistake was made in sending Schettler in to relieve Sterling in the afternoon battle as Louie was far from fit. A man cannot pitch every day and Knute Belting looked fair. Sterling was taken out because he complained of a sore arm. Peterson was relieved because he was grooving them and because he shot a high one to Sterling which Bob, as most pitchers do, leaned back and hit.

From a standpoint of luck, Ottawa had the breaks. In the seventh of the afternoon battle Peterboro should have shoved over a quartette. Dolan was hit by a batted ball, which took a bad bound, when two runs would have counted had the ball escaped him or he escaped the ball. What the umps did to help the Senators in both games, is public property.

"Shag" carried off the clubbing honors from a point of effectiveness. He had five hits during the day and most of them hurt. In the afternoon Irish met Irish and naturally there was some swinging of the Shillelah. The Dolans who both cover first livened up to the traditions of the little spot in Ireland and the old oak for which the spot is famed did great work. The Ottawa Dolan failed to smash the fences in the first game but in the second he had a homer, a double and a ripping single. His name sake, did even better, by polling out four hits in the second game, two of them doubles. To add to the glory of the land of potatoes and cudgles, Kelly uncorked an arm which would have made an Archer, Bresnahan or Gibson sit up. His throwing was about the best shown here since the advent of the Canuck League. He nipped thieves in the bud and picked a few off first, for good measure. Rooney who also has a tinge of Shamrock in him slammed the hide to further climates.

Dusty Bullock had a good day in the field and looked better than he did when Rube Deneau used to supply him with meal tickets. King and Fox also displayed form while Mitchell played great ball in the afternoon affair. He was a little off in the morning owing to the sticky going, which seemed to affect every one for a time.

The runs as a whole were all earned. The errors that were made, would have hardly altered the result as Ottawa clearly demonstrated that a ball game is never won until it is over. Hits came in bunches as the summary will show, and the only error which probably altered circumstances was Kelly's unlucky muff of Fox's wonderful relay from left field.

The Petes had golden opportunities to sew both games up but luck broke against them as is shown when they grabbed but three runs on six hits, two of which were two baggers and one a triple in the fifth. It was in that innings of the second game that Dolan was out by inches at third when his safeness meant so much. Then again in the seventh, the Petes had four hits but Dolan was hit by a batted ball, choking off at least two runs.

SAME SCORE BOTH GAMES

De Laval and Bankers Won in Mercantile League

Both games in the Mercantile League at Riverside Park on Saturday afternoon ended with a score of 5-3. In the first fixture the Wm. Hamilton Co. were vanquished by the De Laval while in the second the Bankers were victorious over the Printers. The fans are beginning to take a little more interest in the only amateur league in the city as there was a fairly large collection of rooters in the stand. Despite anticipations the games were very close and were marked by some real fast work.

When the manager of the Hamilton Brigade ordered his tribe to the field a couple of men were missing and as there were printers available he filled in with the wearers of the red. Frank Neary went to the box and Henry to the initial sack and both gave a good account of themselves. With a little better support in the pinches the De Laval might have suffered a defeat for at the end of the fifth they were behind 3-2. In the sixth the men from the south-end factory scored three and that practically put the game on ice. Callaghan, the shortstop for the De Laval team worked on the mound in the absence of Carson and Jack Mahoney who pitched against the Red Caps on Thursday played the shortfield. Grieves were absent and Kenneally went to third. Crough took the field. The team suffered very little by the changes as the infield had two double plays to their credit.

Pitched Both Games.

When Frank Neary walked to the box again for the Typos in the second game the majority of fans thought the Bankers would drive him to cover in the first few innings but there was a surprise in store for them. Had his team mates given him the proper support and thrown out the anchor when they started to ascend, Neary would certainly have beaten the Bankers. At the end of the seventh the score stood 3-2 in favor of the newspaper men but the Bankers called for a nine inning game and when they went to bat in the eighth a couple of errors by the men in the field and three hits resulted in three more runs being counted making the total five. In the Printers' half Neary opened with a single to left but was caught off first and the prospective rally didn't materialize.

Roy Smith was on the firing job for the Bankers and with a little better support by Phelan, his catcher, he would have been credited with pitching a nice game. As it was he was inclined to be wild and Phelan let several low ones hit the stand which made it look all the worse for Smith. George Minorgan played first and with the exception of one juicy error put up a fair game. The rest of the team played average ball. The fielding specialties were contributed by Miller in left for the Typos, who pulled down a hard fly after a long run ; by Henry the first baseman for the same team who tore off a couple one hand stabs and by Sheehy the shortfielder for the winners. Dick covered a lot of ground and threw well to first.

"Ab" Quinlan umpired both conflicts and gave the usual satisfaction.

FIRST PROFESSIONAL BASEBALL PLAYER

This is another of the widely disputed questions. It is an admitted fact, however, that professionalism in the game has existed from the early fifties.

The first player of record to actually change his address for a stipulated sum was A. J. Reach. He was offered a salary to play with the old Athletics of Philadelphia in 1864 and moved from Brooklyn to the Quaker City in order to accept.

On the question of the best, if not the first, baseball competition, however, there can be no doubt—it is the Summer Pastime now running in this paper.

COMMENT

As You Like It

After the last executive meeting of the Mercantile League, when the De Laval-Red Caps game was ordered re-played because the latter team had played an unregistered player, the secretary of the league notified teams that had been delinquent on that point in the past that the playing of a man without a certificate in future would forfeit the game without the formality of a protest. In both games on Saturday outside men were used. The secretary of the league told a Typo player during the first game that should the De Laval lose, the game became theirs without further question as Wm. Hamilton's had outside men. As the De Laval pulled out a win, however, the incident passed without further comment. In the second game the Bankers were the offenders, three of their regulars not being able to get there in time, and they had to substitute other men, one not being a resident of the city. Rather than claim the game, the manager of the Typos promised the Bankers that he would not protest the game, and has allowed the time limit to go by without doing so, but as a team especially warned by the executive as to what awaited them if they disobeyed in this regard, they think it is up to that body to give this matter some consideration.

Anyone who has witnessed baseball games from the viewpoint of a fan and especially an impartial follower realizes that Umpire Lush is one the poorest handlers of the indicator that ever operated in Peterboro. That fact does not excuse

SOME KEEN RACES

Attended by ideal weather the annual regatta of the Stoney Lake Cottagers Association held yesterday afternoon at Juniper Island was one of the best held for some years. The dance held in the evening was largely attended by the younger element of the lakes. Huycke's orchestra supplied the music. Great credit is due the energetic committee for the manner in which they carried out every detail in connection with the sports program and other matters. Among those who figured prominently were Messrs. Robert Neill, Dr. Willoughby, J. S. Knapman, Felix Brownscombe and W. Eddis.

ACCIDENT IN LUMBER CAMP PROVES FATAL

Joseph Foley, Sustained a Fracture of Skull When Tree Fell

Joseph Foley of Madoc who was injured on Thursday last at John McCullough's camp in Anstruther by being struck with a falling tree, passed away at St. Joseph's Hospital last evening. Fellow employes brought the injured man to the city on Friday and he was placed in the hospital under the care of Dr. Gallivan. He was found to be suffering from a fractured skull and from the first very little hope was held out for his recovery.

Design for Scott Memorial Chosen

London. — The design for the memorial to Captain Scott and his comrades which was submitted by Albert H. Hodge, has been unanimously chosen by the selection committee, the members of which are Hon. Harry Lawson, M. P., Sir Edgar Speyer, Sir Thomas Brock, R. A., and Lionel Earle, secretary of the office of works.

After carefully considering the designs submitted by the six sculptors who consented to compete, the committee selected the model to which the motto "Pro Patria" was attached — this being the one sent in by Mr. Hodge. All the designs were of a very high standard of merit.

The monument consists of a granite pylon surmounted by a bronze group representing "Courage," sustained by "Patriotism," spurning "Fear, Despair and Death," the figure "Courage" being crowned by "Immortality."

Below the group the words "For King," "For Country," "For Brotherly Love" and "For Knowledge" are inscribed. The front of the pylon bears the names of the five officers whose portrait medallions in bronze occupy the most prominent position on the monument. The medallions are brought into relationship by a broad band of laurel leaves.

On the back of the monument is a trophy composed of a pair of snowshoes, a replica of the cross erected on "Observation Hill," and a wreath, relics of the journey. Beneath are Scott's words:

"Had we lived I should have had a tale to tell of the hardihood, endurance and courage of my companions which would have stirred the heart of every Englishman."

Forming a base to the pylon is a poddium, on the four sides of which are placed bronze relief panels, depicting the expedition. The subjects for these panels are taken from the inscription at Observation Hill, "To Strive" (showing the difficulties surmounted on the journey); "To Seek" (showing the start for the pole); "And Not to Yield" showing the tent covered with snow—the last resting place of the officers).

The whole monument will be within a square raised upon steps, the total height being about 37 feet.

Expectancy.

AUTOCRACY AND DEMOCRACY

(New York World.)

O great corrector of enormous times,
Shaker of o'er-rank states, thou grand decider
Of dusty and old titles, that healest with blood
The earth when it is sick, and curest the world
O' the pleurisy of people!
—Beaumont and Fletcher.

When peace is again established in Europe there will come a new order of things. Democracy will not stand forever upon the scaffold, with autocracy forever on the throne.

Ten days ago the German people were at peace with all the world. They had no quarrel of their own with anybody. In the years that had followed the downfall of Napoleon III. they had won the admiration of every civilized country. Out of a condition of general poverty they had arisen to great wealth and prosperity. They had become the leaders and teachers of all the nations in the development of scientific industry. Their commerce reached to every nook and corner of the globe. Their ships floated on every sea. Their victories were no victories of brute force, but triumphs of applied skill and trained minds. In many respects the Germans had touched the high-water mark of human civilization. There was not another country in the world but could learn something from them.

Suddenly this vast fabric woven by peace and industry and skill and science is torn in two. All the machinery of progress is stopped by the hand of autocracy. The Kaiser plunges Europe into the most devastating conflict known to human history and every civilized country reels under the shock. And about what? Ostensibly because Russia had answered Austria's wanton war against Servia by mobilizing troops on the frontier in order to protect her own interests. In reality because the reactionary party of Germany was determined to invite a general European conflict in order to stay the advancement of political reforms.

In the very vanguard of the twentieth century in most respects, Germany has straggled back into the seventeenth century politically. The curse of mediaeval government has hung over her noblest achievements. Every impulse toward political freedom has been beaten back by the mailed fist, and at a great crisis in their history the German people are deprived of that power over their own political institutions without which the English-speaking races have justly come to regard life itself as intolerable.

Autocracy has had its way. Austria's quarrel with Servia was no affair of the German people. Russia's challenge to Austria was no affair of the German people. Yet the very fate of the German Empire is thrown into the balance in order to halt the march of political freedom in Europe.

All the world knew that a declaration of war against Russia was in effect a declaration of war against France. Germany admitted it by mobilizing her army not on the Russian frontier but on the French frontier. The decisive blow was to be struck against the French Republic; not against its imperial ally. It was not Russian despotism that was to be crushed but French republicanism.

The hollow hypocrisy of the whole proceeding is revealed in the fact that before the clash of arms is fairly begun the Austrian invasion of Servia is practically abandoned.

Having begun the war, German autocracy now finds itself isolated. Italy construes the Triple Alliance as applicable only to a war of defence; because there would be a revolution in Italy if the Government ventured to champion the cause of the hated Austrian. Great Britain is compelled to make France's cause her cause. Germany and Austria are left alone to fight the battle of autocracy and pay the bill in blood and treasure and prestige. In this war they have no sympathizers even among neutrals. The enlightened opinion of the whole world has turned against the two Kaisers as it turned against Napoleon III. when he sought to make himself the autocrat of Europe

What was begun hastily as a war of autocracy is not likely to end as a war of revolution, with thrones crumbling and dynasties in exile. Civilization cannot rest at the mercy of despotism, and the welfare of mankind is not to be made the plaything of autocracy. If all Europe must be drenched in blood before this lesson is implanted in the minds of kings and courtiers, we may say of this war as Lincoln said of the war that exterminated human slavery: "The judgment of the Lord are true and righteous altogether."

This is the twilight of the gods.

The Nearest Star.

Sir Robert Ball said that if a row of telegraph posts 25,000 miles long were erected around the earth at the equator and a wire was stretched upon these posts for a circuit of 25,000 miles and that then a wire be wound no fewer than seven times completely about this great globe we should then find that an electric signal sent into the wire at one end would accomplish the seven circuits in one second of time. To telegraph, however, to the nearest star it would take four years before the electricity would reach its destination.

GERMAN GENERALS PLANNED TO BE IN BRUSSELS AUG. 3

Main Army Has Not Yet Entered Belgium ---Marching on to Waterloo.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 12.—Moving toward historic Waterloo and Brussels, the army of the Kaiser approaches, but as yet has not passed over into Belgian territory west of Tongres, at which point two cavalry divisions, supported by artillery and infantry, are operating. Plans of the war campaign taken from captured Uhlan officers indicate strongly that this is the main army of the German invasion of Belgium. They are also accepted as confirmation of the fact that Germany was completely taken by surprise by the resistance of Belgium. The plans, made public at the War Office, show that the Germans intended to occupy Brussels on Aug. 3 and proceed at once to Lille, which it had been their hope to invade two days afterwards. The reverses at Liege spoiled this plan.

The French artillery is hurrying on to the front through Brussels at the present writing and as they march, the populace is greeting them with wild acclaim.

According to official announcement the German loss in Belgium was two thousand dead, twenty thousand wounded and nine thousand seven hundred prisoners.

A number of daring and brilliant sorties have been made by the garrisons of the Liege forts attacking German commands, apart from the main army. Severe losses were inflicted upon the Germans in these sallies.

A pontoon bridge thrown across the river Meuse by German troops was demolished and the Germans rebuilt it in the face of a raking fire, losing many men.

King Albert is on the ground having arrived here from Louvain, the general headquarters of the Belgian army.

A despatch says that the Germans in the city of Liege have paroled their civilian hostages at the disposition of the German military authorities.

The Government of the Netherlands is preparing to make a peremptory demand that Germany withdraw her troops from the Dutch frontier. Queen Wilhelmina of Holland has waited as long as possible before taking any measures agaist Germany, but she is said to realize that popular sentiment demands drastic measures.

Line 60 Miles Long.

PARIS, Aug. 12. — The French troops along the entire front are in contact with the Germans. At Mangiennes, northeast of Verdun, the Germans attacked the French on Monday evening. The French, reinforced by reserves, then took the offensive and repulsed the Germans with considerable losses. A German battery was destroyed by the French artillery fire, and another was captured, with three Gatling guns and ammunition.

A regiment of German cavalry suffered seriously. Near Moncel a German battalion with artillery was repulsed. The German losses are said to have been heavy.

The village of Lagarde, in German territory, was taken by the French at the point of the bayonet.

German forces appeared at Longwy and demanded the surrender of the town, which was refused.

The German advance is moving toward Stenay, where an attempt will be mode to cross the Meuse river. The War Office admitted this last night. It is stated that frontier engagements were in progress at Longwy and Montmedy, where French forts are located; at Longuyon, in the Department of Meurthe-et-Moselle; at Marville, in the Department of Meuse, six miles southeast of Montmedy, and at Virton, in Belgian

RETIREMENT OF GERMANS MORE MARKED

French Said to Have Captured Artillery and Guns

Canadian Press Despatch.

Brussels, Aug. 12.—It was officially announced here today that the German retirement reported yesterday is becoming more marked.

Montreal, Aug. 12. — A special cable to the Star from Paris says French troops drove the Germans back across the border at Meuse and Meurthet Mosele and at Mangiennes the Germans were repulsed with heavy loss. Six guns, three heavy pieces of artillery anr three rapid firing guns were captured, by the French. A German battery was also disabled.

London, Aug. 12.—A Rome despatch to the Central News says the Messaggro publishes a message from Basel, Switzerland, stating that two German infantry regiments were annihilated during the battle with the French troops at Muehlhausen.

HELP THE FAMILIES OF DEFENDERS

Already Peterborough is beginning to feel the "pinch" of the war, and it is up to those of us who are, through various causes, being protected in our homes, to see that the families of those who go into active service, do not suffer for the necessities of life, while the bread-winner is defending his country. It is quite true that the Government has promised to pay the wages of men while in active service, but one case has occurred this week where a reservist was ordered out, but being out of steady work for some time, had nothing ahead, and the family have nothing on hand with which to maintain them until the month's pay arrives. No doubt there will be other cases, and in order to provide for such, and to create a sense of security for the welfare of such families in the minds of those who go into active service, The Review believes a fund should be created by voluntary subscriptions for such, and we would like to hear from those who are willing to contribute. The Review will do its part.

WHEELS AT QUAKER OATS PLANT RUNNING MERRILY

Safety in Shipping on the Atlantic Permits Brisk Operations Again

The wheel of industry is humming along louder than ever at the Quaker Oats plant as a result of an order received today to the effect that Atlantic shipping to England is open and safe. The plant is a buzz of prosperity because the food stuffs which are being rushed for shipment are to be sent to the London office of the company and from there to the British War stores departments. When the war broke out and England was finally dragged into the conflict the Quaker Oats plant was forced to slacken its speed as instructions stated that the foreign trade was uncertain owing to the possibility of merchant ships being held in port. With the receipt of today's order W. H. Denham placed all the help he could get, at their posts and carload after carload of food stuffs will be sent out of here to the Motherland. An idea of the gigantic proportions of the orders is shown when the company expects to send 27 carloads away this evening. They will be rushd to Montreal and from there shipped across the Atlantic.

The orders which naturally give employment for hundreds have a greater significance than the mere fact of helping the workers keep the wolf from the door. They show that the Atlantic is still commanded by the British and the German aggressor has so far failed to cut the Motherland off from her stations of food supply.

Auburn Mills.

The Auburn Woollen Mills are enjoying a splendid period, but the supply of wool is causing some worry. The majority of the firm's wool comes from Australia and the uncertainty of conditions in the east has naturally curtailed the supply. The members of the company expect to hear favorable news at any moment as the Japanese are moving now with a view of co-operating with the British for the protection of Pacific shipping.

An Invasion of England

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 12. — Archibald Hurd, the naval expert, writing for The Daily Telegraph, says news of the past week has tended to confirm the belief in the impossibility of an invasion of England but there is no guarantee that it will not be attempted for the moral effect which landing of German troops on British soil would be expected to produce.

LOCAL MAN IS NATIVE OF ALSACE

Hopes German Army Will be Annihilated by Britain France and Belgium

Emile Baumer, 559 George Street, has communicated to the Review, some facts regarding the province of Alsace-Lorraine, which the French army has just entered. He also deals with the German rule in that province, since the French lost this possession, in the Franco-Prussian war. Mr. Baumer who is an Alsatian writes as follows:

Will you kindly permit me as an Alsatian to give you some facts regarding our province, whose population is so anxious to be French again. Alsace-Lorraine has an area of 14,518 square kilometers (1 square mile equals 25,893 square kilometers) and a population of about 1,811,702. Among the people are 85,000 regular German soldiers. The language mostly spoken is Alemannic and French. In the schools the high German is learned and the French is prohibited. All the signs on the stores have to be in German, no French allowed under heavy penalty. After the Franco-Prussian war Alsace-Lorraine becaame a German province under the administration of a Prussian Governor-General, who had to rule with an iron hand. All the officials at the railroads, even the brakemen, the letter-carriers, the officials of the custom houses, policemen, ministers, school teachers were Prussians. Only in the last years they took a few Alsations after careful examinations, because some of them were kicking about it. The Prussian King, then Emperor, William I. with his adviser Bismarck, through whose fraudulence the war with France was stirred up, advised him to place only Prussian officials in the annexed provinces and to rule with an iron fist. Thats would be the only way to Germanize the Alsations in a short time. But his advice failed, the population was not used to such a slavery and tyranny. They were a free people under the French Government, and so many left their country for France and all over the world, rather than be ruled by such a despot. The province has no constitution like all the other German provinces. They expected us to be good German citizens but at the same time burdened us with heavy taxes and by laws and a whole lot of exceptioanl laws which do not exist in any other German province except in Prussian Poland. All the young men are forced to serve in the German army for two and three

HERMIT OF THE NORTH COUNTRY PAYS HIS BOARD

Spent Week in Jail While the Police Investigated at Winnipeg

After being confined to the solitudes of Castle Nesbitt for one week pending an investigation by the Police Department, in an effort to confirm certain suspicions Henry Love who was found drunk in Victoria Park about a week ago was fined $5.75 at Police Court this morning.

"We will charge him for his board at the jail," remarked the Magistrate.

Love was picked up in Victoria Park a week ago drunk. He had nearly $200 on his person. Investigation at the Police Station was to the effect that Love lived the life of a hermit in the northern bush. He admitted coming from Winnipeg about two years ago but refused to state his business there or how he got the money. He said that he had all the money he wanted. The police decided to hold him and investigate the Winnipeg end of the affair. Communications with the Winnipeg authorities failed to reveal anything against the prisoner and this morning he was fined and sent on his way back to the tall timbers.

WAS FINED $50 AND COSTS FOR SKIMMING MILK

Before Sending to Creamery at Fraserville

George Foster, of Fraserville, was fined $50 and costs by Magistrate Dumble at this morning's session of Police Court, after pleading guilty to the charge of selling milk to the Fraserville Creamery after skimming the cream from the milk.

In imposing the fine, his worship remarked that he was imposing the heaviest penalty to warm others from such mean actions as skimming milk and then selling it.

"Won't you give me time to pay that fine," pleaded the man.

"No," you committed a wrongful act and I won't give you a day," answered the Magistrate.

Unless some one comes to the aid of Foster he will spend the next ninety days on the hill.

It would be well for Peterborough people to remember that the Toronto evening papers which arrive in the city at 8 o'clock are printed one hour before the Peterborough papers and do not contain any later war news than The Review. It has been, and will continue to be, our policy to publish only news that has been confirmed and not resort to rumors and statements from unreliable sources. We will give the latest reliable reports and print extras when the occasion demands. We will not unnecessarily excite the people.

Open Meeting at Armouries Thursday Afternoon

The members of the 57th chapter, Daughters of the Empire, request the presence of the ladies of Peterboro at their open meeting in the recreation room of the armouries, Thursday afternoon at three o'clock.

This meeting is called in the interest of the great movement now in progress by the women of Canada to equip a hospital ship for service in the war.

The Women's Council held a meeting last night and discussed ways and means of helping along the project. Suggestions such as a tag day or the sale of flags were made but it was decided that no decision be made till after the meeting of the Daughters of the Empire.

BULLETINS OF THE WAR OFFICE

Board of Censors Gives Out First Information

LONDON, Aug. 12.—The Admiralty and War Office Information Bureau gave out the following last night:

"There is good reason to believe that the German cruisers Breslau and Goeben have taken refuge in the Dardanelles, and will be dealt with according to international usage."

"There is good reason to believe that the mass of German troops on the western German frontier are distributed between Thionville (a fortified town in Lorraine, 17 miles north of Metz) and Liege, and that Lorraine is held comparatively lightly farther south."

"There is every indication that the Austrians have entered Alsace. It is believed the forts at Liege have not been taken."

"The mobilization of the Territorial force is at the point of completion. Some of the units of the force have accepted liability to serve overseas. Volunteers are being asked to follow their example."

"Kitchener's army, for which 5,000 recruits have been enrolled in the past twelve hours, will consist of six divisions — Scottish, Irish, Northern, Eastern, Western and Light Brigades."

Not Confirmed.

The statement that Mayor Buller's appointment to the Internal Revenue Office had been "confirmed" is not correct, our informant having been misunderstood.

Section of Gen. Joffre's Advance in Southern Alsace Repulses Every Attack of Large Body of Kaiser's Troops---Reinforcements Are Being Rushed up to Support of French Vanguard.

PARIS, Aug. 12.—(Via London.)—According to late advices the Germans made a determined attempt to take the positions occupied by the French outside Muhlhausen, but failed. The Germans did not re-enter the town.

The War Office announces that the French and German troops are in contact for twenty miles along the frontier, and that engagements are taking place at Longwy, Longuion and Marville, in France, and at Virton, in Belgium.

The War Office made an official announcement early yesterday to the effect that the French at Muhlhausen have been compelled to fall back before an overwhelming force of Germans, and had evacuated Muhlhausen, but were holding their own against the German advance.

Later a supplementary bulletin was issued by the War Office, in which it was stated that the French troops whom Gen. Joffre had placed in occupation of the city of Muhlhausen had been withdrawn to high ground to the south of that place, and that they had there made a stand against the German army, which was attacking in force, and had repulsed every attempt to dislodge them.

eGn. Joffre, it was regarded, had selected advantageous ground for this purpose, and the tactics of the French had proved successful.

It is understood here that the Kaiser's army, which had been assembling at Strassburg, had begun its march southwards, and that the advance guard came in touch with the French advance guard at Colmar early, and the latter fell back before them. When Neu Breisach was reached, the garrison there joined the Kaiser's troops and the march southward was continued. Meanwhile a German force, probably a detachment from the Austrian army of thirty thousand, which had marched from the Tyrol, made an attack on the French left flank from Muelheim, and were aided in this by a flying wedge from Neu Breisach.

These attacks were repulsed, and when the advance guard of the German army arrived at Muhlhausen they found the city already evacuated and the French army in strength on the rising ground beyond.

They pressed on their attack, but were driven back. Reinforcements are being brought up as rapidly as possible, and it is anticipated that the biggest battle of the war so far will be fought either there or a little farther south.

Reinforcements for Joffre are being rushed from Belfort and across the Vosges Mountains, and the army of the Vosges, it is expected, will attack the German right flank. The French line of retreat is covered, and the latter were supported by artillery.

The unloading of troops from trains continues in the region of Gerolstein, but the principal landings occurred earlier in the rear of Metz and Thionville.

French aviators are constantly flying over the zones where the German troops are disposed without paying the slightest attention to the bursting shells of the enemy. The official communication concludes with the statement that the work of fortifying Luxemburg and south of Metz has been completed by the Germans.

TROOPS ENGAGED TO MASK MOVEMENTS OF ARMY

This is General Von Stein's Statement — When Heavy Artillery Arrives, Forts at Liege Will be Taken Without Loss of a Man He Says

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 12.—From Berlin via Rome comes General Von Stein's official statement regarding the siege of Liege. He denied the loss of twenty thousand but does not give figures. He says only a small number of German troops were engaged in order to mask the movements of the bulk of the army.

Forts remain intact, he says, because the Emperor did not wish to sacrifice life unnecessarily for as soon as the heavy artillery arrives they will be taken without the loss of a man.

He claims the Belgian force is numerically superior to that of the Germans.

Brussels, — An official report says communication has been resumed with the village of Landen which was previously reported occupied by the Germans.

Rotterdam, Aug. 12.—A published statement coming from German officers says that the Crown Prince's regiment crossed the river Meuse several days ago without the Prince.

Amsterdam, Aug. 12.—A despatch from Maestricht says terrific artillery firing was heard throughout this morning coming from the direction of Tongres to the north of Liege.

GERMAN ADVANCE.

Brussels, Aug. 12.—The German army is being detached from its position before Liege and is advancing through the heart of Belgium. The main body of the German cavalry is engaged in a forward movement all along the front of the allied armies.

PETERBOROUGH, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 12, 1914

TIMELY SUGGESTION, SENSIBLE OFFER.

THE OFFER of the Canadian Government to send one million bags of flour to Great Britain has been accepted by the British Government with deep gratitude. The Peterborough Trades and Labour Council are to be commended for their timely suggestion with regard to the supply of food by Canada to those in the fighting line. The suggestion has borne fruit in the action of the Canadian Government. For a country like Britain, Foodstuffs are of first importance, especially in war time. Canada can well afford to send this gift, which at the same time tends to minimize the effect of the war on both sides of the Atlantic by giving employment here and by assisting to prevent price-soaring in the old land Soldiers march on their stomachs, and an efficient army needs to be properly provisioned. A million bags of the best flour in the world will be a big asset to the British army at the front, and the British Government at once realized the importance of the gift, which illustrates one of the great resources of Canada and the Empire in such a critical time as now prevails.

ARCHBISHOP'S PATRIOTIC APPEAL.

LA PRESSE contains a short article which gives the patriotic appeal of the Archbishop of Montreal, Mgr. Bruchesi. It was the occasion of the seventeenth anniversary of his elevation to the episcopal dignity, when, having received the congratulations of a large number of his clergy he delivered the following noteworthy appeal:

> "It is the duty of all of us to give England our loyal and generous support. Our people will not fail in that. The voice of religion demands it as much as love of one's native land. We have our own country to protect first of all; we will have to organize assistance and show ourselves charitable; if it is necessary to go and fight on the other side of the sea, our brave young men will be ready and will revive the valour of their fathers."

The words of His Grace the Archbishop of Montreal need no comment, showing, as they do, the justice of England's cause in the fight to defend the Empire against German aggression.

GERMANS IN AMERICA.

The following paragraph in Tuesday's Mail and Empire would indicate that there are a number of Germans in the United States and Canada that are still loyal to their native country and who may foolishly go on the warpath here:

> "A German newspaper published in the United States advises its readers to burn every copy of the New York Evening Post they can lay their hands on, because this paper has laid the blame of the present war at the door of the Kaiser. But the Post replies that today what the American people are praying for is that the Kaiser may be beaten, and the German people win."

WHOM ARE WE FIGHTING?

IT IS CUSTOMARY for Canadians to blame Germany for the European war and to look on the Germans as enemies. While this is true, the real fight is not against Germany, but the military party there that keeps alive and feeds on the spirit of war!

Professor Swanson, writing to the Montreal Journal of Commerce, says:

> "The British Empire is not at war with the German people. It is waging war upon a military oligarchy that has dominated not only the German people, but the whole of Europe for more than a generation. This military bureaucracy lives for war, thinks in terms of war, and finds the chief glories of modern civilization in battles and manoeuvres. It is headed by the Hohenzollern clan — a family that dates back to the Middle Ages and possesses yet, the mediaeval mind. No one can deny the genius of members of this family from Frederick the Great to the present day. But it has known neither truth nor honour. When events demanded, the Hohenzollerns have had no scruples in sacrificing friends as well as foes. Treaties and alliances have been changed at will, or torn asunder to meet the exigencies of the times. Today the Emperor William—the "War Lord" of Europe — is but maintaining the Hohenzollern tradition, whose chief inspiration has been the teaching of Machiavelli.
>
> On the occasion of the recent celebration of 25 years of the Kaiser's rule, eulogies were pronounced by court attendants and by prominent members of peace societies. He was hailed as the man who had preserved the peace, although possessing the mightiest war machine that mankind has devised. Much fulsome flattery was heaped upon him, which probably no one despised more than the Emperor himself. Not once, nor twice, but on innumerable occasions has he menaced the peace of Europe. This man with the "mailed fist," who appeared in "shining armour" by the side of his ally during the Mexican crisis, has done more to disturb the peace of nations than any other potentate in the world. If he kept the peace, it was because the victories were greater than could be obtained by war. His armed peace cost the nations enormous outlays for men and the machinery of war. He built up an army which consisted of 670,000 men in time of peace and 2,250,000 men for first and second line forces only, in time of war. His heroes have been Charlemagne, Caesar, Frederick the Great and Napoleon. Under his despotic and autocratic reign the whole of Europe has groaned.
>
> Both the Kaiser and the Crown Prince frankly acknowledged the danger to the militarists of the Fatherland through the rising tide of democracy. The Crown Prince emphatically stated that a great European war must be waged to bring these misguided people back to "a sense of their duty."
>
> The whole economic policy of Germany has been shaped to meet the demands of this military caste. The common people are sick to death of the whole system whereby two or three years of the life of each man are wasted in preparating for the great war game. It is a case of 'heads I win, tails you lose' for the German Kaiser. A successful war will increase his prestige; an unsuccessful war will take the minds of the people off the wrongs that have been done them. The Kaiser counts on war to deaden the feeling of individuality and freedom which is growing in the midst of the German people."

THE STRATEGIC CITY OF LIEGE.

STRATEGIC POINTS in the importance of Liege, the Belgian city before which the German advance is reported to have been checked, and where, according to European despatches, the first great battle in force of the impending war may be fought, are numerous, says the New York Journal of Commerce. Principally it is the most strongly fortified obstacle to the supposed plan of the Germans to cut across the lower half of Belgium into French territory, but in addition to this the city is of itself a prize in many ways.

In its surroundings it is the Pittsburgh of Belgium. For miles to the southwest of the city, along the banks of the River Meuse, there are scores of blast furnaces, puddling furnaces, rolling mills and forges. It is the site of the famous Corkerill works, said to be the largest manufactory of machinery in the world. The Lion, erected as a monument on the field of Waterloo, some sixty miles distance, was made there.

Liege proper, with a population of 168,000, lies at the juncture of the Meuse and the Ourthe, in a basin margined by hills. Many handsome buildings and gardens strive to keep themselves handsome against the tremendous odds of coal dust. All around the city is a wealth of coal and iron ore; the mines are run even under the city and river. These natural riches, in connection with the favorable situation of the city at the junction of two navigable rivers, have given rise to the extensive manufacturing industry in the city itself.

The products are varied, but the principal one, and that which would make Liege a valuable prize of war, is that of firearms. More than twenty thousand persons in and around the city are employed in the manufacture of guns, ranging from small arms to the largest of modern weapons. There is a royal cannon factory and a small arm factory also in the suburb of St. Leonard.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE KINGSTON STANDARD, along with the Montreal Mail, Peterborough Review, and other papers, has editorially called for an accounting of the funds received and disbursed by the Dominion Alliance in Ontario and Quebec during the past year, stating that the public, which has subscribed, is entitled to know just how money has been spent, adding that, so far, all demands for the publication of their balance sheet have been ignored.

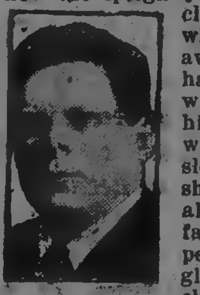
On Monday evening Constable Tafgar arrested a drunk on Brant Street, who laid down and refused to go to the lockup. The town does not possess a patrol wagon, but the constable overcame the situation by pressing into service a wheelbarrow which stood in front of Matthews' hardware store, and loading his prisoner into the barrow, wheeled him off to the jail.

AUGUST

By Walt Mason



This is the month of August, according to men's talk; and now the sprightly toggist lays in his winter stock. His heavy clothes he's getting, big shipments every day, while yet we're sorely sweating and shooing flies away. The urbane, genial geezers who run the hardware store, are chucking ice cream freezers where they'll be seen no more; and from dark hiding places, in attics or in sheds, they bring with cheerful faces, last winter's skates and sleds. The corn is turning yellow, the grass will shortly die, the pumpkin's growing mellow, and almost fit for pie. So let us prize and cherish fair August's sizzling heat, for it will shortly perish, the warmth that can't be beat. The gladsome flies that cheer us will seek another clime, for Autumn's drawing near us, and good old Winter time. It's surely rather funny that o'er free heat we fret, for soon we'll pay out money when we would raise a sweat. Around the old baseburner all shivering we'll squat, and wish we could return or relapse to August hot. So let all lads and lasses enjoy this happy month; in every year that passes it cometh only oneth.

WOMEN DEFEND VILLAGE.

Belgian Factory Workers Use Guns and Boiling Water.

PARIS, Aug. 12.—(Via London.) —According to a special newspaper despatch the woman workers in the Belgian national arms factory at Herstal, just outside of Liege, defended their village against the German attack. The men were away serving in the army and the women, according to the correspondent, swore the German troops should not take the factory. They armed themselves with revolvers and other weapons with which they repulsed several charges of the German Uhlans. When their ammunition was exhausted the women barricaded themselves in the houses from which they poured boiling water on the German soldiers in the streets. The correspondent says 2,000 Germans were disabled by wounds or scalds. Children and old men shared in the defence of Herstal, and yesterday the Belgian colors still floated from the factory building.

Sir Herbert Tree's Wit.

Probably more piquant anecdotes are told of Sir Herbert Tree than any other actor. It is related that a member of the profession once came to him for a job and remarked that he liked parts that gave scope for good acting and further, that he had a fondness for Shakespeare. "What a coincidence," replied the actor-manager blandly, "so have I!"

Another time an ambitious actor induced Sir Herbert to listen to his elocution. "Do you mind standing a little farther back?" the great man kept on asking, and the other, thinking he was making an impression, willingly obliged. Finally he had to confess his inability to go back any farther. "If I do," he added, "I will find myself outside." "Quite so," was the arch response.

SIGHTLESS GENIUS.

Some Blind Men Who Made Great Names For Themselves.

In connection with the appeal for funds which was recently made in order to provide books for the blind it may be recalled that the inventor of the Braille system was not himself born blind.

Louis Braille, who died in 1852, lost his sight at the age of three, as the result of an accident, and, fortunately for the sightless, was admitted to the famous institution for the blind founded in 1784 at Paris by Valentine Hauy.

Here the boy's brilliant talents were encouraged in every way. He began to work on his system when in his twentieth year, and, after much patient endeavor, perfected the method now in general use.

There is hardly any walk of human life in which blind persons have not obtained distinction. James Holman, the famous "blind traveler," who died a few years after Braille, visited every place of note in the world. Viscount Cranborne, who died in 1865, was the author of many important historical essays. In April, 1858, a blind clergyman, the Rev. J. Sparrow, was elected chaplain of the Mercers' company, London, and read the service, etc., from embossed books.

But perhaps the most remarkable case of all is that of Henry Fawcett, the blind professor of political economy at Cambridge, who was elected M. P. for Brighton in 1865, for Hackney in 1874 and 1880, in which year he was appointed postmaster general.—London Answers.

SAVED FROM SIBERIA

A Story of the Russian Revolution

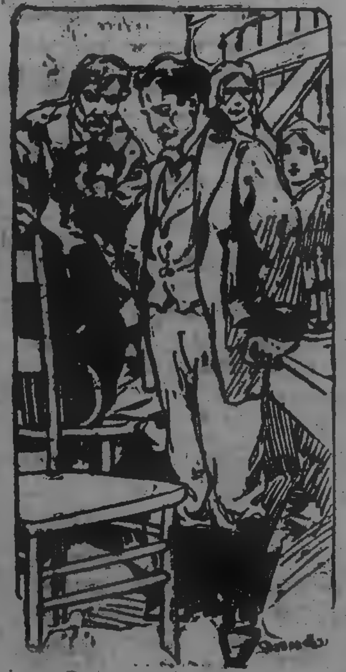
By F. A. MITCHEL

Leaving my comfortable home behind me, my dear father and mother, my brothers and sisters, I set out for St. Petersburg, the headquarters of the revolution, where I became identified with the revolutionary party and did such work as was assigned me. In time my clothing was worn threadbare; I became thin and pale from want of proper nourishment and from the condition of a noble was reduced to that of a serf.

One day I was informed that a young girl who was a prominent worker for the revolution had been caught in a house where bombs were found by the police and had been arrested and thrown into prison. I attended a secret meeting of persons devoted to the cause, convened to take measures to free her. Five hundred rubles were raised to bribe her jailer, and one of our number was appointed to interview him.

In a few days the messenger called us together again and informed us that he had offered the money to the jailer if he would contrive the girl's escape, but the man had said that it would be impossible. He had, however, suggested another plan. If one of our own party would marry the girl he would arrange that the priest who performed the marriage service should antedate the marriage certificate so that when she came up for trial her identity would be lost. It would be supposed that a mistake had been made in her case and the wrong person had been arrested. The jailer agreed to carry out this plan for the 500 rubles.

It was decided to accept his terms. The marriage being simply a form to save the girl from Siberia, no importance was attached to it, and almost any of us bachelors was willing to be the groom. But it was decided that we should draw lots for the service, and the lot fell to me.



THE LOT FELL TO ME.

I went to the prison, not as a groom going to his bride, but as one going to perform a duty of no especial importance to himself. But my first glance at Marya Ivanovna, or Marya, the daughter of Ivan, changed all this. She was not so very beautiful, but there was in her face the look of a martyr—a look of perfect innocence. She had been told of our plan by the jailer and knew that I had come to marry her. She seemed to consider it a great favor on my part and gave me a look of gratitude that went straight to my heart. We were obliged to wait some time for the priest, and I spent it chatting with my bride. Singular as it may appear, when the priest arrived and married us I kissed my wife with all the fervor of a bridegroom who had married for love.

In a twinkling there had been in me a change of motive. I had entered the prison, as I have said, carelessly to perform a duty to the cause of the revolution. I left it with a burning desire to free my bride and possess her in peace. The incentive of the amelioration of millions of people kept in ignorance and poverty had vanished to give place to a matter of individual selfishness.

Yet was it selfishness? Pity had brought love, not for the millions, but for one. I grant that the former is a broader emotion, but love for the individual is not less divine.

At any rate, it seemed to me that I had stepped back to take a new start on a new foundation; that, whereas I had been standing on a vast plain too large for my diminutive power to cultivate, I now stood on my own little plat. The sympathy I had for my downtrodden brethren had become concentrated upon one poor girl in prison.

I rejoined my comrades for a different purpose from that with which I had left them. But I took care not to reveal to them the change that had come over me. I continued to do any duty that was assigned me, but all the while I was thinking of some plan by which I might hasten the release of Marya Ivanovna. There is no habeas corpus in Russia, and a prisoner, innocent or guilty, may remain for years in prison without being brought to trial. The thought of my wife thus wearing out her life behind bars was maddening to me. I went to the prison to see her and to talk with her, but the sight of her sad, pale face so distressed me that, realizing I needed all the coolness that was in me to work for her liberation, I did not go again. Then I settled down to plan in her behalf.

Marya Ivanovna had been in prison but a short time when we were married. Therefore, if I should call the attention of the authorities to her case, she would be remembered, and the plan of losing her identity might fail. I did not on this account dare take such a course—at least, not without waiting. That there was no other had already been demonstrated. The jailer had said that he could not contrive to permit the prisoner to escape. But that was because the money appropriated for the purpose was no more than enough for himself. Might he not, if supplied with sufficient funds to bribe others in the chain of government officials concerned in the matter, be able to accomplish the desired result?

I went to him and asked him this question. He replied that it was possible, but the amount required for the purpose would be considerable. When I asked him how much he said that he would have to investigate, and, considering my shabby appearance and the improbability of my raising any large fund, I did not believe that he would trouble himself in the matter. However, I had a plan by which I might probably raise the amount required, and when I revealed it to him he changed his manner and, I felt confident, would sound those who must be bribed.

Within a week he sent for me and told me that in order to procure Marya Ivanovna's escape it would be necessary to bribe five different persons, including himself; that one of these was an official of importance and could only be bought for a considerable sum. In short, 2,000 rubles would be required to put the scheme through. I left him and immediately started for my father's home in Smolensk.

So shabby was my appearance that when I entered the gate the dogs barked at me, and I was ordered away by one of the servants. But I paid no attention to either of these and, going to the front door, opened it, and there stood my mother in the hall. She recognized me and fell into my arms. I told her that I had come home to make a request of my father and if he would grant it I would agree never again to commit any overt act in favor of the revolution. The boon I asked was the money to free my wife.

My mother used her influence with my father to induce him to grant the request, but he, fearing that I was already so far entangled with the law as to compromise the rest of the family, would only consent on condition that I would leave Russia and not return. I cared to do this only in case I could get Marya to go with me. So I returned to the capital—with means for my temporary necessities given me by my mother—and held a conference with my wife.

Her health was breaking down under her confinement, and it was not probable that she could ever strike another blow for the cause of the revolution. Besides, my interest in her behalf had already won her heart. This last act of devotion served to make it completely mine. She consented to my plan only too gladly, and I left her with high hope for her speedy release and our future happiness in a foreign land.

Returning to my home, I completed the arrangement with my father, receiving 5,000 rubles in lieu of my share in his estate, and returned to St. Petersburg. There I set my friends of the revolutionary propaganda to work to forge passports for myself and my wife on which to leave Russia. At this work we had several experienced hands, and I was not long in securing the necessary documents. Then when all had been made ready I went to the jailer, showed him the money he asked to free my wife and gave him half with a promise of the other half when Marya should be delivered to me.

How he accomplished his work I never have learned, but infer that he bribed those who were a check upon him to wink at certain irregularities, and forged papers probably assisted in the work. Marya was released at 2 o'clock in the morning, and by arrangement I was near the prison with a carriage. I put her in without a word and, having directed the cabman to drive to the railway station, got in after her and closed the door.

Then, locked in each other's arms, we experienced inexpressible delight.

We selected America for our destination and in due time arrived at our new home. I, having been well educated, have found no difficulty in making a living in the United States, though until I learned to speak the language I was at a great disadvantage. Already, having an excellent manager for a wife, I am becoming prosperous.

The Russian revolution is over, many a young life has been taken, many are perpetual exiles, and yet little was accomplished. But though the people have lost their cause they have not been put back to the point from which they started. They have made their first dash for liberty, and as the north pole of the earth was gained after a number of dashes so doubtless will a greater freedom eventually be gained in Russia.

Scholarships For Art Students.

Instead of Canadians being compelled to journey to Ottawa to see their native art the native art is to come to them following a conference between the committee of the National Gallery and the Royal Canadian Academy.

During this meeting a scheme for the use of the pictures that the Government is purchasing from time to time from Canadian artists was adopted and in brief is merely a selection of the artist's best work for the Ottawa gallery, and a loan of other pictures to art societies and galleries throughout Canada which possess the proper facilities for their display.

In addition to this it was resolved that the Royal Canadian Academy prepare an annual scholarship of one thousand dollars to be presented to the most promising art student each year, and that a committee of Royal Academy members constitute the jury who will pass judgment upon the work of the young student.

HAD NO SENSE OF HUMOR.

He Couldn't Clearly See the Joke the Boys Had on Him.

Some people have absolutely no sense of humor. A little London urchin ran into a baker's shop and, placing a halfpenny on the counter, asked nervously and timorously, "Mister, 'ave you a 'alfpenny buster (bun)?"

"Yes, my little man. Here is one quite hot."

"Thanks, mister. Would you mind a-shovin' it down my back?"

"Down your back, my little man! Why down your back?"

"Cos, sir, I'm only a little un, and if those chaps outside know I've a buster they'll take it, and I am so 'ungry, I am."

"Dear me, how wrong of them! Come round here, my little chap. There—there, it is down your back."

The boy ran off. In an instant another entered—a bigger boy.

"I say, mister, 'as a little boy just been in 'ere?"

"Yes."

"And did 'e buy a 'alfpenny buster?"

"Yes."

"And did 'e arsk you to shove it down 'is back, as us big fellows would take it?"

"Yes."

"Yah! Where's your watch and chain? 'E's got 'em. 'E's just round the corner."

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Bright's Disease.

Bright's disease is a silent, hardworking enemy, and the victim himself may not know that he has it until it has gone so far that he is incurable. It is easily detected by a test of the urine, and if it is caught in its beginning its destructive force can be held to a minimum throughout the natural life of the victim. When urinalysis shows an excess of uric acid and albumen the presence of Bright's disease is determined, but both the albumen and the uric acid may be decreased by the adoption of an intelligent diet, the selection and consumption of those foods that yield the least of these two elements. Such foods are grains, fresh and dried fruits and fresh vegetables. Meats should be let alone, because they favor the increase of uric acid, and there are some vegetables, like asparagus and mushrooms, that contain more uric acid than meat.

SOLITARY LIFE IN JAIL.

It Has Finally Wrecked the Mind of Jesse Pomeroy.

That Jesse Pomeroy, the solitary life prisoner at Charlestown prison, has at last broken mentally under the strain of his years of confinement, became evident during the recent visit of Governor Walsh to the institution.

When the governor, in his inspection, stopped before the cell in Cherry Hill and the guard drew aside the iron shutter which has cut off Pomeroy from all communication with even the rest of his prison world, a strange thing occurred.

Pomeroy for the first time that he had been brought in contact with a chief executive since his imprisonment did not ask for a pardon or protest his innocence. He instead told the governor that he had a bank book he wanted to send his mother, but could not do so because of red tape.

Officers at the prison for some time have known that Jesse has considered himself immensely wealthy. The governor asked Pomeroy where the bank book was, and Pomeroy replied that it was in the prison office. He further said that he had written to the prison authorities about the bank book several times, but had received no satisfaction. The governor promised he would look after the bank book.

For thirty-six years Pomeroy has been kept in solitary confinement, and many alienists have given opinions regarding what effect it would have upon his sanity. It is now believed that Pomeroy has weakened mentally under the strain.—Boston Post.

What to Do With A Large Sum

Of course, it's a lot of money! The main cash reward in the Summer Pastime is a lot if only it's well spent. And oh, the ways a woman could spend it if she had it.

Now there's the home! You could make the first several payments if you fill out the coupons in the Summer Pastime and win the cash prize.

Then after you've won it, look among the real estate dealers, locate a small piece of property with a nice house upon it. Now take the money you've gained, go proudly up and pay the cash down. There! You have your home! The rest will come easy.

"I already own a house," you answer with pride.

Well, that's better still. There's a multitude of ways to spend money pleasurably in this wonderful old world.

For instance: take a trip to the Great Northwest, with its natural wonders and astounding sights. Do you know with calculation you could trip a great way about this dear old continent on the prize money you could win in this Pastime. Somebody's going to get that money. Why not you?

If you don't want to travel, you surely need a lot of things. Well, there you are! You earn the money with your brains in solving the names in the pictures, then go and spend it. The more fun you have out of it the better we'll be pleased. Put it in the bank, if you like, but don't miss working for it, that's all.

HOW TO KEEP THE BABIES

Have you a baby in your house?

Or has your next door neighbor a baby of whom you are fond?

If so, you will be interested in the Better Babies Contest to be held at the Public Library in Peterboro, on October 5th.

Why?

Because the public in general is just beginning to realize that a great deal depends upon just your baby or your neighbor's baby. The health of the nation is built on the health of each baby, and physicians will tell you that with proper care and feeding of children the entire health of the nation can be built up. Healthy babies means healthy children in the public schools. Thus the expense of trying to educate defective children is reduced for the tax payer. Healthy children in the school room grow into healthy, vigorous, satisfied workers in the industries and professions. And best of all, healthy babies mean peace and happiness in the home, and care-free parents.

The Better Babies Contest proves these statements and more.

If your baby is pretty well, and pretty good and cries very little, you may think it an all-round good baby. But if you bring it to the contest, you will learn how it can be made a perfectly well baby, a baby does not cry except when actually hurt—an all-round better and best baby.

This is what Better Babies Contests are for. The babies are entered just as they used to be at the old fashioned baby show. But there the similarity stops. For at the Better Babies Contest the physicians examine the babies for physical and mental development, enter their records on Better Babies Standard Score Cards and advise parents as to how the condition of the babies can be improved.

When this is all over, the judges step in and award prizes to the babies making the highest score, and other doctors tell mothers how to get the babies who did not win prizes into fine condition for the next contest. It's the most cheering and hopeful contest imaginable and even the babies seem to understand and enjoy it.

This contest, which is being held under the auspices of the Women's Council will be a big event for mothers and babies. The Council announces the following prize list:

Class 1. Boys six months to twelve months of age, first and second prizes. Girls six months to twelve months of age, first and second prizes.

Class 2. Boys twelve months to twenty-four months fo age, first and second prizes. Girls twelve months to twenty-four months of age, first and second prizes.

Class 3. Boys twenty-five months to thirty-six months of age, first and second prizes. Girls twenty-five months to thirty-six months of age, first and second prizes.

In addition to these prizes, the Better Babies Bureau of the Women's Home Companion will present the following to fortunate babies:

To highest scoring boy or girl, medal in bronze.

Also to each first prize winner in all classes, a Better Babies Diploma, beautifully printed in colors, sealed with the Better Babies seal in gold and blue ribbon. Each child examined in the contest whether a prize winner or not, will receive a Better Babies Certificate of Examination, also printed in colors, bearing the babies name and score, signed and sealed, a beautiful souvenir of the contest.

Watch the papers for further information regarding this contest.

Worse Than Retribution.

"Pa, is retribution the worst thing a man can have?"

"No; it isn't half as bad as the feeling a man is likely to have after he has confessed and then become convinced that he would not have been found out if he had kept quiet."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Divided Opinion.

"Are you really going to marry Harold?"

"I don't know what to say. All the girls in my class read his letters."

"Well?"

"Eighteen of them think him a dear, and nineteen say he's a dub."

Woman's World

The Kaiser Is to Have a Non-royal Daughter-in-law.

COUNTESS INA MARIE VON BASSEWITZ.

Countess Ina Marie Von Bassewitz, whose engagement to the kaiser's fifth son, Prince Oscar of Prussia, has been announced, is another example of the revolt of royalty against the system of caste which prevails where their marriages are concerned.

Countess Ina is a maid of honor in the suit of the kaiserin. She is the youngest, best looking and cleverest of the ladies about the court. Prince Oscar was thrown much in her society and had the kaiserin been an ordinary mother she would have anticipated the result. Prince Oscar was soon deeply in love with the witty and attractive maid of honor.

That she is a young woman of much spirit is indicated by the report that as soon as his devotion became obvious the countess departed to her home in Mecklenburg Schwerin, where her father is the minister of state.

The Crown Princess Cecilie, who is a princess of Mecklenburg, and the Duchess of Brunswick, the kaiser's daughter, both took the part of the lovers, with the result that the kaiser is said to have given his consent to the marriage of the countess and the prince. The marriage will be a morganatic one, but in Germany it will confer some distinction.

The bride will not take the name of her husband, but be given a title of her own together with a substantial dowry. She cannot under German law inherit the estates of her husband, nor can her children, should any be born, claim the title or property of their father. They will take the name and rank of the mother. As a rule, the morganatic children of royalty are favored by the state with profitable offices or other rich emoluments. Often they marry into royal families.

Queen Mary of England is the granddaughter of a German morganatic marriage. Her grandfather was a son of Duke Alexander of Wurttemberg, who was made prince and duke of Teck when he renounced his royal rank to marry morgantically Countess Claudine von Rhedy of Poland.

The house of Hohenzollern has made several morganatic marriages which have in most cases turned out happily.

THE HALF BELT.

A Novel Accessory to the Smart Summer Suit.

A little accessory that can be bought to add a smart touch to a homemade or old frock is always welcome.

Perhaps that is one reason for the popularity of the neckwear of this season and last. Frilling and ruchings of tulle and net and lace transform many simple frocks, and the addition of one of the new organdie collars to a staid serge dress takes it out of the realm of dowdiness.

So it is with a chic belt that can be had in the shops.

It is really only a half belt, for the back of the skirt or coat, to reach from hip to hip.

It is made in many combinations. One that is very attractive is made of gray suede, cut out to show three or four pieces of Japanese silk crape printed in blue and red. This little belt is fitted with three or four pockets on the underside so that it can be easily fastened to as many little balls sewed on the skirt.

Other belts are made of suede and kid of different colors, some of them with cutout designs over white kid, some of them decorated with small colored glass spikes or nail heads of brass.

They are especially nice, these little belts, on the back of a colored linen or duvetyn or other summer skirt, and they can also be used to very good effect on a summer jacket.

Silk Hand Bags.

Very small hand bags, not more than five inches high or deep, are made of striped, figured and plain silks. They are gathered into a silken tassel as long as the bag itself and they are finished with strap handles of the silk. They are lined in contrasting silks.

Plaited Tunics.

The plaited tunic is particularly smart, but usually the plaits are rather shallow ones and are taped underneath to within a few inches of the bottom.

STUDIES IN CANADIAN IMPERIALISM

THE EMPIRE AND THE IMPERIUM

Written Specially for The Peterborough Review, by J. P. Laycock, M.A.

The triple empire should be borne in mind. There is the foundational empire of Britain, a commercial empire planted on a seam of coal, an empire as real as that of imperial Germany. Then there is the dependent empire, an empire won by conquest, with a population governed, not self-governing. Lastly, there is the empire consisting of the daughter dominions and colonies of the United Kingdom over-sea, an empire once subject, but now ever approaching political equality with the mother state. The existence of the three empires side by side, striking distinct, has tended to confuse the meanings of names ascribed to them in part or in whole. According to the whim of the writer, such terms as self-governing empire, parliamentary empire, may refer to the United Kingdom and the Anglo-Saxon dominions associated with her, or to the latter alone. Similarly the phrase Greater Britain has at times alluded to the over-sea British states alone, at other times has included the parental land, and at still others has even embraced the colored and dependent empire. For the sake of clearness it seems best, in spite of the different degrees of self-government found in the different states, to use the terms self-governing empire, parliamentary empire, Greater Britain, to describe the English-speaking sections of the empire as one unit; to employ the expressions Over-sea Britain, Transmarine Britain, to denote the colonies which are colonies no longer in the old sense; and to favor, as many imperialist writers do, the application of the term imperium to the empire whose body is India and Egypt and whose marches are in Persia, Thibet, and elsewhere, an empire of the Roman type, as it consists of states subject to a sovereign state.

Liberal Misrepresentation.

Canadian Liberal decentralizationists perpetually proclaim that the imperium is the block upon which the empire is to be beheaded. The imperium must always remain the imperium. It can never become self-governing. Its people can never participate in the councils of the whole empire. Its population can never amalgamate withours. The empire which is Britain, they cry, rests commercially and industrially upon the empire which is the imperium. The Canadian people cannot appreciate the anxieties in India and Egypt which oppress British statesmen, the white man's burden which they must shoulder. This is the kind of problem, they assert, that Mr. Asquith had in mind when he declared that the United Kingdom had certain responsibilities which it could not share.

Decentralizationistic Argument Criticized.

Liberal decentralizationists overlook the law of variation in historical development. To assert that Hindus, for example, have not the brain power to develop self-government is to insult a race civilized when Britain was inhabited by barbarians. To assume that they can never participate in imperial self-government is to assume that the day must come when the imperium will be separated from the empire, or is to charge the British race, in whole or in part, with designing to keep in perpetual subordination a people even if they attain a civilization and political efficiency the equal of their own. The cause for this assumption is the difference in color and the greater numerical strength of what are now dependent peoples. However, the influx of a cosmopolitan white immigration at present published as the peril of the empire, will eventually prove its salvation, and permit, perhaps, the retention of the imperium. With the United States during the past as a precedent, coupled with the greater ratio of increase of population in Over-sea Britain today, the probability is that within the next century the numerical weight of the white empire will be such as to enable governmental co-operation with the dark white. In the interim the education of the dependent races in political principles and Christian civilization will justify either their petition for proper participation or independence. If self-governance is the desire, then the time has come to admit them into the imperial parliament. If separation is sought or if the white population fear that their interests will suffer through parliamentary union, then the dominant nation by its free action should grant freedom and propose permanent alliance, offensive and defensive. Provided British policy in the days of British supremacy be just, the Hindus and Egyptians will appreciate the continuance of co-operation in some tangible form. The Anglo-Saxon has defended his primacy among nations of lesser rank by a proposed propaganda for their moral and political uplift; that accomplished, he must maintain no supremacy against the will of the inhabitants. In any alternative, union, alliance, separation, the problem of the imperium presents no permanent barrier to closer consolidation of Greater Britain.

It is said the United Kingdom would never assent to shifting the burden of empire and its responsibilities. But has she not partially done so already? What right has a citizen of the British Isles, by migrating over-sea, to fling his obligations on his overtaxed brethren at home? Or what right have immigrants of American or Continental European origin to enter the empire if they disregard the axiomatic contract of sharing its duties as well as its benefits? Rest assured that no Briton, be he insular, transmarine, or naturalized, will refuse to a proper division of labour in this matter.

It is further declared: Canadians have not the interests in Asia to warrant participation in responsibility, and the United Kingdom would never share such a source of wealth with Britain beyond the sea. Does not this argument overlook the present as well as the future? Is she not more and more, whether she wills it or not, sharing this commerce with her daughter dominions? Especially, is not Canadian traffic with India, Egypt, and the rest on the increase? Is it not probable that imperial preference eventually will effect the imperium in addition to Greater Britain? Generalizing, is not the Dominion benefitting in the world movements which in this age of steam and electricity are drawing all parts of the world into common association and which are bound to cause our country to appreciate Asia both in mind and in heart?

Internal Conditions in the Imperium.

Gradual reconstruction of governmental machinery in the imperium is as essential as in the white empire. Signs of the times in India, the body of the imperium, cast a doubt as to whether this principle, the only permanent antidote to separation, is really recognized. The educated classes, who have so long believed in British good intentions, declare that the Press Act is enforced where Mohammedan and Hindu editors are concerned, but tacitly ignored in its application to English edited papers hostile to the natives, in spite of the promise of the High Court to redress any wrong. They have long protested against that union of the executive and judicial functions with the resultant expensive litigation which in their eyes besmirches the fair name of "British justice." They urge that because of the prohibitory cost of higher education, the educational department should not destroy schools better than no schools at all, and that such regulations should cease, as compel the education of their sons in Britain, but close to them the doors of those institutions where qualifications for positions in their home land are secured. They feel that the offices of all the services should be thrown open to Indians upon the same conditions as to the Britisher, that imported white men should not be placed over efficient natives, and that colored employees of the service should be treated as political equals, not as beneficees of benevolent patronage. They have long in vain, as a minimum concession to native opinion, asked for the privilege to elect a third of the representatives on the India council, selected solely by the elected members of the India councils.

The opposition of the House of Lords to the India Council Bill was of doubtful wisdom. This measure was to increase certain powers of the Secretary of State and to provide that two out of the seven or ten members of the council should be Indian, selected by the Secretary of State from nominees of the elected Indian members of the Indian Legislative Councils. Although more direct election and the increase of the members to three would have represented better the different phases of native opinion, undoubtedly the Bill was a distinct advance in Lord Morley's policy of the gradual gift of self-government to the Hindus. Rajput Rai, in the Times, London, declared that the opposition of Lord Curzon rendered the task of the constitutional party in India more difficult. "The British Government in India have committed blunders in the past by ignoring the advice of the Constitutional Nationalists and by deferring hope," he asserted, "and I fear they are about to commit another blunder of a similar nature. It is time the British statesmen were to realize that 'events in India are marching rapidly,' and unless they regulate their future administration of the country in the light of this rapid march, the task of administering India is bound to grow, not only more and more difficult, but also risky."

The present situation hence tends to drive the progressive Hindu into the opposing government. An agitation for political participation is always the first sign of the development of powers of self-government. It is dangerous for the British people to permit the growth of conditions ever preceding a revolution, especially when the dependent people are not bound by racial sentiment tending to preserve the connection even after armed arbitrament. The policy should be to give the governed political powers in ratio to the progress of their political education. A provision by law for the periodical revision of the existing system of government in India after a definite number of years would probably satisfy the Constitutional Nationalists, as they would realize that the principle of progress in self-government by degrees was conceded and that any denial of their wishes was merely temporary.

Relation of the Imperium to the Empire.

The real peril to permanence of the imperium within the empire lies in the problem or Oriental immigration to Transmarine Britain. Three hundred and fifty Hindus on board the Kohagatu Maru demanded admittance to British Columbia as British citizens. The barring of the gates led them to attack the validity of the Canadian immigration law on the plea that it infringed Magna Charta and exceeded the legislative powers granted to the Dominion by the British North America Act. The judgment of the Court of Appeal upset the idea, so current in India, that British citizenship by itself grants the privilege of entrance into any portion of the King's dominions and ratified the parliamentary authority of Canada to restrict the immigration of any race or nationality.

The Hindu, however, feels that no legal decision can upset his natural right to expand within the empire as a British subject willing to die in defence of the empire at the outbreak of war in South Africa, a British subject whose fathers fell in protecting the imperium. He admits that it is true that the Oversea Dominions exercise their right of excluding white British citizens, but retorts that there is no racial exclusion of the white as of the dark white. He proclaims that in the one case the unfit alone are excluded, but in the other the fit as well, sturdy Sikhs, in his mind, physically, mentally and morally the equal of immigrants from Italy and Eastern Europe. He points to the more favorable conditions under which the Japanese enter Canada, and reasons that it is because of the military strength of independent Japan. He sees the rice-eating Chinese coming into Canada, when he considers his meat-eating countrymen closer to the Canadian standards of living. The late troubles in South Africa caused mass meetings all over India in common protest; the Komagatu Maru incident, a striking instance of how not to exclude immigrants, will cause more. The cry is already heard that Oversea Britons should be excluded from Hindu soil. Listen once more to Lajput Rai: "The Imperial Government can no longer ignore the grievances of Indians with impunity, and if they cannot interfere with the self-governing colonies in order to induce them to treat the Indians with justice and consideration, they must revise their imperial relations both with India and the colonies." There is a new birth, new times, and a new spirit in India; the "hypnotism of color" has gone.

The Oversea Briton must inevitably feel that justice to the Hindu would be injustice to himself. He is conscious of a difference, fundamental at present, at least. He is certain that under existing conditions the home Britons would not want the Hindus thrust in their midst. He is conscious of a clash of ideal in mind, flesh and spirit, in society, morality, marriage, and he knows that these present, for many years to come, an insuperable obstacle to the amalgamation of the opposing peoples into a uniform civilization. Meanwhile the other wrong persists, and in its existence lies the greatest peril to Indian connection with the empire.

The Solution.

The solution must be reached, if possible, through the consideration both of temporary necessities and future rights. Undoubtedly the next Imperial Conference should take the problem in hand. Since constitutional powers to act in the matter belong solely to the individual dom-

CITY OF PRINCE RUPERT

Some Difficulties Met With in Building Operations—All Assessment on Solid Rock — Rain and Raincoats

I fancy that when I finished Prince Rupert, as viewed from out on the water will look like a commercial Monte Carlo. Not that I have seen that ineffable and very bad place but that it is constructal, as it were, piled up from the shore to the foot of the cliffs. I have been shown pictures and I have read in Prof. Kenner's book of travel. Rupert will look about so-so.

As to the town, or rather city site. Nothing like it has been attempted. If you took all the islands in Stony Lake, then drained off the water, shoved the peaks up together you would have a fair idea of the configuration of the portion of land on which men are building a city. It is an even thing that by the time the tops of the peaks are planed off and poked into the hollows there will be a fairly level area. It is the planning process that costs.

Why, the question may be asked, place the beginnings of a future city in and around such a spot. It rises abruptly from the water's edge. The first man to land tumbled in because he had no foot hold. The first barrel of pork hoisted ashore rolled back in sheer derision. Now see what has been accomplished, in three or four years. We view what has been done in the light of the difficulties that have been overcome. On no spot on the continent has man's energy, grit, and absolute perserverance been more worthily displayed. And only the little end has been undertaken. There is much to follow.

Seaports are serious undertakings. Nowadays they do not just happen and grow up with the country. They are made to order, with the needs of the future in view. Ships of burden, drawing thirty-two feet of water and a thousand feet in length have to be considered. What is needed is a port, accessible from the sea, that does not necessitate pilotage, that protects its shipping from the storm while at anchor, that does not need incessant dredging, that will have ample depth even where the tide rises and falls a matter of thirty feet. All these conditions are met at Rupert. They are conditions that affect the water. Man must make the land conditions that they answer, and he is doing it in a good healthy way.

When a great and powerful corporation, far seeing and sagacious, selects a spot as a terminal on a sea coast it always brings into being a great city or rather the makings of one. Prince Rupert will be the North Star of the constellation of Canadian cities. It is 500 miles nearer the Orient, a good day's steaming. It is the sea end of a line of railroad that crosses the mountain ranges many thousand feet lower than any other on the coast.

Municipal Difficulties.

It is not to exploit Prince Rupert I write but rather to tell something of the municipal difficulties as contrasted with our own, for there is much to learn—and much to be thankful for. In this case of the two, Peterborough is the one to give thanks, for by the time Prince Rupert has achieved its city streets it will have accumulated a municipal debt just about as big as Peterborough will have when it is finished. But that consideration does not, as Bob Fair would say, "fizz on the Rupertites" for a moment.

The single tax prevails. All assessment is on the land—in this case solid rock. The municipal revenue is raised solely from the land and such licenses, police court, etc., as with us. Consequently it may be inferred that to gain anything like enough for city running expenses either the valuation or the rate must be high. The rate is sixteen mills on the dollar, but, gee, look at the values. $22,000 is a fair price for the space on which to erect a double store on a main street, and the most pretentious projects are planned in a building way and will be carried out. The very work of reducing the rocks to street level is a herculean task.

The Bank of Commerce blew down the best part of a quarter of a block of rock forty feet high to get a level site for their branch building. Perched up on the rock, adjoining is the building of the Prince Rupert Club. It has a trifling foundation of thirty feet of rock under it. Next door is the balance of the lot in a state of nature. It will cost at least $7,000 to level the site for future business. And the plot is now held at $45,000, and still going up. It has cost at least $5,000 to cut a part of a street the length of the width of a block, cross streets at that. Three or four of the principal streets are levelled to grade, and the municipal debt is nearly one million dollars. Large stretches of roadways are of plank, braced up on sleepers, cut from trees as they fell. Already the question of these plank roads is a serious one. For the fire department — magnificently equipped with the latest form of motor fire engines — complains that the weight of the machines is too great for the plank roadway. As it stands just now, the holder of a business lot does not know whether he is better off with a hole or a mountain. The hill has to be cut down, the hole filled up. Calm contemplation of the proctem would say that the hole has the call, for the cellar is already excavated. It is an even thing that the protuberances will fill the cavities.

Of course the city of today will be replaced with good permanent buildings, in the business section and of brick or stone. At present, as may be well understood, wood is the material of construction. There will be large change as the place develops. Already it is stealing from Vancouver a part of the wholesale trade. It has this week secured terminal rates, which means that rates to Rupert will be made based on water competition. It, for instance, costs as much for freight, on paper, to Calgary as it does to Vancouver. The Calgary man gets mad, and says things, and protests — and goes and pays the freight. When one sees the effort, the power, the risk involved in hauling things through and over the mountains one is very much less inclined to reprove the railroad. It must cost like sixty.

I went into a lane back of some buildings facing on the principal street in Rupert. My business up the lane was to view the conclusion of a dog fight, and see if the dog of my friend was one of the participants. This in explanation, otherwise I should not have so strolled. There was quite a transformation of things, viewed from behind. Many of the buildings, in front level with the street grade showed behind that they were mounted up on stilts, in cases on piles fully forty feet in height. All this will disappear with the coming in of the real business building. The one thing to be dreaded is fire, and to head this off the scrutiny is most careful Watchmen abound. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

Water Supply Ample.

Water is in ample supply, brought from the mountains about three miles away. A reservoir and gravity system to supply the city. The sewage systems are planned but at present only temporary lines are in use. The sewers are laid over the hills and where they cross the valleys are encased in wooden troughs. This for support and protection. The garbage methods are, as yet, primitive but effectual. It is collected, dumped on a scow, towed out to sea, (six miles), and fed to the fishes if they care to accept. Taken by and large they are doing things in a big way and confidence of the future.

I do not think that the city will spread over much ground. The topography of the place is against it. But on the other hand the buildings, when erected will be screamers, fairly touch the clouds in height. Grounds will be too valuable to run up buildings of a few stories. When finished so as to make a show the city will present a fine appearance, piled up in terraces from the harbor to the foot of the mountains behind.

Big things are planned and some in course of erection. The magnificent dry dock system of the G.T.P. is one. Quite phenomenal in its size, capacity and appliances. There will, hardly be its equal on the continent. Most thorough in conception and carrying out. This will be the headquarters for a host of shipping so soon as the plant is in operation.

Rain and Raincoats.

As to the climate, for I have had enquiry in such way. There is no use denying that it is moist. The street watering problem is not one that causes municipal expense or, as with us, recrimination from the ratepayer. The popular costume, while I was there, was a raincoat. This makes for equality of raiment, so far as the observer is concerned. Men are pointed out on the street, in recognition, as that fellow in the yellow raincoat," or blue or green, as the case may be. For, you will observe, there are preferences in such regard and many styles. All shed water and need so to do. The rainfall in Rupert, last year, (1913) was a total of 120 inches. Fancy ten feet of water dropped on the territory. Think of that, you people who, I understand are hoping for rain. I was assured it was an exceptional season, but one man told me it rained eighty-five per cent. of the time. But no one minds it. It is taken as a part of the game. One gets used to it and accepts the condition, thankful that it is no worse. "It," said an Englishman, newly arrived, "is just like at home, don't you know. Makes a chappie feel quite fit, don't you know. Probably the definition in the old geography hits it off exactly—moist but pleasant.—F.H.D.

A Skilful Engineer.

Engineer Commander Howe, of the Canadian Naval Department, who has been appointed one of the assessors to sit in the Empress of Ireland inquiry is not known much in Canada outside of Ottawa, Halifax and Esquimalt, but all who have known him esteem him very highly. He is a most retiring and unassuming man; but has had a splendid record as a naval engineer both in the Royal Navy and in the Canadian service. All sorts of stories are told among the officers of the Canadian vessels and fishery cruisers as to his ingenuity and skill. He was one of the first officers obtained from the Royal Navy when it was decided to establish a Canadian navy. He was engineer assistant to the director of dockyards at the Admiralty for two years and also served as one of the assistants to the chief engineer of the Admiralty. Commander Howe is said to have earned his salary many times over by his technical advice and practical assistance in salving the Niobe when she went aground on the Nova Scotia coast.—Family Herald and Weekly Star.

BUYERS MADE OFFER BUT FACTORIES WOULDN'T SELL

At the meeting of the Peterboro Cheese Board last week the representatives of the factories wanted to sell but the buyers refused to buy. This week however the buyers made their offer but the desire to obtain "war prices" caused the factories to refuse to sell. When the meeting was first called to order it was found that some of the factories had sold off the Board and were boarding the first half of their August output. So as not to spoil the sale at the next meeting it was decided that those selling August cheese should withdraw it. This left the following board :—

Keene 70, Warminster 60, Shearer 95, Selwyn 85, Villiers 75, Warsaw 85, Westwood 110, Oakdale 85, Myrtle 100, Ormondo 120, Young's Point 45, Lang 95, Indian River 70, East Emily 100, Treewern 95, Fleetwood 80. Total 1250.

Mr. Gillespie offered 12 cents, Mr. Thompson 12 1-16, Mr. Morton 12 1-4, Mr. Gillespie 12 5-16, Mr. Morton 12 1-2, and Mr. Gillespie 12 9-16. There was no further bidding.

After considerable discussion as to the advisability of selling for such a low price it was resolved to adjourn for a week and then perhaps the price would be better. In the meantime no cheese must be sold off the board. The first half of the August output will also be boarded next meeting.

Protect the Ontario Hydro

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Aug. 12.—The source of Ontario's electric supply is to be well protected by the Government. Major Hugh Ross, commanding the protective force of the 44th Regiment along the Welland Canal, received instructions from brigade headquarters to send twenty men and an officer to Niagara Falls immediately to protect the power plants and transformer plant of the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission. The guard left camp at Welland for this city immediately.

RELIEF FUND IS GROWING

Subscriptions Have Now Passed Three Million Mark

LONDON, Aug. 12.—The national relief fund for the families of soldiers and sailors killed or wounded in the war, which was started under the supervision of the Prince of Wales and Queen Mother Alexandra, amounted yesterday morning to $3,240,000.

To-day's Times says that Britain has already proceeded far with her mobilization and now has between 500,000 and 600,000 men under arms, not counting the National Reserve.

"We should, therefore," says The Times' article, "view the situation with comparative equanimity, and not be turned from any masculine resolve by the threat of an assault by the German navy."

The British concentration camp at Aldershot yesterday was visited by King George and Queen Mary, and their advent was the occasion of an enthusiastic demonstration.

A Polish legion for active service in the event of a German invasion of the British Isles is being formed here at a joint meeting of the Polish societies.

unions, common action and uniformity of action can only be secured through a round-table discussion by all the states interested and through the only machinery at present available for this purpose. An elastic educational test is only a makeshift; the remedy must go deeper and be framed to respect the dignity of the King's Indian subjects. It has been suggested that an agreement might be entered with the Indian Government, as in the case of Japan, which would fix a maximum number of annual immigrants, such conditions being similar to those which Canadians would have to respect in going to India.

Such a policy made to save the face of the Hindu people would not be regarded by them as a permanent settlement. As long as their congested population is confined within such narrow limits, as long as they remain British subjects, as long as vast unsettled tracts exist in the empire, they will feel that their right of expansion by immigration there should be conceded.

The geographical character of the British empire and the progress in its colonization seems to supply a possible policy. The white people, a people of a temperate zone, have preferred settlement in the temperate parts of the British domain, Canada, Australia, South Africa, and elsewhere, territories large enough to permit expansion for years to come. The dark white race, a race inured to the tropics, might be induced to settle in the tropical dependencies of Britain, dependencies still under the thumb of the United Kingdom. By way of experiment, a portion of British Central Africa might be thrown open solely for Hindu expansion, white immigrants being allowed to enter these districts under the same restrictions as Hindu immigrants into Oversea Britain. Through governmental advertisement in Hindustan, the Indian people would learn of the advantages of their hinterland. Their educated classes could be informed that the provision for separate fields for white and dark white expansion was no declaration on the part of the Anglo-Saxon of lasting superiority over the Hindu, but simply the regrettable recognition that different ideals of civilization prevented immediate amalgamation, and that if ever the two civilizations gave place to a common higher standard, the whole problem could be reopened. In the interim the populational development of the empire, so essential for its permanent progress, would proceed at a double rate, the tropical empire being settled thickly by loyal citizens at the same time as the occupation of the temperate parts by white settlers.

As time passes, more and more the British race should regard itself as the trustee of vast territories for the good of the world as a whole. The proud boast of a great imperial statesman that the British empire has been the greatest secular agency for good that the earth has ever known is in danger of not applying as well in the future. If the Anglo-Saxon people will not share as far as possible the vacant tracts held in trust he had better grant India its independence as soon as the mass of its people desire it, and abandon his proud boast.

The Imperium and the Yellow Peril.

The latter course would not be wise ultimately. The phenomenon in world tendencies on the one hand is the practical possession of Europe, America, Australia and Africa by the white race, which even controls part of the remaining continent of Asia; on the other, the re-awakening of the Yellow and the Dark White East. If the Further East and the Central East unite, it is problematical if the Caucasian peoples can retain the territories now held by better organization, wealth, civilization, more than making up for existing disparity in numbers. It should be remembered that the Far East traditionally regards India as the cradle of its civilization, and even now is thinking what good would result if she were to remember she was of the Orient, not of the Occident. Still, in point of color and racial origin, the Hindu is perhaps nearer the European, and if he draws his sword in alliance with the Caucasian in a struggle with the Mongolian, so much to be avoided, the division of numbers would be more equal and success more possible. The aim of Greater Britain should be to retain India on the side of western civilization.

WRECKAGE NOT FROM RAINBOW

Warship Rumored to be Off Vancouver Island

OTTAWA, Aug. 12.—The naval service department has not yet heard anything of the Rainbow, which left San Francisco on Saturday morning. It was erroneously reported that the Government had received word of her.

Wherever the wreckage found near San Francisco came from, it is not believed here that it can be from the Canadian cruiser Rainbow. The wreckage from that vessel would not float, it is said, and word has come that she is now off the coast of Vancouver Island.

The British cruisers Sheerwater and Algerine were both in Pacific waters, and there is the possibility that the wreckage is from one of them.

Word has also come of another German warship, a four-funneled vessel off the coast of California, and it is believed to be a new cruiser in those waters. The news of the joining of the British squadron in Chinese waters with the Australian fleet was received here with much satisfaction as guaranteeing the protecting of British interests around the Pacific.

The officials of the geological survey say they know nothing of the man arrested as a suspect at Mahone Bay, N.S., who gave his name as J. R. Ferguson, and said he was working for the Dominion geological survey.

Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, said last night that he had no statement to make about the reported establishment of a branch of the Bank of England at Ottawa. The matter had been under negotiation, and he might be able to make a statement to-day.

The City of Ottawa's aid to the Motherland will be a machine gun battery of four guns, mounted on rapid motor trucks and equipped with steel shields. It will require 30 men to operate and will cost $1,000. Mayor McVeity wrote Col. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, asking what form of aid would be most acceptable, and the Minister suggested the machine gun battery. A special meeting of the City Council will be called to ratify the gift.

Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes stated last night he has received enough offers from American citizens in various parts of the United States to compose four companies to go to the front. This is in addition to the offer received from Los Angeles, where there are two hundred Britishers ready to fight.

Col. Hughes also confirms the report that a wealthy Montreal man, whose name is not divulged, has offered to equip a quick-firing battery. It will be accepted.

Fund For Families of Soldiers.

MONTREAL, Aug. 12.—A fund of $100,000 for those dependents of the soldiers of Montreal who will leave for the front, a combination of the funds being raised by the French and Belgian committees, and the possibility of joining up with a Dominion patriotic fund later on; these were the points made at a meeting of prominent citizens yesterday in the Board of Trade building.

Blood Indians Loyal.

MACLEOD, Alta., Aug. 12.—Chiefs of the Blood Indians held a council of war on the reservation and passed a unanimous resolution expressing loyalty to the Empire, and it was also decided to offer one thousand dollars to be used for equipment purposes.

Spy Caught at Mahone.

MAHONE, N.S., Aug. 12.—A man giving the name of J. R. Ferguson, a student of Dartmouth College, Hanover, N.H., and claiming to be on the geological survey of Canada, was arrested here yesterday. Among the papers found on him was an Admiralty map of Halifax. On orders from that city he was placed under close arrest and will be taken to Halifax by a guard. Monday the man made arrangements for the hire of a motor boat to take him about the harbor.

ST. LAWRENCE OPEN.

Menace to Shipping Proved to Be Only a British Cruiser.

OTTAWA, Aug. 12.—The identity of the mysterious cruiser in the St. Lawrence Gulf having been established as British, the St. Lawrence has again been opened to shipping, according to an announcement at naval and military headquarters yesterday.

"The ocean route is clear from Montreal to Liverpool, and any ship can sail when she pleases in perfect safety." This announcement was made yesterday by R. S. White, collector of customs.

The news had been sent him officially from Ottawa and its result should be pronounced in the easing of insurance and exchange on cargoes, with the result that the wheat now held in Montreal harbor should speedily start on its way to Liverpool. In addition to this it will mean that for the present, at any rate, there will little delay or difficulty in the sailing of passenger vessels from Montreal and Quebec.

To Defend Ireland.

DUBLIN, Ireland, Aug. 12.—It is announced that a distinguished Irish general on the retired list is coming to Ireland on behalf of the British Government, to consult with the provisional committee of the Nationalist volunteers and arrange measures of defence.

Makes a Difference.

Belle—Why, no, I don't.

THE MARKETS

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, Aug. 11.—Tumbling prices today on the grain market exchange gave evidence that the temporary embargo which the war has put on ocean shipments from the United States was not to be ignored. There was a nervous close in wheat at 2¼c to 2¾c under last night. The outcome for corn was unsettled, ranging from ⅛c decline to a like advance. Oats gained ⅛c to ⅜c net. Provisions in the end were 12½c to 55c down.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 11.—There was practically nothing doing in wheat futures on the grain exchange today, traders apparently waiting on developments. No solution of the export difficulty having been devised prices eased off in the United States markets, and the home market followed suit.

Winnipeg wheat opened ⅛c to 2⅝c lower, oats ¼c lower and flax ½c up. At noon wheat had declined a further 2⅛c to 2⅜c on October and December, while oats advanced 1⅝c higher. There was a good cash demand for Nos. 1, 2 and 3 northern wheat, and quite a few offerings on the market, buyers being eastern milling interests. Oats, barley and flax spot were quiet.

Inspections on Monday were 204 cars, and in sight were 70 cars.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 11.—There were no new developments in the local grain trade today, prices for all lines being well maintained, with a continued good demand for car lots and a fairly active trade doing. One lot of 255,000 bushels of No. 2 Canadian western oats was sold at 55c c.i.f. In spring wheat flour the feeling is firm, with a good demand from local and country buyers for car lots, but the market is less excited. Winter wheat flour continues very scarce, there being none obtainable on spot from first hands. Bran is stronger at an advance of $1 under an increased demand. Baled hay is strong under a good demand. The trade in butter was rather quiet, but the tone of the market is very firm. There is no change in cheese, for which the demand between houses was quieter. Eggs fairly active. Provisions in good demand at the recent advance in prices.

MINNEAPOLIS GRAIN MARKET.

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 11.—Wheat—September, $1.04; December, $1.06¼; No. 1 hard, $1.19; No. 1 northern, $1.14 to $1.17; No. 2 northern, $1.09 to $1.14.

Corn—No. 3 yellow, 79½c to 80c.

Oats—No. 3 white, 39c to 39½c.

Flour and bran unchanged.

ITALY WANTS AN EXPLANATION

Why Antivari Was Bombarded

LONDON, Aug. 12.—According to the correspondent of The Morning Post at Rome the relations between Italy and Austria are becoming more strained. Italy has demanded an explanation of the bombardment of the establishment of the Puglia Company at Antivari, Montenegro, over which the Italian flag floats and in which there were Italians.

The economic effects of the war already are severely felt in Italy. Train service has been reduced to save coal of necessity. There is scarcity of the smaller denominations of money everywhere. The mayor of Rome has issued a list of maximum prices which may be charged for food.

German Airship Brought Down.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—A despatch to The Standard from St. Petersburg says that a small German airship of the Parseval type, was riddled with shot and brought to the ground near Czenstochowa, Russian Poland, on Friday. Its occupants, four German officers, were killed.

RUSSIANS INVADE AUSTRIA.

Army of Three Hundred Thousand Are on March Toward Lemburg.

LONDON, Aug. 12. — The report that the Russian invasion of Austria has begun to-day was confirmed by the War Office here. It is stated that a Russian army is advancing toward Lemburg through the Styr river valley. This force is said to consist of more than 300,000 Russian soldiers, every branch of the service being represented. The advance of this army is assigned as the cause of the withdrawal of the Austrian army which had been invading Servia.

A telegram received from Vilna says six carloads of German prisoners passed through that city yesterday morning on their way to the interior of Russia. A St. Petersburg despatch to The London Post says the Russian fleet is actively scouring the Baltic Sea. Twenty captured merchant vessels have been taken to Cronstadt and their crews will be removed to the interior as prisoners of war.

No Naval Action Yet.

STOCKHOLM, Aug. 12. — (Via London.) — The Swedish steamer Runeburg reported that she had not seen a single warship in the Aland Archipelago, or anywhere else. Her captain was told that the Russian fleet had not met the German fleet at all, but was waiting in the inner part of the Gulf of Finland for a suitable opportunity to start an action.

SHAGMEN ADDED STILL ANOTHER TO THEIR STRING

A Shower of Hits Were Helped Some by Petes' Errors — Score Was 10-3

Solid clouting, mixed up with Belting's lenient spirit and Peterboro errors allowed Ottawa to romp off with the third game of the present series by a 10-3 score. The Ottawa club in the present and former series with Peterboro is the nearest approach to perpetual motion we know of, as the chain of wins seems like an endless one. "Shag" shoved Peterson back again, and the big fellow hurled fine ball in all but the first and last innings. Opposed to him was Belting, and it was a case of when Swede meets Swede, with the Parliament Hill Swede coming out on top. Kelly the local catcher, had a very bad day with his arm, and his fine work of Monday was forgotten about in the face of his erratic throwing yesterday. The fans also helped Ottawa when they gave the local players an awful ride. Umpire Lush's work could not be complained of, so the followers unloaded their knocks on the local club.

As a game of baseball it was on the part of Ottawa one of the smartest exhibitions shown here. "Shag" pulled a diving catch which choked off a rally, while Rogers had two sensational grabs, as did Mitchell. King and Fox of the local infield had a big day and divided nineteen chances between them with one error. Although the contest was a hitting affair, the drives were not of the long variety and Smykal had the only extra base clout.

The Petes secured a run in the first when after two were out, Dolan singled and swiped second, from where he scored on Rooney's ripping single. In the ninth Miller, pinch hitting, singled, as did Blount, Welsh and King, and two runs came over. Outside of those innings there was nothing doing for the locals.

Ottawa leaned on Belting for five hits in the second and scored three runs, Stewart, Dolan, Smykal, Peterson and Rogers all had singles, while Mitchell drew a pass. It all happened after two were out. In the fifth singles by Rogers, Bullock and Stewart and Shag's sacrifice, counted two more. In the sixth Smykal's pass, a follow suit by Mitchell, Kelly's errors, Rogers walk and singles by Shag and Bullock, sent two more over. In the eighth, a base on balls to Peterson, a wild pitch, and Mitchell's single sent two more over.

May Make Tie in Mercantile League

The most important game in the Mercantile League will be played at Riverside Park at six-thirty this evening when the Red Caps and Drafting Room meet. Both are C. G. E. teams and the rivalry is keen on that account and also since a loss for the Red Caps would tie up the league with the Red Caps, Bankers, De Laval and Drafting Room, having won four and lost two.

The opposing twirlers will be Gorman and Flaherty.

THE FIRST "SPITBALL"

Who originated the "spitball" of baseball? This is a difficult matter to decide offhand and it's a lucky thing that such a problem is not in the Summer Pastime or the judges themselves might fail to agree on the right answer.

This is what we've been able to discover. Most fans claim that the "spitball" originated with a minor league pitcher named Stricklett in the late nineties, but Ed. Walsh, of Chicago, certainly made it famous. "Phoney" Martin, of New York, a noted pitcher in the early days of the game, declares that Bobby Matthews of the Baltimores, in 1868, not only had the "spitball," but also the curve and fadeaway, just as Christy Mathewson does it now. And "Phoney" claims to have newspaper clippings and other documents to prove his contention. So there you are.

His Foolish Fear.

"Would you marry a man whose income was under $5,000 a year," he asked.

"How much under?" she replied.

"Well, quite a bit."

"Is it between $3,000 and $5,000?"

"I might put it that way."

"Dearest! Why did you think I would let money stand in the way?"—Chicago Record-Herald.

COMMENT

As You Like It

THE DIRECTORS of the baseball club held a council of war last evening but according to W. H. Denham nothing drastic was passed upon. The showing of the club during the past few weeks prompted the meeting but although the officials deny that anything not of the regular line occurred it is stated that some of the players will draw fines and suspensions and that Secretary Farrell of the National Commission will be asked to back up the club officials.

CRESWELL OR NIGHT. Wellington longed for Blucher and he came through in a pinch with a wallop that started Napoleon on his trip to St. Helena. The fans are wondering why Creswell has not been used. The boy has as much stuff as any left-handed hurler in the league. What he lacks is style. He certainly lacks confidence now because he has not been used. Taken in hand by some one who would show an interest in him Creswell would be one of the finest prospects in the league, but for some reason or other, he has not even been encouraged.

THE END of the world is near. It took Connie Mack's crew fifteen innings to beat Brantford 3-2 yesterday.

CRAPE FESTOONS REMOVED.

French Take Signs of Mourning From Strassburg Monument.

PARIS, Aug. 12.—The crape festoons which for 40 years have hung from the monument of the City of Strassburg, capital of Alsace-Lorraine, which stands in the Place de la Concorde, were torn down yesterday and replaced with flowers and palm branches, while a tri-colored sash was draped about the figure.

The ceremony was conducted by 2,000 members of the Federation of Alsatian Societies in Paris. Joseph Sansboeuf, mayor of the eighth arrondissement, embraced the statue and then addressing the gathering, said:

"The hour of revenge for which we have prayed unceasingly for 44 years, has at last struck. The red trousers are again seen on our plains and mountains. The gay bugles of France sounded the charge at Altkirch and Muhlhausen."

Austria's Plans Revealed.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 12.—The correspondent of The Rech at Jassey, Russia, gives what he says are the Austrian plans for the campaign against Servia. The Danubian army after taking the fortresses in Northern Servia, he says, will proceed south through the valley of the Morava.

The objective of the army of the Drina is Novibazar, whence it will proceed to Veles, in the Vilayet of Saloniki, and effect a junction with the Danubian army.

The general advance will be delayed until the Austrian concentration is complete. Then it is proposed to crush Servia as quickly as possible.

The wise man does his duty and lets the other fellow do the explaining.

THE FINICKY TROUT.

This Year Bait Is the Means of Catching His Lordship.

It is a bait fishermen's season so far in the trout waters of the North woods of Ontario and Quebec.

The temperature of the lakes and streams has been low owing to the tardiness of the spring and the speckled things seek their living below the surface when the water is cold. This may or may not be a providential dispensation to keep the angler from injuring his health by wading in ice water, but it is a fact in any case.

What bait to use is a question answered the easier the farther North one goes. Where the fish have not been regularly educated, or, in other words, have not become accustomed to being angled for, nearly anything—a junk of tough salt pork for instance, will do very well.

There are numbers of lakes from 80 to 150 miles north of the northern settlements where in certain favored spots a man can pull out large fish all day long with pork for his bait. The streams flowing into Hudson Bay, at least those west of James Bay, are said to contain no trout.

If biting becomes slow a bit of trout skin with one red ventral fin attached is pretty certain to prove more attractive. Hooks may be, often are, big enough for pickerel, lines like strong whipcord, sinkers four inch nails—any tackle goes with the unsophisticated denizens of these little known waters.

When little ones, i.e., trout under 12 or 15 inches come up, it is a sure sign that the hole is fished out or that feeding is over for the present. The big fellows never give their smaller relations a chance, when it is biting time with them.

In the better known lakes and brooks, more care must be taken for the fontinalis is by no means adverse to learning by experience. For example, there is Coons' Pond in the Eastern Townships well preserved by wealthy men, stocked and fished over for many years, where no one ever heard of trout being taking by bait, excepting through the ice or in coldest weather in fall or spring. There are lakes in Quebec Townships north of the St. Lawrence, where the lumbermen used to take out pails of fish with chalk lines, cod hooks and pork, where now the choicest of flies and finest of tackle must be used to coax the larger fish into striking humor.

Generally, however, men of experience will have no difficulty in finding the necessary bait. One veteran and his guide were found hard at work felling a dead tree, to which a diligent cock-o'-the-woods woodpecker directed their attention. As soon as the rampike had fallen the two cut in at the top where the sagacious bird had marked the place and took out two or three fat grubs which were what the four or five pound trout in the pond near by were waiting for.

Perhaps garden worms would have answered the purpose equally well, but then these are never found beyond the confines of civilization.

Experienced guides generally know of spots where the soil is ploughed year by year by the stamping and fighting of wild stags. Here are easily to be found the large yellow larvae of that humming nuisance, the June bug or beetle, and these often make satisfactory bait. The larva of the bumble bee answer equally well, though it requires the preternatural instinct of the Indian to discover their nests.

It is certain that the best fish in the lake will not bite unless the correct bait is discovered. While companions were taking occasional half-pounders in Lac Bleu, the writer sat amongst them in his canoe taking out in quick succession glorious fellows ranging from two to seven pounds. The big equicures were anxious to feed that day upon canned shrimps, just touched with a little oil of rhodium.

When moved to tell your troubles to the world remember how you felt the last time you had to do the listening.

Borrowing money from friends has caused a number of men of splendid mentality to absolutely lose their memory.

VICTORY CLAIMED BY THE GERMANS

Exultation Over Retaking of Muhlhausen

BERLIN, Aug. 12.—(Via Copenhagen to London.)—The Lokal Anzeiger, in an article dealing with the German victory at Muhlhausen, Alsace, says:

"The silence of the western frontier, following the brief but swift entry of small forces of French into Altkirch, has been broken by the brilliant news of our first battle at Muhlhausen, the 'Weissenburg' of 1914. But this fight was much more important than was that of Weissenburg in 1870 (when the Germans won their first important battle of the Franco-Prussian war) considering the number of combatants engaged.

"We understand the French had three divisions of about 55,000 men. The divisions belonged to the seventh army corps and also contained a portion of the Benzanan crops, whose members are among the elite of the French army. We don't know the extent of the artillery and cavalry engaged, but we believe that the French in Muhlhausen have now a new idea of the value of Krupp guns.

"Naturally the French would have fortified the positions at Muhlhausen with earthworks, but an army like the German army, which takes fortresses by assault, would find themselves little troubled by such obstacles."

Move Unimportant Say Germans.

ROME, Aug. 12.—Advices from Berlin say that the French invasion of Alsace was expected and is unimportant. The opposition at Colmar, it is explained, was merely for the purpose of feeling out the French strength. It is stated further that German plans are maturing perfectly, and that when she strikes seriously she will strike hard.

BIG RUSSIAN FUNDS SEIZED

LONDON, Aug. 12.—A Central News despatch from Berlin says the Russian funds seized by the German Government in Berlin banks are said to total $25,000,000.

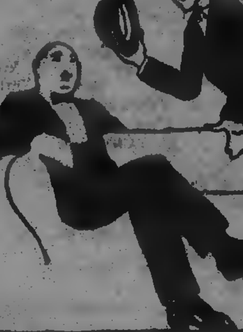
A special commission appointed by the Government in Germany reports that the country has a sufficient stock of food to last for a year.

Emperor William has given $100,000 to the German Red Cross Society, and a similar sum for the relief of the families of soldiers killed or wounded in the fighting.

Polack Stabbed Foreman.

ST. CATHARINES, Aug. 12.—Felix Runick, a young Pole, was committed for trial by Magistrate Campbell on a charge of stabbing Foreman Smith of Jordan Station Canning Factory. A fight was in progress in the Polish quarters at the factory and the foreman attempted to stop it. He received three deep wounds.

Distinctive Title.



"I beg your pardon," said the reporter, "but are you Mr. Spudde, the potato king?"

"Yes, but I don't like that term," replied the magnate testily. "Oil kings and cattle kings and the like are so common. Call me a potatontate."—Pittsburgh Press.

Gave King Wrong Reply.

A visit of the King and Queen to Glasgow recently provided an amusing incident. In the City Council Chamber the King received a series of addresses. One address was from the corporation. McKinnin Wood, the Minister in attendance on the King, handed His Majesty the royal address in reply.

For two minutes the King continued reading, then came to a sentence which could not possibly have anything to do with the City Council. He turned to Wood and laughed heartily. The Queen, Princess Mary and everyone else joined in the laughter.

Mr. Wood was the only person who did not appear to appreciate the joke. Very solemnly he handed another document to the King, and His Majesty began again.

The continued heat and drouth are leaving their marks.

There is intense interest and unrest in the town over the European war situation, and the postal officials and news vendors are soon relieved of the latest newspaper editions. Many of our volunteers and civilians have expresed their willingness to enlist in the defence of the Empire.

One of the most audacious and filthy looking horde of gypsies passed through town last week. Their glad rags had Joseph's coat beaten to a frazzle. While the men talked horse trading, the women paraded the streets trying to tell fortunes and satiate their parasitic propensities. The most of the merchants locked their placed of business and stood guard outside. The itinerant tribe of barnacles disappeared towards the east and we understand were later in Peterboro. Such a band should be tried under the vagrant act and penalized with jail or expulsion from the country.

Mr. H. R. Murray is some fisher, he hauled into his canoe two fine lunge, weighing 14½ and 12½ lbs. respectfully. But a joy seldom comes alone and Mr. Murray was no exception to the rule. A beautiful, trained black Spaniel of his wandered upon the track and the "flyer" west from Peterboro killed him. The catch of the fish did not replace the dog in the affections of Mr. M.

At the conclusion of nine innings, victory perched on the Omemee boys by a score of 14 to 12. Batteries:—Mount Pleasant — Brown, Lowes and Shields. Omemee:—Mitchell and Down. Umpire:—Mr. J. A. Boyd.

German Generals Plan

Luxemburg, fifteen miles southwest of Arlon. It is in this district the extreme left wing of the German army is operating. The entire front of the German advance on Paris extends over sixty miles. The engagements in the neighborhood of Longwy, just inside the French border, at a point where Belgium, Luxemburg and Lorraine meet, extended over a front of about twenty miles.

This fighting is believed here to indicate that the German mass movement to force an entrance into France across the Meuse is being pushed. While no details of the strength of the invading army is obtainable, the admission that the advance is "in force" is considered highly significant.

years active service. It makes no difference who he is; the parents have lost their claim on their boys, they belong as soon as they are 17 years of age to the crazy despot who calls himself William II. by the grace of God, King of Prussia and Emperor of Germany and maintainer of peace. Many a time his life was in my hands when I served my time in the Imperial Guards at Wiesbaden, where I had to serve three years, and where I was attached for one year to the guards of the Imperial sleeping apartments. It would have been very easy for me at that time to administer him a so-called "blue bean" from my revolver, what he deserved, but it would have been of no use. As soon as one is gone, there is another of that despotic race of the Hohen-zollern who multiply themselves as fast as the rabbits, and who takes his place.

I had to serve three years, one year more than all the other soldiers, because I had left the country after I was 17 years old without permission of the military government, and for that I had to serve one year longer. As soon as a young man is 17 years old he belongs to the military government. He cannot leave without permission of the commander. Then when he is 20 years old he has to join the colors. After this awful horrid time of active service, of whose horrors and maltreatments I could write volumes, he belongs again to the military government till he is 45 years old. They can enlist him every year if they like for a short time of two weeks up to ten weeks. If he is married or if he has to leave a good position, as soon as he gets the order he has to leave, and they mostly like the young men from our province so they can Germanize them quicker. But this kind of a Germanization is a failure in our province. Most of the boys join anti-German and French speaking societies. They can never force us to love them; we have too much love for France. There is French blood in our veins, decades of German rule and teutonic education have been unavailing in loosening the ties of blood which bind us to France, and the hope of an eventual reunion has never died. Our ancestors served in the glorious French armies of the Valois 1328-1509, under the Bourbons 1509-1789, during the great Revolution 1789-1809, under the first empire 1804-1815, under the Restoration 1815-1830, under Louis Philipps 1830-1848, under the second Republic 1848-1852 and under the second Empire 1852-1871. They fought shoulder to shoulder with the British in the Crimean war 1854-1856 and in Italy 1859 and some of my cousins are serving now under the third Republic and are fighting again shoulder to shoulder with the British and Belgian soldiers against the invading German armies. My two brothers have to fight in the German armies against their cousins in the French army. I too would have to fight for Germany, but I am here in a free country under the protection of the British flag and I do hope, that the German Emporor and his whole army will be annihilated by the combined forces of Britain, France and Belgium.

We, all, in our province are Franco-Phile Alsatians, but the day will come, when our province will belong again to France with the help of the British and Belgian soldiers and then it will stay French forever. Defeated in 1870-71, France will be victorious in 1914. As I have seen in the papers, the French troops are already in our province and the commander in chief of the army, General Joffre issued a proclamation at Mulhausen as follows: "After 44 years of sorrowful waiting, French soldiers once more tread the soil of your noble country. They are pioneers in a great work of revenge. For them what emotion it calls forth and what pride to complete the works which they have made at the sacrifice of their lives. The French nation unanimously urges them on, and in the folds of their flag are inscribed the magic words "Right and liberty," "Long live Alsace! Long live France." Indeed those words are magic words to us. We never had this under the German Government. Down with the Emperor William, the murderer; down with the Crown Prince, down with the whole Hohenzollern dynasty. Long live Britain and France.

TRADE MARK IS HERE

What is "Penslar?"

That has been asked hundreds of times since it was first announced that "Penslar is coming here."

We will tell you. It is the brand-name of the finest line of family remedies and toilet preparations ever brought to Peterboro. And the goods have arrived—a big shipment.

There are about 100 Remedies, each for a particular purpose. The exact formula or prescription for each remedy is plainly printed on the label, so that every one may know just how it is made.

These remedies are prepared by one of the best-known manufacturing chemists in this country and conform to the highest standards of purity and quality.

The Toilet Preparations also are particularly fine and meet every requirement of the modern Toilet.

We have been appointed exclusive selling agents here for the Penslar preparation. Only one drug store, carefully selected for its high standing and progressive methods, is given the Penslar Agency in each town. That is why the Penslar sign is so widely known as "the Sign of a Good Drug Store."

SINGER IS REMINISCENT

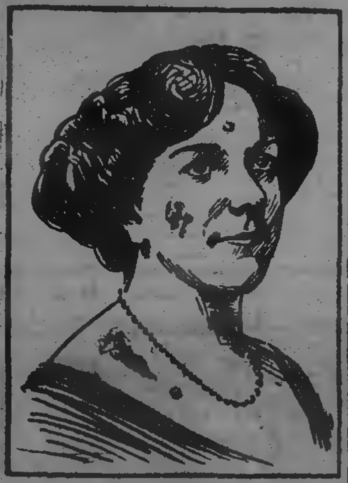
Mme. Clara Butt Tells of Her Most Amusing Experience.

Mme. Clara Butt, who with her husband, Mr. Kennerley Rumford, has lately returned to London from a world tour, during which they have traveled over 100,000 miles and have sung 9,000 songs between them, relates in a recent issue of a London magazine what she considers to be the most amusing experiences of her career.

It is not very often that amusing experiences occur when one is actually on the concert platform, which is no doubt just as well, she says. I remember, however, one very embarrassing incident. It happened at a large town in the North of England, where we were giving a concert. My husband and I were singing a duet together, and were right in the middle of the performance when the audience began to titter so much that we felt sure something must be wrong.

Accordingly, when it came to a part where I had to sing alone for a time, Mr. Rumford slipped from my side and looked round to see what was happening. He saw a big black cat sitting right on the platform, within full view of the audience, licking its chops in a thoughtful sort of way. He tried to drive the intruder away; but, instead of going, the animal put up its back and spat at him. This was too much for the audience, who burst out into a loud laugh, and our duet had to be stopped while the attendants, armed with brooms, dislodged the enemy, greatly to the amusement of everyone present.

Then we went on with our song again. This story would not be complete if I did not add that the black cat quite lived up to its reputation for luck, as the concert was a great success, and the interruption added, if anything, to the enjoyment of the audience.



MME. CLARA BUTT.

Needless to say, we receive large numbers of songs from unknown composers. Once a song was accompanied by the composer's own recommendation. "It is thought very highly of in the circles in which I move," he wrote, "and I may add that I sing it myself." The writer added: "I enclose a Postoffice order for 12s. and 1s. 6d. in penny stamps, making 13s. 6d. in all. This and the stamps, I beg you to understand, are your own for the compliment which you will do me of singing my song in public. Should you sing it more than once, and will acquaint me with the time and place of its second rendering, I shall be very pleased to make the payment good up to, say, 15s."

For sheer originality, however, a letter I received just before starting for one of my Australian tours beats any other communication that I ever remember seeing. This is how the effusion read:—

"Madame,—I note that, together with your husband and a large party, you will leave England almost immediately for an extended tour in Australia. I have long held the opinion that the ordinary concert is of too uniform and unvaried a character, and I believe that if some bright turn were added to the proceedings, much larger audiences would be attracted. I write, therefore, to offer my services upon the Australian tour, and to say that, in addition to being an accomplished skirt dancer, I am also able to give attractive exhibitions as a contortionist. I feel sure that you would find me a most desirable addition to your party, and that if you took me with you to Australia the entire success of the tour would be assured. Kindly make an appointment when we can discuss terms."

I really regretted the reluctance on my part to turn my concerts into variety entertainments which obliged me to refuse the offer of this very enterprising individual.

On my tours I have been amused at times by the extraordinary criticisms of my singing which I have seen printed in various papers. "There is nothing of the basso-profundo about Mme. Clara Butt," was the verdict of one critic. "The larger half of her voice is upstairs, rather than downstairs."

Another gentleman let himself go in this manner: "Her songs are brief dramas expressed in the mellowest music, in wild bursts of defiance, in full-toned organ sounds of sentiment, in clarion cries of declamation, in sobs of sorrow, and paeans of joy."

There are surely few more fulsome phrases left in the dictionary.

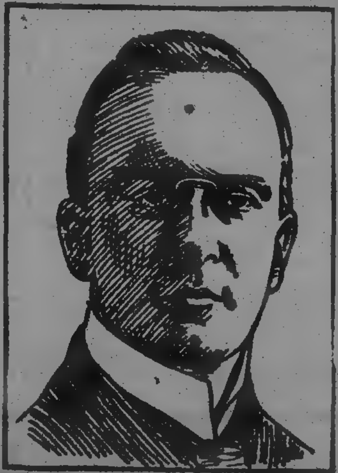
Common sense is a disease that is never fatal.

HOW WILFRED GARIEPY HAS MADE GOOD IN THE WEST

Quebec Man Who Graduated From Laval and Went to Alberta In 1892 Now Holds the Portfolio of Municipal Affairs In the Alberta Government—He Has Held Many Offices.

"Biography should treat of the lives of those whose worth, socially, morally, and intellectually, commands the inequivocal respect of the public which is a discriminating factor and invariably distinguishes the ring of the true metal from the dissonance of the brass. In the possession of admirable qualities of mind and heart, in holding marked precedence as a distinguished member of the legal profession, and in being a man of high attainments and distinguished executive ability, Mr. Gariepy challenges attention as one distinctly eligible for representation in this compilation, while his earnest and upright career and his position as a man of affairs but served to render the more consonant an epitome of his life history in this connection."

So wrote Dr. A. O. MacRae, of the Hon. Wilfred Gariepy, in his history of Alberta. Since the above was written Mr. Gariepy has more than ever won for himself a place on the merit roll of distinguished men in the Province of Alberta. In 1913 he was the successful candidate for the Legislature as representative for Beaver River, one of the northern constituencies of the province. In November of last year the subject of this brief sketch was sworn in as Minister of Municipal Affairs for Alberta, and re-elected by acclamation as member for Beaver River in December of the same year.



HON. WILFRED GARIEPY.

Born at Montreal on March 14, 1877, the son of Joseph H. Gariepy, the young man was educated at St. Laurent College, Montreal Seminary, Laval University, and finally graduated in law from McGill University.

Going to Alberta in 1892, young Gariepy was associated with his father in business in Edmonton. Ill-health prevented him from taking up his chosen profession till 1903, when he began the practice of law under the firm name of Taylor, Boyle, and Gariepy, afterward Gariepy and Landry, and finally as at present, Gariepy, Giroux, and Dunlop, of Edmonton.

Mr. Gariepy was an alderman of his city from 1907 to 1910. He is a director of the Edmonton Children's Aid Society, president of the Alberta Union of Municipalities; president of Edmonton Liberal Club, secretary of Edmonton Canadian Club, and president of the French-Canadian Congress of Alberta. In 1904 he was a school trustee and has been elected every year since. In 1907 he was a school trustee and has been elected every year since. In 1907 he was president of St. Jean Baptiste Society and in 1911 a Grand Knight of the Knights of Columbus. He is a member of three clubs, Edmonton, Northern, and Canadian, and a Roman Catholic in religion.

The new Minister has a pleasing manner, and on a recent tour of the province with other Ministers of the Legislature he made many friends. He is brimful of humor, has a good command of English, and as a platform and after dinner speaker is very popular.

Mr. Gariepy is married and has three sons and one daughter. His home is in Edmonton.—Max McD. in Toronto Star Weekly.

The Iron Duke's Birthday.

The Duke of Wellington himself never knew exactly when he was born. He thought it was May 1, but his biographers are not at all agreed on the point — their dates ranging from April 29 to May 6. The discrepancy probably arose from the confusion between the old and new styles of reckoning time. Queen Victoria, at any rate, was content to accept May day as the date of the "iron duke's" birth, seeing that she gave his name, Arthur, to her soldier son, who happened to be born on this date in 1850.—London Chronicle.

When Pepys Learned Multiplication.

An entrance examination in arithmetic would have floored at least one distinguished civil servant of the past. In 1662, when he had been for years surveyor-general of the victualing office, Mr. Pepys notes in his diary: "To Mr. Cooper, mate of the Royal Charles, of whom I intend to learn mathematics, and do begin with him to-day. After an hour's being with him arithmetic (my first attempt to learn the multiplication table), we parted till to-morrow." — London Chronicle.

MASTER OF STRATEGY

Lord Cromer Successfully Encountered Wily Egyptian Officials.

"The Living Sphinx of Egypt." Such was the title once bestowed upon Lord Cromer, the great pro-consul and maker of modern Egypt, who at the moment of writing is reported to be lying seriously ill at his London residence.

Lord Cromer used quick and daring methods in dealing with Egyptian risings. At one time Cairo was almost openly disaffected, and the British garrison was small. His lordship, however, cause it to be known that a regiment was on the way from India, but he was careful not to explain that it consisted of sick-leave and time-expired men and bandsmen.

All the able-bodied soldiers in garrison were ordered to parade all over the town in small parties and the natives did not take in the fact that they were a sort of stage army—the same men over and over again. The last straw was when Lord Cromer coolly put on flannels and publicly played game after game of tennis. This final piece of bravado nipped the threatened rising in the bud.

Several times during his early days in Egypt Lord Cromer's life was in danger. An English visitor who resembled him was found stabbed to death, having been killed in mistake for the great pro-consul; while on another occasion a dervish was found to have a knife concealed in a petition which he was about to present to his lordship.

And it was because he was always a man of deeds, not words, that Lord Cromer became known as the "Sphinx of Egypt." He made himself a power in Egypt which admitted of no rivalry, and, although in 1883, when he was chosen agent and Consul-General, highly-placed Egyptians told him it would be impossible to do away with bribery and the buying and selling of justice in the land, the answer was, "I am here to change all that."

Lord Cromer once went to the Khedive to demand the instant dismissal of a high official who was the Khedive's intimate friend. Enraged at the request, the Khedive refused point blank to dismiss him. "Well," Lord Cromer replied, quite coolly, "unless I have an order of dismissal in five minutes I will go and cable to England at once that I am coming home. That will mean your dethronement." And before Lord Cromer left the palace he had in his pocket the order he had demanded from the despotic Khedive.

A Curious Play.

A short play called "The Irishman's Home," shortly to be produced at a theatre in London, is sure to attract interest; however, it may fail from the point of view of technique, for its joint authors are relatives of the opposing leaders, and they appear on the stage, in parts each has written for the other. Harry Carson, the eldest son of Sir Edward Carson, does the role of an agitator, who belongs to the Ancient Order of Hibernians, "full of sentiment and traditional bigotry." L. G. Redmond-Howard is a nephew of John Redmond, and he plays the part of the son of a North Ireland general, a college student who is "impatiently viewing contemporary problems from the economist standpoint." The scene is the drawing room of a house in Belfast.

The play has its climax in the entry of a cardinal of the Roman Catholic Church, who exclaims:

"Peace in the name, not of the King, nor of country, but in the name of that God who said: 'Thou shalt not kill.'"

Origin of Editorials.

May 12 seems an important anniversary for the newspaper world, because some consider that on this date, in 1791, The London Chronicle first brought into being the leading article. It was merely a short paragraph, which stated that "the great and firm body of the Whigs of England, true to their principles, had decided in favor of Mr. Fox as the representative of the pure doctrines of Whiggery" and suggesting as a result that Burke should retire from the House of Commons. This paragraph was published in the part of The Chronicle where leading articles afterward appeared and for that reason is reckoned the forerunner of editorial comments on topics of the day.

Antrim County May Have to Pay.

The whole taxpaying population of Ulster probably will have to pay for the damage done in that province by the militant suffragettes. Major-General Sir Hugh McCalmont, a former Unionist member of Parliament, has brought action against the County of Antrim for $55,000 for the destruction of his house, Abbeylands, which was burned by the militants in March. The action is brought under a law that applies only to Ireland, and which was enacted at the time the Nationalists were carrying on a militant campaign in favor of home rule. Under this a county is responsible for any damage done by mobs or persons and must also pay for any extra police protection sent in anticipation of violence. Should General McCalmont be successful in his claim the taxpayers of Antrim will have to pay an extra tax of nearly eightpence in the pound next year.

SHOWING CONFIDENCE.

It Has a Strong Influence On Making Business and Good Times.

Preachments about the value of optimism are a trifle bromidic, so instead of hurrahing for optimism I have a few instances of the influence that comes from putting a good face steadily toward bad fortune, and contrariwise the bad effect of mourning because business is not better.

"How's trade?" I asked a stationer. "Trade!" he exclaimed. "Trade! There isn't any. Things are rotten." Now, if I had had any intention of buying anything from him, which I had not, that depressing statement would have gone a long way to keep me from buying.

"How's things?" I asked the boss of a men's furnishing store a few hours later. "Little quiet, just now," he smiled; "but I can't complain. We have run ahead of last year and prospects are good." I felt like buying a new hat because the cheeriness of his reply made me feel that money was coming to me.

"How's trade?" I asked a tobacconist. "Good," he replied emphatically. "Little slow today, but trade is mighty good with me, coming right along." And I bought a cigar.

Confidence is the influence that makes good times because it quickens trade. But if all business men were to croak about bad business, would not that influence make us all very careful about doing anything? We would all want to sit tight and wait. The way to get good times is to face the world hopefully and go to work. The croaker is a trade killer.—Inland Stationer.

Cardinals Other Than Papal.

England has cardinals other than those created by the Pope. At one time there were officials of that title attached to a number of the cathedrals, whose duty it was to visit the sick and relieve the needy, but St. Paul's is now alone in the possession of senior and a junior cardinal, elected by the deans from among the minor canons. One of the holders of the title in recent times was the author of the "Jackdaw of Rheims."—London Spectator.

"The Home of Good Clothes"

A SIREN

She Proved a Lure in the Right Direction

By F. A. MITCHEL

The First Congregational church of Halseyville experienced great difficulty in retaining a minister.

Indirectly the small salary was the cause of the trouble. It was but $600 a year, and no man could be found to accept it except some recent graduate just beginning his life work. These young men were all bachelors. There was a girl in the congregation, Miss Beatrix Severance, daughter of the managing deacon, who as soon as a young man fresh from a theological seminary took up the duties of pastor began to weave about him a spell. He would gradually become devoted, then on one pretext or another would hand in his resignation and leave for another field.

A few of the parishioners who were in the secret advocated securing a married man for pastor. Acting on the suggestion, they "called" a man with a wife and six children. But the salary was so small that the more prosperous members of the congregation were continually compelled to put their hands in their pockets to help the family out. Fairs and donation parties were resorted to till at last the congregation became weary of the business. The pastor secured a call with a higher salary, and the First church returned to the old system of having a bachelor to fill the pulpit.

When the Rev. Thomas Ridgely, unmarried, stepped into the pulpit vacated by the pastor with a family, none of the congregation except a committee who had been sent to hear him preach had seen him. As he stepped forward to begin the service a few of those who understood the cause of the frequent resignations of the church's pastors looked at one another meaningly. He had fiery red hair and enormous joints, while his complexion was a freckled brown. If these persons had spoken their thoughts they would have said. "At last we have a man whom Trix Severance will let alone."

Beatrix, who was in her accustomed seat in her father's pew looking up at the minister, was of the same opinion. However, when he sent his first word rolling over the congregation it was like the lower notes of the organ. There was scarcely a member of the congregation but admitted that Mr Ridgely possessed a resonant voice. It seemed not to make any difference whether he raised it or lowered it, the effect was the same. When he spoke in those tones that are intended to be impressive, but are usually inaudible, his most subdued note could be distinctly heard in every part of the house.

But when Mr. Ridgely began his sermon it was evident that his voice was not his principal attraction. There was a depth as well as a fervor in everything he said that went both to the understanding and the heart. For the first time in years the congregation of the First church realized that they were under a powerful influence. They listened, every eye and ear intent upon him, till he had finished; then a murmur of satisfaction broke the stillness.

When the sermon was over and the congregation were passing out of the church the hum of conversation was entirely about the new pastor. "Where did the committee pick him up?" "What does it mean that such a man will accept our little salary?" "He'll be called somewhere else within a few months." These were some of the comments made, and all were encomiums on Mr. Ridgely. But there were a few, a select few, who looked at the matter from a different point of view. With them the question was, How would Beatrix Severance stand in the matter, or would the clergyman be driven away by her as the other bachelors had been?

What were Miss Severance's thoughts or intentions no one knew, for she kept them to her own sweet self. Every Sunday she attended service, at least once, and sat listening to the clergyman's words without betraying by her expression an interest in him personally. Nevertheless the congregations soon noticed that she was weaving the same spell over him she had thrown about the others.

Then a low murmuring began to be heard against the girl, who, it was to be inferred, would drive out this gifted man. They had failed to find fault with her in the other cases, for the men were not talented and could easily be replaced. But here was a wonder who, when they lost him, could not be replaced. Indeed, there was not a member of the congregation but feared that at any moment he would receive a call elsewhere at a far higher salary than they were paying or could afford to pay him. Should Trixie Severance be allowed to deprive them of their prize?

An informal meeting of those who understood the matter was held at the house of Mrs. Deacon Stoneman, wherein it was discussed, and the result of the conference was that the deaconess should request her husband to go to Deacon Severance and ask him to warn his daughter to keep hands off the new minister. Deacon Stoneman called on Deacon Severance, and the two were closeted together for the space of half an hour. Then the visitor withdrew, and Deacon Stoneman called Beatrix into the room, closed the door and informed her of the subject of the recent interview.

"Papa," said Trixie, "what do you wish me to do?"

"Nothing so far as Mr. Ridgely is concerned."

"What does the congregation wish me to do? Have they mentioned any especial act I have committed with reference to Mr. Ridgely that they object to?"

"I don't know that they have."

"Well, you may tell them for me that Mr. Ridgely had best be let alone with reference to his treatment of me and I had best be let alone with reference to my treatment of him."

This ended the conference between father and daughter. What report he made to those who had taken it upon themselves to admonish Beatrix through him was not known, but it was probably not very satisfactory, for the feeling against the siren increased, and it was not long before she began to get the cold shoulder from certain members of the congregation. One thing was noticeable—the relations, so far as they appeared between her and Mr. Ridgely, were by no means changed by the fact of her admonition.

One day Mrs. Harkness met Mrs. Gooding on the street, and the two ladies stopped for a chat.

"Have you heard the news about our pastor?" asked the former.

"No. What is it?"

"He's had a call."

"I knew it! It's all that minx Trixie Severance's fault. She's driven him out as she has driven out the others."

"He hasn't accepted it yet."

"But he will. Do you know what salary goes with it?"

"They say it is double what we are paying."

"Then he's sure to go."

The news spread that the church's idol had received a call, and it was generally conceded that it was preliminary to his leaving the place on account of having received a refusal from Beatrix Severance. Then it began to be known that in his new field he would receive double the salary he was paid by the First church. Meanwhile the feeling of antagonism toward Trixie was growing like a rolling snowball. Some even suggested that in the event of their losing their pastor she be brought up before the church and tried for unseemly conduct. But the absurdity of such a course was apparent when some one asked in what form the charges would be made.

One Sunday, after reading the usual notices, Mr. Ridgely said that since it had become generally known that he had received a call he would say that he had declined it and would remain with the First church.

Great was the astonishment at this announcement. What did it mean? Was the man crazy to refuse a salary of $1,200, when he was getting only $600? Those who understood Miss Severance's part, or her supposed part, in these pastoral affairs looked at her inquiringly. Her face was as passive, as unintelligible as usual.

The only person in the congregation who could give a satisfactory explanation of the matter was Mrs. Gooding, who said it was so plain she couldn't understand why everybody couldn't see it. Trixie had so bewitched the pastor that rather than leave her he had given up an additional $600 a year. This view commended itself to others, and the impression gained ground that the minister's departure was only deferred. Miss Severance was playing him as a cat would play a mouse. Before long he would depart, call or no call.

Meanwhile the power of the young clergyman for good was becoming known elsewhere, and calls began to pour in thick and fast. Mr. Ridgely did not speak of them himself; they leaked out through those who gave them. He declined them all.

Then the congregation of the First church began to think that it was his love for them that kept him. After all the First church was composed of an exceptional class of people. Quite likely Mr. Ridgely appreciated the social advantages of such a church. This view was poohpoohed by a few, but gained ground generally.

Finally an announcement was made by Mrs. Deacon Severance that was like a bomb dropped among the congregation. Her daughter, Beatrix, was engaged to Mr. Ridgely. All were made happy by the news. Their beloved pastor would now be a fixture in the First church. From being the most unpopular member of the congregation Trixie became the most popular. All flocked about her with congratulations, saying that they were "so glad;" that doubtless it had been through her influence that Mr. Ridgely had declined the calls he had received and now they would have him always.

Miss Severance received their congratulations with the same imperturbability that she had borne their reproaches. In due time the wedding was celebrated, and all were settling down with a feeling that they were to retain a minister who had been offered several thousand dollars a year in place of the paltry sum of $600 when the tranquil waters were again disturbed. The minister announced from his pulpit that he had determined to give up all regular pastoral work and preach the gospel to the poor wherever and whenever he found an opportunity. He further stated that he was happy in having gained a wife who sympathized with him in this course and who would assist him in his efforts to ameliorate the spiritual and physical condition of those who most needed him.

The Rev. Mr. Ridgely is now a tower of strength in the slums, and his wife is his indefatigable assistant.

Pleasant For the Callers.

Two ladies made a formal call on a distant acquaintance. The maid asked them to wait until she ascertained whether the person inquired for was in. Presently she tripped downstairs and announced that "the lady was not at home." One of the callers, finding that she had forgotten her cards, said to her friend, "Let me write my name on your card."

"Oh, it isn't at all necessary, miss," put in the maid cheerfully; "I told her who it was."—New York Globe.

RESCUED IN ROCKIES.

R. N. W. M. P. Officer Back From a Man Hunt In the West.

Life in the Northwest Mounted Police is rarely monotonous; sometimes it is thrilling to a degree. Sergt. C. S. Harper participated some time ago in an adventurous man hunt in the Rockies, which vividly recalls some of the exploits portrayed with so much realism by the cinematograph. Last winter the course of his duty led to Sergt. Harper undertaking in the Rocky Mountains, on the western border of the Peace River district, a patrol which was occasioned by one Asa Hunting, originally of Montana, a person of irregular occupation, an excitable man with eccentricities, such as an excessive fondness for firearms, which caused him to be feared by the Indians and half-breeds if not by the white people of the region. In July, 1913, this man abducted a 15-year-old girl, Mildred S——. In the eye of the law it was an abduction, but the girl accompanied him willingly enough, and before leaving her mother's roof made up a bundle of her personal belongings. Included in these was her doll. The mother made a complaint, and the Mounted Police detachments were notified to keep watch for the couple. The fugitives, however, fled into the Rocky Mountains, into the region where the Smoky, the Porcupine, and the Wapiti rivers take their rise. The country is exceedingly rough, is almost inaccessible, and is inhabited only by a few Indians and half-breeds. Supt. A. E. C. McDonnell was authorized to send a party at once to arrest them—in this case a form of rescue. He despatched Sergt Harper and Constable F. Stevenson, a young Scotsman, who had not long been in the force. Harper engaged Richard Harrington, who had recently been in the region to be visited, as guide and packer, and the three men, with three saddle horses and six pack horses, on Nov. 4, left Lake Saskatoon.

Later the sergeant engaged Philip Delorme, a half-breed. Harper expected to return in six weeks at the latest, that is, by December 16. The six weeks went by, and no word came. Eventually news was received that Harper, who had arrested Hunting and the girl, was returning by the way he had come, and that his journey was likely to be slow. On his return Harper related a tale of adventure. He describes thus the capture of his quarry:

On the 22nd Delorme, who had climbed a hill to one side of us, returned with word that he saw smoke of a camp fire about one mile ahead. I told Harrington and Delorme to stay and to come up if I called. I walked on and crossed the Muddy river, and, going into a bunch of spruce, came on a tepee made of poles and spruce boughs. I went inside and saw the girl, Mildred S——, cooking some food. I asked her where Hunting was, and she said he was out visiting some traps and would be back soon. She thought I was a trapper, and when I told her I was a policeman, come to take her back, she started in screaming for Hunting. I picked her up and took her into the bush, as I thought Hunting would come up on the run. I left her with Delorme and Harrington, and myself ran on to the side of the mountain to see if we could see him coming. I saw him coming along the Big Smoky river with his gun under his arm. Harrington and I ran down and hid in the spruce wood, and when he came opposite I shouted to him to throw his hands up. Hunting offered no resistance, and made no remarks beyond asking where the girl was. I warned him in the correct manner and took his gun, a 38-55 Winchester, away from him.

So easy, after all, was this desperate character taken. Harper is now addressed as "Staff Sergt. Harper."

JESSIE REMEMBERED.

And the Worst of It Was That She Insisted on Going Into Particulars.

Mrs. Goby had been in her new house a month when she received a call from Mrs. Toby. Mrs. Toby was accompanied by her five-year-old daughter, Jessie.

"What a beautiful house you have, Mrs. Goby!" said Mrs. Toby.

"Isn't it nice?"

"It is indeed," replied Mrs. Toby. "And, do you know, I intended calling on you a fortnight ago, but have been so busy."

"Oh, mamma," chimed in little Jessie, "you did come"—

"How dare you talk like that? Speak when you're spoken to," interrupted Mrs. Toby, coloring up.

Tears welled into the child's eyes, and Mrs. Goby sympathetically said: "There, don't cry, little dear. You must have been mistaken."

"I wasn't," blurted out Jessie. "Mamma knocked ever so many times and then said to me: 'Come on. I suppose we shall have to go to the expense of getting tea in town.'"

The silence that followed was frigid.—London Telegraph.

PSYCHOLOGY OF POCKETS.

To prove how undeveloped is the growing urchin's mind
Turn out a small boy's pockets, and these treasures you will find:
A top, six rusty shingle nails, a bank of dirty string,
A snake (defunct), a railroad spike, a battered napkin ring,
A broken file, a rubber ball, some bits of broken rock
And sundry scattered remnants of a shattered barn door lock.

To prove that lovely woman is deficient in the brain
Turn out her leather hand bag, which is likely to contain
A canceled transfer, thirty cents, some frazzled squares of silk,
A fragment of a recipe for sterilizing milk,
A pointless pencil, seven stamps, some powder and a puff,
A shopping list, some scissors and a manicuring buff.

To prove that man's a creature of tremendous intellect
Go through his clothes some morning and you'll readily collect
A dry and useless fountain pen, a knife that will not cut,
Some scribbled dates, a paper book entitled "How to Putt,"
Four keys to locks long gone to rust, five crumpled dollar bills,
A box of sticky cough drops and six numbered billiard pills.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Hyperidrosis.

There is a kind of functional disorder of the sweat glands that results in excessive perspiration. The scientific name for the condition is hyperidrosis. Those who suffer from hyperidrosis are usually not in the best of general health, and the nervous system is especially likely to be at fault. The treatment of the condition, whether its manifestations are local or general, should aim to build up the general health. Any good tonic that gives a fillip to the general system and improves the circulation may relieve the trouble. Cold baths are often useful for their effect on the circulation. In cases where the hands or the feet are affected, immerse them for a few minutes in quite hot water, and then, after drying them with a soft cloth, dust them freely with boric acid powder. If the trouble is very annoying and does not yield to time or to simple remedies like these, consult a physician. The sweat glands themselves may be in a disordered state, and it may be advisable to use the X rays. Those rays have cured cases of hyperidrosis that have resisted every other form of treatment.

"It doesn't need one."

"Why not?"

"Well, the last time I knew anything about it it was standing quite comfortably on its head."

Handing Her a Jolt.

The Sweet Young Thing—He is the most conceited fellow I ever met. He thinks every woman who looks at him wants to marry him.

The Crabbed Old Bachelor—I never knew before that he was a mind reader.

No Self Confidence.

"I would never marry a widow."

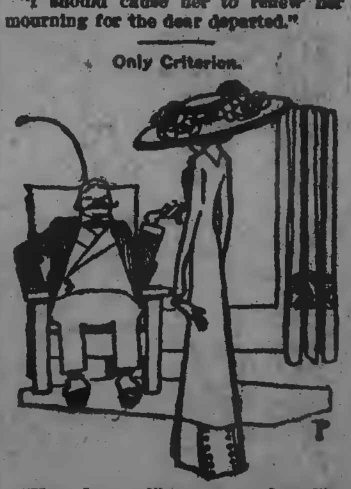
"Wouldn't you?"

"No."

"Why?"

"I should cause her to renew her mourning for the dear departed."

Only Criterion.



"How do you like my new dress?"

"What did it cost?"

"Tell me how you like it first."

"How do I know with nothing to base my judgment on?"

Hopeful.

"What ever are you talking about?"

"I don't know."

"Then why talk?"

"I hoped I might divulge something that would put me wise."

Not Accredited.

"Are you acquainted with Mrs. Browne?"

"No; I have been introduced to her only three or four times."

Found Wanting.

"How do you like the new minister?"

"Oh, his intentions are all right, but he can't use half as many big words as the last one we had."

A Logician.

"Don't think ill."

"Then I can't think at all."

"Why can't you?"

"Because I am always ill."

A thousand strike out where one makes a home run.

OLD FORT MARION.

America's Only Medieval Castle a Landmark In St. Augustine.

For more than 200 years St. Augustine was the Spanish capital of Florida, and the Florida of those days extended from the Chesapeake bay to the Pacific ocean. It was an impregnable stronghold all of those years.

Old Fort Marion, begun in 1592 and finished in 1756, is the only medieval castle in America. It cost an enormous sum of money. Repeated heavy drafts of the builders caused the king of Spain to inquire if they were building Fort Marion of gold dollars. The castle stands today in perfect condition, guarded by the United States government. The keeper conducts visitors through the castle, down into the dungeons and shows you rings in the walls where victims of Spanish oppression were chained to die. Report, fairly well authenticated, has it that when the castle fell into the hands of the British two skeletons were found in one of these dungeons chained to the wall. One was of a man, the other a woman. There is something uncanny about these dungeons that cannot be described by word of mouth.

While there has been great improvement in old St. Augustine, the ancient landmarks have been preserved. The old city gate is intact; the Spanish monuments hundreds of years old attract the lover of antiquities. Narrow streets characterized all Spanish towns of medieval times. There are streets in St. Augustine not more than ten or a dozen feet wide, each side lined with the same type of buildings that were the custom three or four centuries ago

A New Kind of Date.

Perhaps the last thing in the world over which the vagaries of fashion might be expected to exercise any influence is in regard to such an everyday practice as the style of dating letters. Yet even here fads and fancies have their way. A new fancy is said to be the elimination of the date of the month altogether, simply giving the day of the year. For instance, Aug. 1 would be represented by "213-1914," while for New Year's eve "365-1914" would be used.—London Globe.

Wooing Desdemona

WITH A MOVING PICTURE CLIMAX

By CLARENCE LINDNER

Tongues in trees, sang the bard, books in the running brooks, sermons in stones—and, by the same token, romance in finger nails.

The idea is not so absurd. Stella will corroborate me.

Drop into Burtscher's tonsorial parlors some day.

Go right through into the little room curtained off at the rear.

Seated at a table, with bowls of warm water, jars of red paste and various delicate instruments set out before her, you will find Stella placidly munching caramels.

As you enter she will look you over impersonally. Sigh if you are tall and dark and saturnine or smile sadly, but kindly, if you are—what you are; say something original that she has heard twenty times a day for three years and offer her your fingers to refine.

When she has massaged them for a few minutes and you think that your soft glances have quickened the beating of her heart, ask her about this romance business.

She will gaze silently at you for a quarter of a minute.

Then a pearly tear will hasten from beneath a quivering eyelid. She will swallow a sob with her caramel.

And if you are not tall and dark and saturnine she may tell you the story. It isn't much of a story as stories go. But judge of it for yourself:

His entrance was soundless. Stella was not aware of him until his shadow fell across the page of her book. She started nervously and looked up to find him seated opposite, gazing at her gravely. Her heart thumped violently as she looked into his eyes. She blushed. Her glance fell. She sighed.

Without looking up again she began to operate on the hand which he offered for her ministration. Her fingers trembled. Twice she almost stuck him with the cuticle scissors.

She never could recall with what remark he broke the awful silence. For the first time in memory she was powerless to inject the element of loquacity into a situation.

She knew before he spoke just what would be the tonal quality of his voice; knew it would be soft and low and compelling. At his first word her gaze was drawn to his. She peered into his black eyes timidly, fearfully, entranced.

Mayhap it was hours he talked, mayhap only minutes.

"In Madrid," he murmured absently, "near the Plaza de Toros, lives a soft eyed maiden whom you remind me of much."

He flinched as the scissors point penetrated a tender spot. But she was far away from cuticle and scissors.

"And once in Delhi, as the regiment marched out, I saw you waving me goodby from the gate of the town"—

From land to land he skipped. He balanced the south pole on the tip of his tongue, derided the hemispheres, twisted the equator in a knot and flipped the top off Mont Blanc. He mopped up the Pacific ocean with his left hand and with his right taught backgammon to an Eskimo in Greenland.

Time and distance were exploded myths to him. He was a citizen of the universe, address anywhere.

"You must know pretty nearly every one," Stella whispered admiringly.

He considered a moment while he adjusted the green jade pin in his necktie.

"Not quite," was his modest admission.

She sighed and applied the nail buffer with feverish assiduity.

When he had gone she wept softly and tried to recall what he had looked like. He was tall, she remembered, and slender and dark.

That night she cried herself to sleep and dreamed she was Madylaine, the heroine of "Love's Last Word."

He came again many times.

There were more tales—tales of hair raising adventures in the crannies of the world. The heroes of them all were friends of his, nameless men mentioned casually, though she knew all the time that it was he who really figured in the leading roles.

She put down his delicacy in omitting names to that innate modesty so characteristic of heroes. There was a man, for instance, who twisted the tail of a blood crazed tiger in Bengal and flung the brute to starve in the branches of a tree.

His visits became more frequent, so frequent that his nails could not possibly have grown between times.

He led her to talk of herself—of her ideals, inspired by the best magazine literature; of the loveless life of a plump manicure lady in a deserted city of 5,000,000 population.

He learned, too, of the $300 she had hoarded up against the traditional day of inclement weather.

And before he left on that occasion they kissed furtively across the table, during which process he spilled a bowl of warm water into his lap.

He confided his name—Montford Reginald McShane. She smiled happily as he blew her a farewell kiss.

Monty, as she fondly thought of him, visited her always in the morning. Whether he had an occupation she had not courage to inquire of him. Suffice she was loved, and to love is to trust, says the heroine of some best seller.

She confided in Rose, her "lady friend," a statuesque blond who circulated comestibles in a lunch room. Rose was skeptical, having proved to her grim satisfaction that the stomach route is the only way to a man's heart.

"Maybe so and then maybe not," she declared oracularly. "This romance business is all very well for them as can do without sleep. What's his name?"

"Montford," breathed Stella.

"And what for dessert?"

"Reginald McShane."

"Too foamy. Keep your eye on the cashier's desk and don't let him get by without punching his check. This Romeo game wasn't invented for us working girls. Good providers is what we need. Remember what happened to me?"

She dabbled a fugitive tear. Stella was in arms immediately.

"Monty's different. There's something about him that—er—well, you know, he's—er"—

"I know; that was Horace's weak point. I couldn't lay my finger on just what it was till he borrowed all my money one day and skipped. Does he take you out much?"

Stella flushed.

"He hasn't yet," she confessed lamely, then flared. "He—he—well, love doesn't need such things to show it's true."

"No, maybe not, but it helps some. Don't let me throw on the damper, though. I ain't saying he's not all right, dearie. I hope so, but"—

Stella burst into tears and flounced to the door.

"You're horrid," she sobbed, "and jealous. I won't listen to another word against him."

On his next visit, however, she met his advances austerely.

"When I was in Algiers," he began reminiscently, after a few well chosen and silently received words about the weather.

"There's a new show at the Lyceum they say is awfully funny." Her tone was dreamily wistful.

He sidestepped warily. "This weather reminds me a lot of Labrador."

"I haven't seen a good show for a long time," she sighed.

"Not that it's so cold in Labrador, you know, but"—

"Have you seen it?"

"What, Labrador?"

"No, the show."

"H-m! Not yet. You see, I'm very busy now nights, my dear. I—I'm entertaining a couple of English bankers this week. Very important, you know. Some time, though," he said vaguely, "we'll"— His words faded into a murmur that lost itself in the puffing of a black cigar.

She melted. Monty was important.

"Some time soon," he promised as he started to leave. "Ah, by the way"—he fumbled in his change pocket—"I forgot my money this morning. Stupid, wasn't it? Have you a dollar handy, my dear, for car fare till I get a check cashed?"

She gave it gladly, receiving a hand squeeze as the receipt.

She did not mention the circumstance to Rose that evening as they sat in the little restaurant where three course meals are exchanged for quarter dollars.

"Want to see a picture show?" Rose asked after supper. Stella agreed languidly.

They dropped into "the travelogue," where for the sum of a dime you may sit in a stuffy room and partake of all the pleasures of a jaunt around the world without the bother of officious customs inspectors or the emotional unrest of seasickness. They found seats well toward the front and opened a bag of caramels to fortify themselves against the fatigues of the journey.

The lights went out. An automaton began harassing a wheezy piano. There was a buzz of expectant whisper.

A square of white light flashed on the curtain, then the legend, "A Trip to the Orient, Personally Conducted by One of Our Lecturers." The audience repeated it to each other in low tones. A Turkish street scene appeared on the canvas.

Some one coughed in the wings. The piano's wail died off in a flowery tremolo. The whispering ceased. A husky voice proceeded from out the shadow at the left of the stage.

"Ladies and gen'l'men, tonight—hic—tonight we shall have the pleasure of leading—hic—leading you through the—the"—

There was a pause. The lecturer whispered hoarsely to some one behind him.

"Where we gonner lead 'em, Mr. Blank?"

A red and yellow mosque that was just peeping into the house stopped suddenly in its course and withdrew.

There was whispered colloquy in the shadow. Another cough.

"Ladies and gen'l'men," the voice resumed more huskily, "tonight we're going to Shpain."

"No, no, you chump!" clear and grating from behind the wings. "The orient—orient! I told you to study it. You've been drinking again!"

"'Tisn't so." The husky one was evidently aggrieved. "Ladies and gen'l'men, we've changed our minds. We're going to the orient."

A whistle sounded shrilly. The canvas suddenly went blank.

The lights flashed on blindingly to reveal an unresisting figure being drawn behind the wings from public stare.

Stella uttered a little shriek before she collapsed.

"It's Monty," she blubbered.

"No," muttered Rose tensely. "It's Horace."

Humor and Philosophy

THE COMMON QUEST.

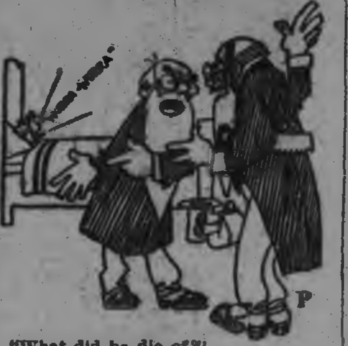
I'm looking for an easy snap,
  I may as well confess it,
For if you saw me searching round
  I'm certain you would guess it.
Most any little thing will do
  That round my way comes drifting,
Just so it doesn't take up time
  Or call for heavy lifting.

A soft and pleasant job would give
  Quite ample satisfaction
If in the working of the thing
  It didn't call for action.
It need not be too dignified,
  Nor would it be rejected
If with the payroll once a week
  It leisurely connected.

Such jobs, I know, are floating round.
  If I could make connection
With one I'm certain it would match
  My delicate complexion.
And, furthermore, I feel assured
  That such a fine position
Without annoyances attached
  Would fit my disposition.

I'm looking for an easy snap,
  I may as well admit it,
And somewhere, floating round the earth,
  I hope that I will hit it.
But if it doesn't come my way
  There's just this much about it—
Though disappointment may be keen,
  I'll have to live without it.

Poor Fellow.



"What did he die of?"

"A slight difference of opinion, near as I can find out."

"Oh, a fight!"

"Not at all."

"What then?"

"Doctors disagreed, and he died before they settled it."

Buying It Outright.

"My train leaves at 2:30."

"I didn't know you owned a train."

"I don't yet. In buying my ticket and sleeping car berth I only made a partial payment. I expect to square up for the rest when I meet the porter."

Reason Enough.

"I fell head over heels in love with the barber."

"Why did you do it?"

"I couldn't help it."

"What do you see in him?"

"He is such a cute little shaver."

Liked the Sound.

"But I love to loaf."

"You do?"

"You bet!"

"Why?"

"It sounds like something to eat."

Certain Test.

"Do you understand women?"

"I certainly do."

"How do you tell a lemon from a peach?"

"By simple matrimony."

Cash or No Trade.

"What are you trying to sell me?"

"A gold brick."

"You are frank about it."

"Yes; I have just discovered that you have no money."

Not Looking For Work.

"I see Jonsey has shifted from cigars to a pipe. Is he trying to save money?"

"No; he is too lazy to bite the ends off his cigars."

Not in Real Life.

"Quips is such a great humorist."

"Yes, indeed; even his wife can see the point of his jokes."

"I always thought she was kind hearted."

And its better soap.
Do you still buy soap by the cake?
Have your grocer weigh the different kinds for you, and this is what you will see.
1 Bar of N.P. SOAP at 15¢ weighs more than 4 cakes of any 5 cent brand and more than 5 cakes of some kinds. That means you can save 5 cents by using N.P. SOAP or 25¢ on every dollar's worth. 3

FASHION AND MISERY.

A Pitiful Tragedy That Revealed an Incongruous Combination.

One of the standing subjects of humorous remarks among New York theatergoers is the weekly article on men's fashions, published over the nom de plume of Beau Brummel, in the programs of the theaters of the better class.

Some people think Beau Brummel is a woman, while others believe him to be merely a haberdasher with a drug habit. However that may be, it is a reasonable supposition that no one wears any of the clothes that Beau Brummel writes about. It couldn't be done. If any man ever arrayed himself in one week's output of the Beau Brummel fashions and started down Broadway he'd land in jail or the psychopathic ward at Bellevue.

The case of Beau Brummel is merely funny. But here is a grim and pitiful little tragedy which is in a way related to it. In a small tenement, at the eastern and poverty stricken end of Fifty-sixth street, the police found John Conwell and his old mother, dead from gas. The man was past middle age and unmarried. They lived alone, and he idolized the woman—a poor, old drunkard. The neighbors said he used to cry hysterically when she would stagger home, stupfied with drink. At last he turned on the gas while she slept and died with her.

He wore cotton overalls at the time of his death, and the few articles of his wearing apparel found in the apartment were worn and ragged. Yet the letters and papers which the police took possession of proved that he earned a livelihood for himself and his mother by writing articles on the latest fashions in men's dress.—New York Letter in Cincinnati Times-Star.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

A bird in the hand is more to be treasured than a peach on the tree.

So live that when the bill collector calls you won't be scared to death.

When a man is up against it you shouldn't blame him if he does some pretty hard crowding.

There are many ways of forgetting and forgiving an injury, but most people don't want to learn any of them.

Be extremely careful when you are certain that you know more than your boss. He may know enough to be a mind reader.

The accident that some people would have done well to avoid is the accident of birth.

Being able to see through a man makes it easy to ignore him.

There are very cheerful persons optimistic enough to expect to tack a rosy future to a very dingy and frayed past.

A natural born gambler can't help it and wouldn't if he could.

Some fellow citizens would have made a hit by being born deaf and dumb.

WATCH THE DATE.

If Your Seed Packets Are Not 1914 Somebody Is Breaking the Law.

Those gorgeously chromatic catalogues that have adorned every home for a couple of months, those enticing little seed packets obtrusively displayed in hundreds of stores, are a reminder that the Seed Branch of the Federal Department of Agriculture has been having about the busiest time of its existence. The important mission upon which George H. Clark, Dominion Seed Commissioner, and his scientifically trained staff are engaged is familiar, if known at all, to but comparatively few.

The field root, garden vegetable, and flower seeds sown in Canada are mostly imported from Europe; some enter from the United States, but only a very few are Canadian-raised. Women and children figure largely in agricultural production across the ocean, so it does not pay this country to compete. Before distributing their trays of packet seeds to the small dealers, also before selling bulk quantities to large dealers and growers, our reputable seed firms submit doubtful samples to this Seed Department at Ottawa, and act upon the result of the official reports. Others do not, and in Ontario, during 1912, out of 1,439 small dealers visited, there were found 197 violations of the Seed Control Act, with subsequent convictions of six dishonest offenders. There were 37 convictions for 330 violations among the 1,527 dealers visited in 1913, and now that there is no possible plea on the score of ignorance of the stringent laws on the point, each future year will find the Seed Branch exacting much stricter adherence to the regulations governing pure seed. Until the present, Commissioner Clark's work has been largely educative, but willful dishonesty is now to be curbed as effectively as possible by legal pressure wherever discovered.

Very steadily the thoroughness of inspection has been increased; last spring 26 temporary assistants to the eight district officers scattered throughout the Dominion being employed; this year there are more. Some of the wholesalers send out their packet seeds on a commission basis, and collect all unsold at the end of the season. But others are sold outright, and if not disposed of the same season they are often kept in stock by the retailer until their vitality has deteriorated. An amendment to the Seed Control Act in 1911, requiring all packet seeds to be stamped, showing the year in which they were filled, has proved a good safeguard. When buying your seeds, see that they bear the imprint of a firm of established reputation; look specially for the date, and then you will be tolerably sure—if your lettuce does not "come up"—that His Lowness, the English sparrow, gobbled your seed, row by row, then swore roundly at there being no more.

Canada's Seed Branch is also active and educatively advantageous regarding field crop competitions and seed fairs, and in granting subventions of various kinds.

Libraries Proposed.

Rev. G. H. Cobbledick, of Lethbridge, Alberta, advocates the establishment of postal libraries throughout the Dominion, so that the people in the remote districts may be able to have the use of reading matter as do those in the towns and cities. The scheme originated just a few months ago in Lethbridge, and is already gaining the endorsement of many citizens. The Postal Library League has been organised, with headquarters there. The project is at the present time under the consideration of the Government, from whom an appropriation is necessary in order to carry out the scheme. The sum that it would cost would be in the neighborhood of $15,000,000, which, as the writer puts it, is only the cost of one battleship. That sum will provide 10,000,000 books to be circulated through the postoffices of the Dominion, making an adequate supply, according to the population. The postmaster of the smaller stations will call upon the nearest large station for any book wanted that he has not in his library. The only reference required for the person wishing the advantages of the library will be the endorsation of some responsible ratepayer, as it now required by the public libraries. Once endorsed the person will mail a card bearing the stamps for the use of the book, and addressed to the postmaster. The book will be forwarded by the first mail and returned in the same manner. Every place would have a larger library in proportion to its population than is now the case, and once established these libraries would be self-supporting.

RENTING ROOMS
The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

For the Children

Miss Betty B. Tailer Taking a Little Stroll.

The diminutive young lady whose portrait is shown herewith was taking a walk when the camera man snapped her. She had hold of her father's hand and was skipping along in great glee. Her father is T. Suffern Tailer, well known in society and business affairs. The girl's name is Betty, and she was visiting the Piping Rock horse races with her parents. It is unlikely that Betty took much interest in the horses. She was much more engrossed in playing with her little brother, who is not much older than she. Piping Rock is situated on Long Island and is a famous resort of society folk. There are held horse shows and races, mainly for the amusement of the upper ten. In winter Betty B. lives in New York, but her summer home is at Newport.

Advice For Boy Scouts.

When starting on a hike leave your coat at home, advises I. W. Schmidt, scoutmaster of the boy scouts at Crafton, Pa. You don't need it while on the move. If it rains it gets wet so quickly that it is of little use and is very heavy. When you get to camp, if you are on an overnight hike, you will take it off to cut firewood. A sweater coat is far better. It packs easily, you can use it to tie things in and you can sleep in it if the weather turns cold. As to socks or stockings, all authorities unite in claiming that for hikes of any distance wool is the thing. Wool absorbs the perspiration or any chance dampness from the outside and makes the best cushion to preserve the foot from chafing.

Your shirt should be of flannel, not cotton, silk or khaki. If you are going to camp overnight and your flannel shirt is dripping with perspiration change into a sweater, and it may occur to you that it would be a good plan to wash the shirt and have it ready for the next day. If you do so be careful not to wring it out. Hang it up dripping wet, and it will not shrink.

Ugly Mug.

This is a good game for exercising and creates merriment among your little friends. The players stand in a circle and suit their actions to the following rimes:

I put my ugly mug in (Each head is thrust forward);
I put my ugly mug out;
I give myself a shake, shake, shake,
And turn myself about.

I put my right elbow in,
I put my right elbow out;
I give myself a shake, shake, shake,
And turn myself about.

I put my left elbow in,
I put my left elbow out;
I give myself a shake, shake, shake,
And turn myself about.

I put my right foot in,
I put my right foot out;
I give myself a shake, shake, shake,
And turn myself about.

Then follows the left foot, right ear and left ear, etc. As much of the fun depends upon the shaking, the "shake, shake, shake," should be given as comically as possible.

TRAP FISHING.

Point Pelee Has an Unusual Piscatorial Industry.

Fishing, as generally understood, means sitting on a muddy creek bank on a warm summer day, with a pole, some bait in a tin can and a lunch basket. The fish themselves are mere incidentals, as one rarely has expectations of actually landing anything larger than a sucker. To most people, in short, fishing is rather more of a recreation than a remunerative occupation.

Pole-fishing and tolling are practically the only methods of capturing fish with which the average angler is familiar. He may have heard of net, lake and deep-sea fishing, but they are pretty much of a mystery and too far removed from one's sphere of life to be of importance, anyway. Right here in Ontario, however, there is a method of fishing that ought to be of interest to every Canadian, and it is doubtful if very many people have ever heard of it. It might almost be called land-fishing, for there are no poles or hooks or nets or boats, or any of the paraphernalia usually associated with fish and fishing.

The method is what is known as the trap system, and the trap is a marsh, of several thousand acres extent, on Pelee Point, that long piece of land that runs out into Lake Erie down at the western end, near the Essex and Kent border. Years ago the whole of Pelee Point was one huge marsh, but about twelve years ago the Government drained a part of it and left only the deeper parts for the ducks, muskrats and carp which had taken possession of it as a natural haven.

The trap is built around the idea that fish will fight a current. In the spring of the year large schools of carp roam the lake coast in search of a stream or marsh in which to lay their eggs. They find these streams by coming in contact with the current of fresh water rushing out into the lake, and by nature they turn and rush up the stream as far as they can go, which is not very far sometimes, on account of the many dams man has built on nearly every stream of any size in the whole of older Canada.

The principle just desribed is utilized in this huge fish trap. In constructing the trap several years ago the first operation was to run a line of poles across the natural inlet to the marsh on which to string a wire net each spring, in order that the fish enticed in could not escape. The next was to dig a ditch four feet wide from the marsh to the lake.

A water-wheel is situated in the concrete main which leads from the lake to the marsh, and is used to create the current of water which leads the fish to think they have come to another stream. It is operated by a steam engine in a house next to the wheel, and when it looks like a good day to pump a few thousand fish into the marsh the steam is turned on, and the wheel begins to send a current of water, four feet wide by three deep, out into the lake. In a short time the fish find it and rush up the current, under the wheel and on into the marsh. Oftentimes the ditch will become full of fish, and many will flop out on the ground. When the day's work is done the water gate at the marsh end of the ditch is closed, the wheel stopped and operations are over until the morrow, when the wheel is started again and a few thousand more pumped in. Carp are the principal fish caught, as they are the only breed that do well in the semi-stagnant water, so catching operations are stopped at the end of the carp run, and the owners leave their catch for a month or two, until the price of fish rises, and then they are caught again as easily and under the same principle as they were caught from the lake.—J. C. Inman in The Toronto Globe.

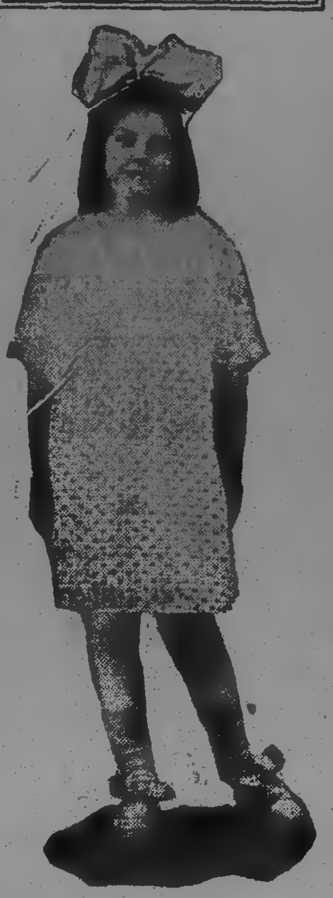
BATISTE FROCK.

Quaint Design Suitable For the Small Girl's Summer Wardrobe.



BATISTE FROCK.

Quaint and old fashioned are the lines of the frock in figured batiste, valenciennes and net footing which is illustrated here. Such a gown would be charming for church and for occasional informal parties. There is no reason why the small girl should not have many replicas of it in printed crape or voile and in sheer flowered muslins or linens, for it is easily made, just a kimono cut upper portion, including bell elbow sleeves banded with valenciennes and edged with footing.

The square neck is defined with two bands of lace insertion, and so is the footing edged high waist line simulation. She wears socks, bows on her sandals, and loops of ribbon hold back her locks above the brow. Care, however, must be taken not to have the loops too large for the face below them.

VOGUE FOR COLORS.

Rainbow Tints Combined In Necklaces of the Season.

All the colors of the rainbow are to be found in beads nowadays—pink, purple, green, yellow, lavender, red, orange and blue.

A quaint conceit in necklaces is the "tango," which is a combination of satin ribbon and beads. The ribbon, about half an inch in width, is long enough to be drawn around the collar, tied in a small bow with long ends hanging. These ends are festooned in harmonizing or contrasting glass beads. The effect is very chic, and still another recommendation is that the tie is very cheap.

Most of the pearls seen nowadays are very excellent imitations of the real thing, so excellent that only an expert can tell the difference. Shops which make a specialty of these gems have so perfected their work that many women who can well afford real pearls prefer to purchase a string of these imitation jewels so that they may wear them every day without fear of forfeiting a small fortune should the pearls become lost.

PANAMA'S BIG PROBLEM.

Uncle Sam's Medical Corps Made the Big Canal Possible.

"The Panama canal could never have been completed except for the work of the medical corps," said Sir Robert Weeks, widely known builder and engineer of London and member of the British parliament for twenty years. Sir Robert built the tunnel through the Andes, completed about two years ago; constructed the great harbor improvement at Buenos Aires and is about to start work on the construction of the Georgian Bay canal from the St. Lawrence to the great lakes.

"It was because the French could not combat disease that they failed in the building of the Panama canal," continued Sir Robert. "Your government realized that to make a success of the canal work disease would have to be stamped out, and it was almost as big an undertaking to do this as it was to dig the ditch. I do not take the view of some engineers that the Panama canal is not a great engineering work, but merely a big work of excavation. It is a tremendous engineering feat, one of the greatest ever undertaken, and the engineers and builders deserve greatest credit for it.

"The Andes tunnel was a big work, but difficult only because of the inaccessibility of the supply stations. The actual tunneling through the mountain was about five miles, but the approaches to the tunnel are about twenty miles on each side. The tunnel runs from Argentina on the east to Chile on the west."—Washington Post.

A Man Who Grew Shorter.

The death is reported of Albert Mills, known as "the brittle man of Birmingham." For twenty-six years Mills had suffered from an obscure disease which caused a shrinkage of bodily stature and made him the object of study by medical men from all over the world. Mills was fifty-eight years of age. The disease was diagnosed as osteomalacia, and its chief symptom is the disappearance of lime from the body, leaving the bones soft and misshapen. It became impossible for him to move, and for over fourteen years he had been confined to his bed. Before his illness he was five feet eight inches in height, but he gradually shrank until at the time of his death he was under four feet high, having lost twenty inches in twenty-six years.—Pall Mall Gazette.

KAISER'S TROOPS ADVANCING NORTH AND SOUTH OF LIEGE

Failure to Take Belgian Stronghold Causes Generals to Seek Other Roads Through Belgium---Northern Forces Meet at Tirlemont and Brussels is Probable Objective.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 13. — Large forces of Germans are moving north and south of Liege into the interior of Belgium and a great battle between the invaders and the allies' armies defending this country is imminent on Belgian soil.

Military experts believe it will require the remainder of the week for the concentration of opposing forces, and that the prospective battle will take place perhaps on Saturday.

Meanwhile there is sharp fighting at many points between detachments of the German advance and the Franco-Belgian defenders.

Official announcement is made that a general engagement is taking place at Tirlemont, Belgium. The German army attacked the Belgian position at daylight yesterday, and the fighting has been continuous. The conflict is a serious one, according to the War Office.

This engagement is believed to be the beginning of the attack directed against Brussels, as Tirlemont is only about 25 miles east of Brussels, on the River Geete. The Belgians are said to be stoutly resisting the German attack. It is reported that the allied forces are pressing on to the aid of the Belgians already engaged there, and sharp fighting is reported at Tongres, 30 miles east of Tirlemont. Military experts are agreed that the German army operating against the Belgians and French in the Belgian-Luxemburg district numbers a million men.

An official announcement from the Belgian War Office declares that the Germans have met defeat along the entire line of battle except at one point. Everywhere else they have been forced to retire.

The effect of this defeat will have a tremendous bearing on the result of the entire war if later advices corroborate the facts that it does not develop that the retirement has been merely temporary to await reinforcements.

The Germans appear to be commencing a fresh phase of the war. Their attack through Central Belgium having failed, they are entrenching along their Meastricht-Liege front and are employing a number of peasants on the road south through the Provinces of Liege and Luxemburg, foreshadowing an attempt to force their way to the south of the River Ourthe and towards the Upper Meuse in France.

The main body of the German Horse is moving forward along the whole front of the allied armies, and it is believed that the Germans have determined to try to put through their original plan of invading France by way of Brussels and Lille. The main German army of more than 200,000 men is believed to be feinting out the Belgian defence line with its cavalry. The Germans are now crossing the River Meuse on the north of Liege.

King Albert has started for Belgian army headquarters at Louvain. Details of Belgian movements are lacking, but it is renorted that French detachments are operating on all sides with the Belgian troops. The British expedition is still believed to be in the vicinity of Namur.

The Germans who are installed in the convent of the Sacred Heart are reported to be accumulating vast quantities of flour in event they should be besieged.

Behind the cavalry there is moving an infantry force, the strength of which is unknown. All the despatches telling of German cavalry operations state that infantry follows the horsemen.

Terrific artillery firing from the direction of Tongres, to the north of Liege, has been heard at Maestricht, says the correspondent there of The Brussels Telegraf.

BOILER EXPLOSION AT ARMOURIES INJURES ROBERT NORTHCOTE

Plumber Who Was Making Repairs is Badly Scalded About Back and Face

ONE OF THE VOLUNTEERS

As the result of a boiler explosion at the Armouries this morning, Robt. Northcote, a plummer in the employ of the Higgins Hardware, lies at his Murray Street home, in rather a serious condition. Northcote was engaged in repairing the boiler when the accident occurred. He sustained several severe cuts and also was badly scalded with steam about the back and face. A heavy piece of metal striking him above the left ear inflicting a deep and severe cut. Northcote had been working on the boiler since early in the morning. looking for a leak. Shortly before the explosion he started a fire and got up steam. The pipes where plugged and an explosion followed. All the windows in the basement, were broken and the boiler room was wrecked. The entire basement was badly flooded. Bystanders in the armouries rushed to the scene and found Mr. Northcote covered with blood and scalding steam. He was carried upstairs and Dr. McPherson who was summoned, removed him to his home just across from the armouries where his injuries were attended to. The fire department were also summoned in case of fire. The explosion could be heard for a distance of fully three blocks, giving the impression that the explosion had resulted from a powder explosion.

Northcote is one of the accepted volunteers for over seas service.

FOR THE DEFENDERS FUND

Yesterday we drew attention to the necessity of looking after the wants of those defenders' families who are not in a position to do so for themselves, while the bread-winner is away protecting his country. Many favorable expressions have been heard regarding such a fund. In order that any funds for such a purpose should be properly expended, Mr. Burnham, M.P., has made the suggestion that a small committee of citizens be appointed to look after the proper disposal of such monies. The Mayor should appoint a suitable committee. In the meantime The Review will be pleased to acknowledge any donations to such a fund, and will undertake to see that they reach the proper source.

LOCATION OF THE ENEMY

War Office Says Position of Troops is Now Known

LONDON, Aug. 13. — The Official Press Bureau of the British War Office and Admiralty says:

"Of the 26 German army corps the bulk has been located, and it is evident that the mass of German troops is concentrated between Liege and Luxemburg.

"The number of German troops known to be on the western side of that country proves that in the eastern theatre of war, the Russo-German frontier, so far as Germany is concerned, is comparatively lightly guarded unless by reservists.

The Admiralty has sent out cruisers which will ply the Atlantic for the purpose of protecting trade routes. The French Government also has sent out warships to search for the German cruisers known to be in the Atlantic, and said to number five.

"The enemy's ships," says the official Admiralty report, "will be hunted continually, and, although some time may elapse before they are run down, they will be kept too busy to do much mischief.

"A number of fast merchant vessels, fitted and armed at British arsenals, also are patrolling the routes and keeping them clear of German commerce-raiders. With every day that passes, British control of trade routes, especially those of the Atlantic, becomes stronger."

BRIGHT YOUNG LIFE IS CLOSED

The Late Madeline Moran Attended Normal School Here

Many local people will regret exceedingly to learn of the death of Miss Madeline Moran, daughter of Mr. John B. Moran, of Codrington, Northumberland, which sad event occured yesterday morning at the family residence. The sympathy of all will be extended to the bereaved family.

At the Normal School, during the last term, the late Madeline Moran was among the many pupils in attendance and her pleasant manners soon won for her a legion of friends. During the winter season she was extremely popular and was present at numerous social events. Toward spring, the arduous studies were too stenuous and her health broke down. Medical attendance claimed that Miss Moran's illness was due to heart trouble and despite their efforts her condition continued serious. About five weeks ago, she was removed to her father's home at Codrington and it was there that she passed peacefully away. Although unable to write the final examinations, the authorities, in view of the excellent work of Miss Moran previous to her illness, awarded her a third class certificate.

The deceased young lady was born at Codrington nineteen years ago and spent her early life there. She received her high school education at the Collegiate Institute in Trenton The late Miss Moran is survived by her parents, two sisters and three brothers, all at home. She was a niece of Mr. T. Moran, 504 Bolivar Street, of this city.

The funeral will take place tomorrow morning on nine o'clock from the family residence at Codrington to St. Alphonsus Church and Cemetery, Woler. Rev. V. McFadden will officiate.

ST. PETERSBURG REPORT ON GERMAN MOVEMENTS

Twenty Five Reserve Divisions and Six Batteries for the Russian Frontier

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 13.—A St. Petersburg despatch to the Daily Mail says it is reported in the newspapers there that Germany has formed twenty-five reserve divisions each of twenty thousand men and six batteries of thirty-one reserve cavalry regiments which will constitute the main part of German forces on the Russian frontier.

Columns of German cavalry are moving eastward toward the Valley of Ourthe. The French retreat from Muelhausen was well carried out. The proportion of opposing forces was four Germans to each Frenchman, and the German field artillery proved far inferior to that of the French.

BELGIANS FORCE GERMANS BACK AFTER ALL DAY FIGHT

French and Belgians Effect Junction South of Brussels --Germans Waging War of Extermination— Hospitals Inadequate to Care for the Wounded From Mulhausen

Canadian Press Despatch.

Paris, Aug. 13.—An official communication says a division of Belgian cavalry supported by infantry and artillery defeated a German force of all arms near the fortress of Diest, eighteen miles northeast of Louvain. The fighting was extremely fierce and the Germans were thrown back. This fight which will be known as the battle of Haelenand was the first considerable battle of the war. It lasted all day yesterday.

Brussels, Aug. 13.— Belgian and French troops have effected a junction. south of Brussels. Peasants report Germans waging a war of extermination, even firing on priests and killing and wounding people indiscriminately. They say whole villages are being wiped out. It is announced that the nineteen hundred and fourteen class of reservists will soon be called to the colors.

London, Aug. 13. — A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company from Basel, Switzerland, says : "Following a terrible battle at Mulhausen, hospital facilities proved inadequate to care for the wounded. Not only hospitals but schools, churches and hotels are occupied to capacity. Even then it has been found necessary to charter special trains to convey wounded to other towns. Latest estimates place the German losses at from eight to ten thousand.

London, Aug. 13. — The declaration of war on Austria by Britain makes the Mediterranean a probable additional theatre of conflict. Nothing is known about the strength of the British fleet in those waters, as no movements of British warships since the commencement of hostilities has been made public but France has the bulk of her fleet in the Mediterranean so that no apprehension exists as to the safety of trade routes through that sea.

In field or land operations little change has occurred since yesterday. Strict censorship of news makes it difficult to estimate the value of news received.

BELGIANS AND GERMANS FIGHTING IN LIMBURG

Enemy Are Constructing Batteries North of Liege in Preparation for Siege

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 13, 4.15 a.m.—The Admiralty and War Office information bureau issues the following : "An engagement is in progress northeast of Hassell in the province of Limburg between a Belgian cavalry division supported by a brigade of infantry and a German second cavalry division 2,500 strong, supported by a battalion of infantry and twelve pieces of artillery."

A German fourth cavalry division is reported moving towards Jodoigne in Brabant.

"No German infantry is known to be on the left bank of the Meuse except the above mentioned battalion. Germans are entrenching at Vise and the forts are holding out.'

The Germans are constructing batteries north of Liege preparatory to a siege. Heavy guns already have been heard. The Germans are constructing a railway between Vise and Homburg, parallel with the frontier of Dutch Limburg. They are entrenching themselves in Liege. Huy Marche and Houffalize are points held by German cavalry.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—The struggle between the Belgians and the Germans for the Liege forts recommenced yesterday. The forts are being fired upon with the heavy siege artillery which the Germans have brought to the front, and are returning the fire of the Germ[illegible] with vigor.

Namur is only one-fifth the size of Liege, and the forts are closer together than the ones at the northern city. The ground between the forts and the city of Namur is better for defensive purposes than at Liege. The names of the Namur forts are: St. Heribert, Malonne, Suarlee, Emines, Cogneles, Gelbressee, Maizeret, Andoy and Dave.

German Losses at Liege.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 13. — The German losses at Liege are now placed at 4,500 killed, 12,000 wounded and 3,700 prisoners.

Combined for Immediate Attack.

NISH, Servia, Aug. 13.—The imminence of a big battle between Austrians and the combined forces of Servia and Montenegro, at Visegrad, in Bosnia, is indicated in an official statement given out yesterday by the Servian War Office. The statement says that the Austrians have entrenched their positions at Visegrad, and that the Servian and Montenegrin forces have combined for immediate attack in force.

Italy To Be Neutral.

PARIS, Aug. 13. — Tommaso Tittoni, Italian Ambassador to France, issued and had posted at the Italian Embassy and in the Italian quarters of Paris yesterday a signed notice stating that: "Italy has proclaimed and will maintain the strictest neutrality. Therefore there is no need for Italians to be alarmed. They may continue to reside in France in full security."

PETERBOROUGH, THURSDAY, AUGUST 13, 1914

TRENT FOREST FIRES.

THE REPORT to hand of the Conservation Commission is very discouraging. In the Trent watershed and district labelled "recently burned over," up to 1913 comprised 22,000 acres. The disastrous fires of 1913 added no less than 170,000 acres to this area. For the department of Forests and Mines at Toronto or the Conservation Commission at Ottawa to presume for one moment that such a showing is satisfactory to the people of this district is to presume too much. The results indicate not that the timber and agricultural resources of the district are being protected, but that they are being neglected. It is true that forest fires are hard to handle and that wayfarers are careless if not worse, but if we are to acquit the departments mentioned on this ground, then we must throw up our hands and acknowledge defeat, for defeat it certainly is. Worse than the timber loss and the loss to the settlers, is the loss of soil. The burning of the soil means that the district will ultimately become a desert, and all indications point that way at the present time. Efforts, however energetic and well-intentioned, are of no use if results are not obtained, and the history of the last few years in the Trent district in this respect has been appalling. Another such fire and this beautiful gem of Central Ontario will be a piece of charcoal and no more. Depopulation must follow, and it is following. A sadder and more unwise proceeding it has never been our lot to chronicle.

PUBLIC WORKS SHOULD GO ON.

THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPH from The Toronto Globe is quoted by The Review as much to show what a leading party newspaper's attitude should be as to compliment the Conservative Government.

> "The Dominion Government has acted very properly in announcing that the construction of public works of all sorts will go on during the present international disturbance, so far as may be found practicable. This is not a time to aggravate the hardships of the working classes by depriving them of a chance to get some employment of a sort useful to the community at large. Order is emerging out of chaos in trade, industry, and finance, and the best way to hasten the completion of the necessary readjustment is to keep work going on as it would have been doing had the disturbance never taken place. This remark applies locally also to the City Council. It may be difficult to find ways and means of paying for material and labor, but the Council should devote its energies to the solution of this problem. In so far as it succeeds its members will earn the gratitude of their fellow-citizens."

HE THAT IS NOT WITH US.

OUR esteemed evening contemporay made a sporadic attempt recently to answer a criticism in The Review, and, having failed, closed up like a steel trap. Unable, or afraid, to pry its mouth open again, it has been sulking, and the other night took pains to condemn the one paper in this locality that had courage to ask where the French newspapers stood on Canada's duty to the Empire in this great war. The Review not only asked the question but succeeded in getting a satisfactory answer.

La Presse drew itself up into a top-lofty paragraph which we partly quoted four days before the Examiner reproduced indifferently the same paragraph. It is to be noted that La Presse has contained some admirable editorials on Canada's duty since we drew attention to the lack of them, and La Patrie has, too.

We noticed the editorial silence and pointed it out in a gentlemanly, albeit emphatic, way. We think we have been polite and candid in the matter, and certainly have nothing to regret. Public opinion has heartily endorsed our course. If we are not entitled to know where our leading people stand in a great matter, what is the reason?

Just here let us point out a golden opportunity for some editorial enterprise by the Examiner. The Examiner says, referring to our position:

> "Such journalism cannot be too severely condemned. Any paper that takes an attitude and makes statements that would tend to create the slightest danger of impairing the unanimity and good understanding amongst our people, or insult a section of our population, is, in effect, doing the work of a traitor at this critical time."

Now, the Montreal Mail and Montreal News both took the Montreal Gazette to task for what they termed a pro-German policy. The Examiner can now read the Montreal Mail and News a lesson for daring to ask an English paper where it stands on the Empire's fight with Germany. If the Examiner is not actuated by a pin-head editorial policy it will instruct Montreal papers on the danger of fissiparous articles which do "the work of a traitor at this critical time." If the Examiner succeeds as well as The Review did we will not withhold congratulations. It was precisely to secure general united newspaper endorsation of the public feeling on the matter that The Review discussed as it did the attitude of French-Canadian newspapers.

Again, no one denies that Le Devoir and Henri Bourassa are against Canadian aid to the Empire and we are glad, very glad to find that it ends there.

IMPORTANCE OF KIEL CANAL.

THE DEEPENING of the Kaiser Wilhelm Canal, running from Kiel on the Baltic to the North Sea at the mouth of the River Elbe, was substantially completed fourteen days before the beginning of the war. This so-called Kiel Canal is the vital feature in German naval strategy.

The original canal, which is 61 miles long, had a depth of 29½ feet and bottom width of 72 feet and a surface width of 219 feet. The improvements which have been in progress for five years and have been carried on without interrupting traffic, were designed to give the canal a draft of 45 feet, a top width of 400 feet, and a bottom width of 150 feet.

The new locks, which are bigger than the locks of Panama, are 182 feet long, 147½ feet wide, and have a mean depth of 45 feet of water over the sill. The new locks, one on each end of the canal, were built beside the older and smaller ones.

With this canal completed, Germany is able to transfer the largest warships or merchant ships as well between the Baltic and the North Sea.

This canal was originally built in 1895 at a cost of $40,000,000. The improvements just finished have cost an additional $55,000,000.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE LATE Lt.-Col. H. C. Rogers was a son of the late Lt.-Col. Jas. Rogers, J.P., of Grafton, whose forbears for several generations occupied the fine estate at Grafton. The old homestead recently injured by fire was a fine old mansion standing in an extensive patch of large trees. It is now occupied by Lt.-Col. Herman Rogers, a nephew. The late Col. H. C. Rogers came to Peterborough when 15 years old and went into business with his uncle the late R. D. Rogers, Esq., of Ashburnham. It is gratifying to know that this old and distinguished family is well represented in the present generation.

YOU NEED NOT be surprised dear reader if you observe citizens walking around with a thoughtful puzzled expression and a German dictionary in their hands. It merely indicates a struggle to know what the war's all about.

THE LARGE unpartisan view which has characterised many of The Globe's recent editorials in regard to the European war is conspicuous in our evening contemporary by an absence that is almost painful.

A LOCAL EVENING PAPER, which is so touchy about pertinent questions says Newfoundland is bleak and bare—a nice way to uphold the harmony and unity of that colony and Canada in the Empire.

IN SPITE OF all the war extras with which the Toronto Star and News have bombarded their readers, the German navy refuses to stay sunk.

THE BIG GAS BAGS of those German dirigibles ought to make excellent targets for rifle practice.

WHERE are the fleets? asks La Presse. Yes, where are they?

Slow, But Determined.
Buffalo News.

We must admit that John Bull is slow to getting into a quarrel with a nation of equal power, but equally slow to stop it until he has reached a satisfactory conclusion.

True British Sentiment.
Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

"If Germany will have it, she shall have it in full measure." These words of Sir Edward Grey express the sentiment of every true-hearted Briton.

[illegible]
Toronto News.

"I'd like to have an ice cream cone,"
Said Gladys. She was only ten.
Her father looked at her and said,
(He was the canniest of men):
"Would you prefer it now, my dear,
My pretty little queen,
Or would you rather have a watch
When you are seventeen?"

War Prices.
St. John Globe.

There is no more reason to fear a flour famine than there is for an excessive advance in flour prices. That there will be any attempt on the part of millers and manufacturers unduly to increase price at the present time is unlikely, for there is a large supply on hand and a large crop of wheat about ready to be harvested. War will no doubt increase prices somewhat, but it will be the duty of the Canadian Government, which in time of peace has afforded a large measure of protection to Canadian millers, to see that in time of war the people are protected if there is evidence of any attempt to impose unfair or unnecessary prices.

Italy Chooses Wisely.
Victoria Times.

Italy has chosen wisely. Replying to an inquiry from Berlin as to what course she would pursue if her partners in the Triple Alliance became involved in war, her government has declared that she would remain strictly neutral, at least until her own interests were threatened. The terms of the arrangement between her and her two allies do not require her intervention unless one of them is compelled to draw the sword in self-defence. In the present situation Austria is the aggressor, and the conditions of the triune compact, in Italian opinion, do not call for the participation of its principals in a war of aggression.

National Sympathies.
New York Press.

It is matter of common observation and comment that the vast preponderance of public opinion in this country is favorable to the Triple Entente. Among public men and officials at Washington, men who are not in position properly to make public confession of their sympathies, the feeling is very strong in antagonism to the Austro-German program.

Austria was the original aggressor, and her attitude toward the little and enfeebled state of Servia, which kindled the whole conflagration, was not such as to command the support of either lovers of fair play or Germany. Germany was compelled to go along with Austria, yet at one time the German Foreign Office indicated plainly that Austria was going quite too fast.

In Austria, it is to be remembered, there is almost utter lack of capacity to realize the existence of such a force as world-wide public opinion. Austria has acted as if she had first determined on a war, and then proceeded to invent pretexts for it. That procedure commands moral support neither here nor anywhere.

THE BOILED SHIRTS
By Walt Mason

Sweet youth, you come and ask for admonition, you'd have me preach and counsel you a spell; and so I say, to better your condition, go, learn a trade, and learn it passing well. The world is short on skilled and drilled mechanics, but it is long on trifling human squirts, who, facing work, are prone to fits and panics, who wear kid gloves and boiled or scalloped shirts. The man who toils at bench or loom or anvil is worth a gross of those who talk or write; 'twould serve them right to bring some cans from Canville, and put them in, and seal the bunch up tight. The man who takes his tools from out their locker, who swings a sledge or plies the shining saw, is more worth while than any tireless talker, who boosts the Flag, or yet expounds the law. The country swarms with men demanding payment for dizzy schemes, the thought of which appalls; the country swarms with men in princely raiment, and what we need's the man in overalls. Go forth, fair youth, and learn to be a tinker, a plumber bold, a tailor or a cook, and men will say you are a peach and clinker, when on the product of your skill they look.

FORCED THEM TO FIGHT.

How "Honor" Was Satisfied by a Compulsory Duel in Hungary.

The code duello as insisted upon abroad is strikingly illustrated by the story of a happening at Budapest, Hungary. It appears that a lawyer, Babocsay by name, quarreled with his wife over a new hat. The wife called her brother, Lieutenant Hajdu, a military aviator, to her aid. The husband used words deemed insulting by Hajdu.

This coming to the hearing of Hajdu's superior officer, the latter ordered the lieutenant to fight a duel with Babocsay. Neither party wished to fight. Babocsay offered to apologize, and Hajdu was willing to accept the apology and thus end the affair.

But the military martinet was inexorable. The duel must be fought to satisfy the honor of the army. Consequently these two men, closely related, were compelled to attempt to try to take each other's life. They met. Babocsay, firing aimlessly, nevertheless sent a bullet through the lung of his adversary, and Lieutenant Hajdu died of his wound.

Upon hearing of the death of her brother at the hand of her husband in her quarrel Mme. Babocsay went insane, twice attempted suicide and was finally confined to an asylum.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Momentum and Velocity.

In answer to the question "Is it not velocity that produces gravitation? If we throw a stone against a window of sufficient resistance with too little velocity it will not break, but if we throw it with sufficient velocity the window will break," the New York American says:

"We do not know the cause of gravitation nor of anything, but the increased speed of a stone thrown is not the cause of gravitation; it is the cause of momentum, which is a product of mass multiplied by velocity. Momentum would be the same if the stone were thrown close to the earth, where the full attraction of its gravitation would be felt, or out in space trillions of miles, where the earth's gravitation would be almost infinitesimal—that is, the glass would break by increasing the speed of the stone as here on earth."

A Clear Wind Shield.

A doctor living in a rainy climate whose calls took him out often in wet weather undertook the problem of maintaining clear vision through the wind shield of his automobile regardless of rain, and he succeeded in making a prescription that would do the work. The prescription calls for one ounce of water, two ounces of glycerin and one dram of salt. This is poured on a piece of gauze and then wiped over the glass, care being taken to have all the strokes downward. The effect of the treatment is to prevent raindrops from clinging to the glass.—Saturday Evening Post.

"Afraid we cannot use it."

"Sorry, but it does not interest us."

"Well, say a stirring article on Mexico, giving the inside facts."

"Nothing on Mexico today."

"Perhaps you would like a bunch of wonderful short stories?"

"We are rather long on short stories."

"Well, how about some poetical masterpieces? Anything from four cantos up. You know, they are quite fashionable now. Can let you have a metrical best seller in a couple of weeks."

"I am afraid not. Is there anything you cannot furnish?"

"Nothing, sir. Philosophy, history, poetry, humor—how about a series of snappy articles on health? Perhaps you would like to have your readers diet by a new system just invented. It makes no difference; there is nothing in the whole range of literature that I cannot supply you with. Here's my card. In case you want anything let me know."

He got up to go. The editor smiled.

"May I ask whether you run an agency or a syndicate?"

"Neither, sir. I am only the proud father of a nineteen-year-old girl who has a talent for literature and has just been graduated from an American college."—Life.

Steel Windmills.

Windmills are now recording some victories in the battle with gasoline engines that has been waged in recent years, a struggle which threatened the disappearance of the picturesque windmills of Holland. Steel windmills, with steel towers and steel sails, are displacing gasoline pumping engines in some parts of Holland, the gasoline engines having displaced the old wooden windmills. They are used entirely for pumping water in keeping the low lying fields well drained.

A Singular Crime

And as Singular a Method of Punishment

By EDITH V. ROSS

Tom Arnold was one of those boys who are so full of animal life that it is hard for them to control themselves and impossible for their parents to control them. It became evident to Tom's father that since his son was bound to sow his wild oats he had better have plenty of scope. So when the boy was seventeen his father sent him to what was then the wild and woolly west. Before he was nineteen he had been on different occasions when important work was to be done made deputy sheriff and when he was twenty received the appointment to that office. His tastes not being in the line of money making, he did not accumulate this world's goods, but this was of little consequence, for his father was well off.

When Tom was about twenty-five years old he had exhausted the novelty of the life he led and concluded to make a favorable reply to the many letters his mother had written him to return to civilization for a visit if he could be contented to remain.

On his way east Tom passed through a small town where he was obliged to stop over a day. This stop was fatal to his return—at least, at that time—for another motive than danger detained him. A traveling company consisting of acrobats, tight rope dancers, trained dogs and such like performers was also passing through the town and gave an exhibition during the afternoon and evening. Tom to while away the time attended the show in the afternoon.

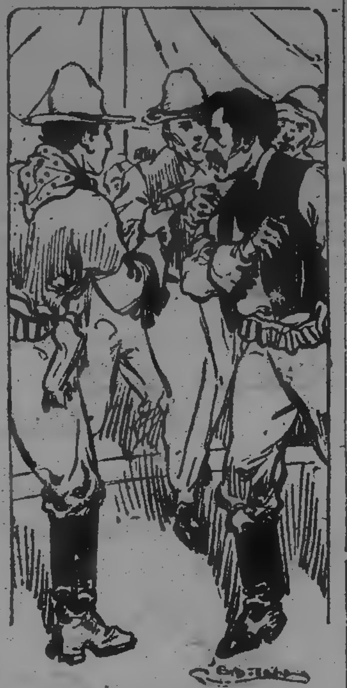
There was one number on the program that interested Tom especially. Edward and Blanche Withrow, a young man and his sister, gave a performance in rifle firing, the brother sending a bullet through an apple resting on the girl's head. Whether it was because such a feat was in Tom's line or that the girl was very pretty or that he feared for her life probably Tom himself could not have told. All he knew about it was that he was fascinated.

When the evening performance came on Tom was again in the audience. He waited patiently through the other stunts, and when the rifle shooting commenced it was evident that this alone interested him. When the young man was preparing to fire Tom watched him intently; when he was aiming Tom breathed hard, and after he had fired till it was evident the girl had escaped injury Tom held his breath.

The next day Tom proceeded on his journey in a stagecoach, the performers going in the same direction in their own wagons. The latter stopped at a town to give a performance, and Tom stopped too. From that time for a week he followed the company; then something happened.

At an afternoon's performance preparations were being made for the rifle feat, when Tom was blinded by an instantaneous flash. Happening to turn his eyes to a dark corner of a gallery, he saw a man, and above him on the ceiling, for a moment only, danced a spot of sunlight. Then the man put something in his pocket. Others in the audience seemed to have been troubled by the flash, but only Tom knew whence it came. He felt sure the man in the gallery had caught the sunlight on a hand mirror. But all, including Tom, were intent on the main feat of the show that was coming and thought nothing of the flash.

The girl having been placed against an upright board with her face to her brother, he took his position, aimed, as usual, with great care and fired. A dazed look came over his sister, and she clasped her left arm with the hand of the right. Unloosening her grasp for a moment, she looked at it. There was blood on it. Her brother threw down his rifle and ran toward her. Both were very pale.



IT LOOKED FOR AWHILE AS IF THE OFFENDER WOULD BE LYNCHED.

A great deal went through Tom Arnold's brain in a very few moments. His experience in gun practice told him that something had disconcerted the marksman. He saw the man he had noticed in the gallery get up and go out. Then it occurred to Tom that the marksman had faced the gallery in which this man had sat. The culmination of all these things was a feeling of certainty that the man had thrown a ray of sunlight into the performer's eyes just as he was about to pull the trigger.

The audience were intent on the girl, who had evidently received a wound in the arm, but Tom Arnold, full of a burning desire to punish the man who had committed the outrage, arose from his seat and hurried out to the door. There he met the man, moving rapidly, evidently desirous to get away.

"What's your hurry?" asked Tom.

"None of your business," said the other.

Tom went close up to him, thrust his hand into an outside coat pocket and took out a little round mirror with a metal back. The man paled. Tom ordered him to go back into the hall. The man demurred, but the cold muzzle of a revolver against his temple brought him to terms. Tom marched him down an aisle close to the stage, or, rather, the platform. The curtain had been rung down, and the audience were discussing the accident. Facing them, Tom said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, I am handy with the gun, and that you shall not be disappointed in seeing an exhibition of such skill I would be pleased, if you desire it, to give you one."

The shouts that greeted this offer left no doubt that it was very acceptable.

Tom took the man he had captured up a short flight of stairs on to the platform and behind the curtain. He found a commotion which he quieted and repeated his offer to the manager, who acquiesced. Tom spoke a few words of sympathy to the young performer and his sister, and the curtain was rung up, Tom and his captive standing in the wings.

"What are you going to do?" asked the man.

"Shoot an apple off your head. Proceed."

The man sidled on to the platform. Tom motioned to the manager to stand him against the board and put an apple on his head. Then Tom, drawing his own revolver, took aim at his victim. Several minutes elapsed before a shot was fired owing to the target's unsteadiness, for he seemed on the verge of collapse. Finally Tom told him that if he didn't brace up and stand still he was liable to get a bullet in his brain. This steadied him. Tom fired and pierced the apple, which the manager held up for the inspection of the audience.

Then Tom, taking a silver half dollar from his pocket, handed it to the manager, telling him to put it on the man's head. When it appeared that Tom was intending to shoot the coin some of the audience protested, while others shouted to him to proceed. Stepping to the footlights, he told them that the wounding of the girl was not an accident, but had been produced by this fellow throwing a ray of sunlight into her brother's eyes. Then Tom held up the mirror.

It looked for awhile as if the offender would be lynched. Indeed, several men started up to the stage for the purpose, but Tom, who had a revolver in his hand, drove them back and claimed the privilege of punishing the culprit himself.

At the next shot the half dollar was knocked into the air, fell and rolled over the floor.

Tom now asked the audience if he had not better turn the man over to the sheriff, since he was so limp that he was not fitted for a target. Some cried "Yes," some "No," while others cried "Shoot him down!" But Tom had some time before suggested to the manager to send for an officer to make the arrest, and the sheriff having arrived and learned the circumstances walked on to the stage and took the man away amid howls from the audience.

Tom now went back to the room used in common by the company to find that a doctor had dressed the girl's wound, and she and her brother were waiting for a conveyance to take her to a hotel. The brother thanked Tom for bringing his enemy to justice, and the wounded girl looked a gratitude that was more pleasing than words. Tom drove to the hotel with the two, and before they retired he was put into possession of the man's reasons for his inhuman action.

He was a rough character who had followed them, endeavoring to thrust his attentions on the girl. She had snubbed him, and her brother had told him that if he did not let his sister alone he would take measures to force him to do so.

Both Tom Arnold and the company of players were detained in the town till their depositions could be taken down, and they were required to return for the trial. The man was convicted and sentenced to state prison for a term of years. Meanwhile Tom had returned to civilization, but not fancying city life his father furnished him with the means to return to the west. The Withrows never gave another performance after the one in which the sister had been wounded, the brother having by it been deprived of his nerve for the feat and the sister not again daring to have him try it. Arnold kept in touch with them and when he established his ranch took Withrow into his employ. It was not long after this that Tom married Blanche and found it much easier to settle himself as a married man than as a single one.

WOMAN'S BEST MEDICINE

Mrs. Kelly Advises all Women to Take "Fruit-a-Tives"

HAGERSVILLE, ONT., AUG. 26th. 1913.

"I can highly recommend "Fruit-a-tives" because they did me an awful lot of good and I cannot speak too highly about them. About four years ago, I commenced taking "Fruit-a-tives" for a general break-down and they did me a world of good. We bought a good many dollar's worth, but it was money well spent because they did all that you claim for them. Their action is so pleasant, compared with other laxatives, that I found only pleasure, as well as health, in taking them. They seemed to me to be particularly suited to women, on account of their mild and gentle action, and I trust that some other women may start taking "Fruit-a-tives" after reading my letter, and if they do, I am satisfied the results will be the same as in my own case".

MRS. W. N. KELLY

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold by all dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c, or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

BLACK AND WHITE COSTUMES.

They Are Following Closely on the Craze For Gay Colors.

Magpie effects are charming, and those who are discriminating are already following the lead of Paris in choosing black and white for the costume. Illustrated here is a frock of black taffeta with a fine white organdie collar. With it was worn a hat of white hemp with velvet crown, against which the black grapes and mat white leaves are seen to advantage.

BLACK AND WHITE HAT.

The white collar is so persistent that it cannot be avoided. When the first dainty, starched collars of Swiss or organdie appeared last winter no one could have predicted how great their popularity would be. They have been devised in many different styles and evolved in many different materials, until now no one can count their number. One of the newer touches is the starched collar of pique, worn with street suits inside the coat collar. These are very smart. They are of the style called Normandy, as a rule.

Modern Compliment.

"Of course mothers should be examples for their daughters," said Mrs. Evergay.

"And they are," replied Colonel Courtly. "The girls of today will be entitled to congratulations if they succeed in being as good looking as their mothers."—Washington Star.

CHILDREN'S HAT BOXES.

Dainty and Attractive as the Millinery They Are Designed to Hold.

BABY'S BONNET BOX.

A box for the baby's bonnet or the little girl's best hat is a very charming affair if the hat happens to be purchased in one of the best shops. Those who specialize in children's headgear have handsome boxes adorned with hand painted flowers and tied with dainty ribbons. The interior of each box is daintily lined and furnished with a hat stand convenient for keeping the hat brim in shape. Such a box will last several seasons and prove a joy to the heart of the little girl who owns it. It will be a constant reminder of the care which she must take of her best headgear and will therefore teach her the much needed lessons of neatness.

Mean Brute.

"A writer in this magazine claims that long engagements are better than short ones," said Mrs. Gabb.

"That's right," agreed Mr. Gabb. "The longer you are engaged the shorter you are married."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Only a Portion.

"You women are too extravagant," he stormed. "Last year $800,000,000 was spent in this country for frills and furbelows."

"Well, I didn't spend all of it," was her defense.—Kansas City Journal.

THE BAG OF TRICKS

There's been a lot of fun made about the contents of a woman's bag—the powder-puff, fountain pen, vanity box, bunch of keys, purse, button hook and all the rest of the hundred and one articles it is said to contain; but a bright girl made the biggest kind of a hit with hers, on a recent rainy afternoon on the hotel verandah. She had a bunch of the pictures of our Summer Pastime in her bag and she produced them just at the right moment when all were more or less peevish from ennui. "These rebus pictures livened things up, I can tell you," said one of the party, "and the dinner bell rang before we knew it." How many men would have the sense to utilise their pockets in such a way and remember to produce the puzzle pictures at such a psychological moment?

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expenses by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

ONTARIO HAS CONTRIBUTED HEAVILY TO CONTINGENT

Western Canada Also Sends Large Quota to Participate in War—Montreal Man Offers Equipment For Regiment and Also His Yacht.

Amateur Wireless Must all be Dismantled at Once, Says Order.

OTTAWA, Aug 13.—The enrolling of volunteers, which ended last night, so far as the first contingent is concerned, is reported as being very heavy in the west and in central and western Ontario. One regiment in Winnipeg has 850 men and 30 officers.

The single cavalry squadron to go will be from Edmonton, but the artillery will be mostly from Eastern Canada. While the winter in the war zone is not nearly so severe as here the men will be clad in woollen khaki and not the lighter material like canvas which was used in South Africa.

There are plenty of Ross rifles of the latest make ready now to equip the first contingent, and by the time a second contingent would be ready there will be enough rifles on hand. The ammunition used is the same as that used throughout the British army, but it will all be supplied by Canada. The amount required will depend, of course, on the amount of real service the men will see.

The patriotic spirit of many of Canada's wealthy men is still being manifested every day in a remarkable manner. J. K. L. Ross, of Montreal, besides offering to equip the Fifth Royal Highlanders, has offered the naval service department the free use of his private yacht, Albocore, together with the crew. The Department has accepted the offer and the yacht is being used at Halifax in connection with the examination of vessels arriving and leaving. C. B. Gordon, of Montreal, has also offered the free use of his yacht, with the crew, for the rest of the season, if it is needed for any purpose. Other prominent men have sent word that they are anxious to assist in any way possible. Some cannot enlist for various reasons, but they are anxious to perform some useful service.

The Naval Service Department at last was able to speak yesterday afternoon to the Rainbow through the wireless station at the coast, and learned that the Canadian cruiser was all right, and the fears for her were unfounded. The Department is not revealing her location.

The work on the Niobe at the Halifax navy yard is being rushed night and day. The fitting of the machinery and the guns is being proceeded with as rapidly as the work can be properly done. A number of mechanics were taken from the I.C.R. shops at Moncton to help on the Niobe. Three hundred ex-Imperial navy men have been sent to man the cruiser. The names of others who have offered have been kept and more may be sent down later.

The Naval Department has sent out orders to the holders of all licenses for amateur wireless stations to dismantle completely their stations and take down all aerial wires at once. They are required to notify the Department as soon as they have complied with the order.

Since the recent regulations came into force, no amateur wireless stations have been allowable unless licensed so that the police will now step in wherever they see an amateur wireless station of any kind.

The Finance Department is in splendid position at the present time to handle and store the gold that will be brought here for the Bank of England, under the arrangement just announced. Large new vaults in the East Block had just been completed and brought into use, and having lately had to handle millions of dollars' worth of gold each year, the Department has a number of men who have expert knowledge of the handling of the yellow metal. The golden stream is already beginning to flow this way from the United States, and a very large amount will soon be stored here.

It being obviously essential to secure during the continuance of the war an uninterrupted supply of coal for domestic use, one of the first matters to receive attention by the Canadian military authorities upon the outbreak of hostilities was the protection of the coal supply of the Dominion. As a matter of fact, plans for the protection of all the principal coal depots on the Pacific as well as on the Atlantic had been prepared in peace time and the necessary guns and troops required in the carrying out of these plans assigned to their several positions.

The heaviest and most modern ordnance in the country has been posted in carefully selected positions at the various coaling stations and coal ports, and they are in charge of some of the best artillery men in the Canadian service.

Ample magazines of ammunition have been supplied and forces of infantry detailed to support the batteries, and altogether nothing has been left undone to guard the coal depots from attack.

Is Not a Spy.

HALIFAX, N.S., Aug. 13.—John L. Ferguson, an American citizen, arrested at Mahone Bay, N.S., suspected of espionage when plans of the harbor were found in his possession, was released later. It was shown that Ferguson, who is a student of Dartmouth College, was employed in making maps of Nova Scotia for the Government. Ferguson originally came from Spokane, Washington.

Montreal's Wary Mayor.

MONTREAL, Aug. 13.—"Are you going to have a Russian flag with the Union Jack and tri-color on the city hall buildings?" Mayor Martin was asked yesterday.

"Yes, so soon as they do something," answered the mayor.

MONK WILL LEAD THE "CRUSADERS"

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 13.—(Via London.)—Application for the restoration of his commission in the Russian army has been made by Father Bulatovitch, a former officer of the Guards, who is now superior of a monastery on Mount Athos, in the Peninsula of Salonika.

Father Bulatovitch purposes remaining in religious orders, and in imitation of the crusading monks at the time of the Tartar invasion of the 13th and 14th centuries, will head his troops in his uniform, covered with his cowl.

BELGIUM REFUSED TO YIELD.

Germany Has Again Tried to Secure Free Route to France.

LONDON, Aug. 13. — The Daily Mail says it is learned that on Monday afternoon the fruitless assault by the Germans on the Liege forts the German Government again approached Belgium, through Holland as intermediary, pointing out that Germany had no quarrel with Belgium and no desire to be at war with her, and asked that the Belgian Government reconsider its refusal to allow the German army to traverse Belgium in order to save useless expenditure in blood and treasure.

The Belgian Government, according to the newspaper, made reply, again refusing the German request.

Back From Cruise.

VANCOUVER, B.C., Aug. 13.—The two Canadian submarines have returned from their cruise along the coast and will be stationed in this port for its defence. The two vessels acted remarkably well on their cruise, which was a rather severe test of their capabilities, and their officers and men express themselves delighted. It is understood that the submarines did not catch a glimpse of the German cruisers, of which they were sent in search.

ESSEX IN BATTLE?

Wireless Message Indicates Sinking of German Cruiser.

ISLE OF SHOALS, N.H., Aug. 13.—It is asserted that foreign naval ships engaged in an encounter off here last night, during which one of the war vessels is reported to have been sunk. A wireless message received would seem to indicate that the defeat came to one of the German cruisers Stuttgart, Dresden or Karlsruhe, which have been reported to be reconnoitering in the waters all along the Atlantic coast for the past week. The message was sent in cypher, and read "Umbaga is sunk." This is believed to be the code word for one of the battleships that engaged in the conflict. The British cruisers Essex and Suffolk are off this coast.

The first shots were heard at 5.10 and lasted for twenty minutes. Again at 6.20 it was continued for seven minutes. But for the interval from the first firing of shots to the second there was no interruption in the firing. It was described as a steady fire, and seemed about 15 miles away.

Reports from defences along the coast developed the fact that mortars had been discharged at Fort McKinley at Portland, Maine, nearly forty miles away and in a northerly direction, but too far, it is believed, for the sound to carry to Portsmouth. The operator at the Portsmouth Navy Yard, who is authority for the receipt of the code despatch, reports that the wind is blowing off shore.

This accounts for the cannonading not having been heard at the Portsmouth Navy Yard, about eighteen miles southwest of here.

CHANGES TACTICS

Kaiser Too Humane to March Troops on Fort Guns

LONDON, Aug. 13.—The following despatch emanating from the Kaiser's press agency now operating at Amsterdam has been received here:

BERLIN, Aug. 12.—(Via Amsterdam.)—Kaiser Wilhelm himself interfered to prevent the carrying of the Liege forts by storm. When the news reached him that the German losses were heavy, consequent on the necessity of assaulting modern steel fortifications with infantry, he sent word to the front to change the tactics.

He directed that the assaults in force be stopped and that the lines of communication be immediately restored so that the heavy siege artillery, which was still in the rear, could be brought up. The Kaiser took this step through humane feeling.

SLEEPING IN CHURCH.

Men Do It Because They Are More Attentive Than Women.

A German professor who has been making a study of the problem declares that men fall asleep in church because they pay more attention to the sermon than do the women. Further, he declares the average woman does not begin to grasp the purport of the sermon; that she is far slower of understanding than man.

The man will watch the minister every minute, he will concentrate all his mind upon the preacher and what he is saying, he will watch his every gesture and every motion of his lips and listen to every word until finally he drops off to sleep simply because he has watched so steadily, gazed so intently, that he hynotized himself.

If the woman does not grasp the meaning of the sermon so readily, if her mentality is not quite so keen and quick, one would think she would fall asleep. But the fact remains that she has plenty to interest her. A man cannot look about the church and be interested in John Jones' cravat or William Smith's vest or Sam White's cuff buttons. He doesn't care anything about them, but a woman will sit quietly in church, she will hear what the minister is saying without giving much thought to it, but she will be interested in everything every other woman is wearing, and there is enough to keep her just moderately entertained and wide awake.—Chicago Tribune.

HOISTED BY OWN PETARD

Destroyer Was Blown up by German Mine

LONDON, Aug. 13.— The Copenhagan correspondent of The Daily Mail says:

"It is ascertained that the German torpedo-boat destroyer, which was reported to have been sunk by the explosion of one of her boilers off South Gedser on Aug. 5, really was destroyed by a mine laid by a German warship.

"The Danish and Swedish steamers, it is reported, ceased running as a result of information that the Germans had laid contact mines in the North Sea."

The Russian commander of the fortress of Sveaborg, Finland, has ordered all the inhabitants of that place and Helsingfors to leave, as a battle or a bombardment is believed to be imminent.

WOMEN ARE RUNNING CARS

Paris Almost Paralyzed by Lack of Men

PARIS, Aug. 13.—The withdrawal of thousands of men from every field of labor has seriously altered transportation and other conditions in the French capital. The underground railway is running only on certain lines and then only on a much reduced service.

The work of the conductors, ticket punchers and other employes, who have been called to the front, is being done by their wives and sons.

Some of the notorious "Syndicalistes," which have caused so much trouble in the past are holding enthusiastic meetings in the Bourse De Travail(labor exchange), and are organizing themselves to help in the public service in such directions as the establishment of soup kitchens and the providing of men to lend a hand wherever the labor supply is short.

Styles that turn women's heads also put kinks tinhe necks of the gentlemen.

GERMANS LOSE TO RUSSIANS

Berlin Staff Admits Heavy Losses on Eastern Frontier

LONDON, Aug. 13.—A Berlin despatch to The Daily Telegraph says the German staff admits heavy losses on the Russian frontier.

A despatch from St. Petersburg to The Paris Matin, says:

"The Austrians have suffered a check on the Dniester river. Four regiments of Austrian Infantry and eight regiments of Uhlans were routed. The approaching battle will probably be a decisive one."

Corriere d'Italia of Rome has a despatch from its Trieste correspondent that an overwhelming force of Cossacks was cut to pieces by two brigades of Austrian cavalry, which had crossed into Russia near Reitgeral.

France Takes Montreal Trucks.

MONTREAL, Aug. 13. — Ten La Haye motor trucks, built for service in the Montreal road department, which were ready for shipment from the factory, have been commandeered by the French Government for use in the army, according to information received yesterday at the City Hall. The trucks cost $4,200 each, but as they are not yet paid for, the city will not be the loser.

Old Books Sell High.

Selected parts of the famous library of Wilton House, at Salisbury, collected by Thomas, Earl of Pembroke (born 1656, died 1733), were sold at auction at Sotheby's in London recently. The highest price for a single book was $10,600 for an excessively rare block book, showing the apocalyptic visions of St. John, printed either at Nuremburg or at Bambern about 1460. Bernard Quaritch was the purchaser. It is a small folio, and only one other is known to exist. There are fifty leaves with designs and inscriptions in Gothic characters, printed by wood blocks.

A fine copy of the book of St. Albans, printed at St. Albans in 1486 with numerous wood cuts, brought $9,000. The Rylands library has the only other known copy of this famous sports book. A rare edition of "The Game and Plays of Chess Moralised," considered the second book produced by Caxton, and dated 1475, also brought $9,000 from Bernard Quaritch.

"Painting the Town Red."

"That expression, 'painting the town red,' is not," writes a correspondent, "the creation of some unknown cockney genius, as some would seem to infer. Its birth has been traced to 'The Divine Comedy.' Dante, led by Virgil, comes to the cavernous depths of the place swept by a mighty wind where those are confined who have been the prey of their passions. Two faces arise from the mist—the faces of Francesca and Paolo. 'Who are ye?' cries Dante in alarm, and Francesca replies sadly, 'We are those who have painted the world red with our sins.'"—London News.

At the Waist Line.

A favorite way of finishing the waist line when separate skirts and blouses are worn is with a ribbon or silk belt. Wide ribbon that can be laid in folds or taffeta or satin can be used. One way of giving a smart finish to these belts is to work buttonholes in two little pointed ends of ribbon in the front and button these over colored glass or bone buttons.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION MEET

At the Public Utilities Commissioners' meeting on Tuesday night, Superintendent Dobbin, of the Water Works Deparment, reported hat approximately six thousand and fifty dollars have been spent this year on new mains and services, and that work to the extent of twenty-nine hundred dollars had been approved and was about to be commenced.

The repot of Dr. McPherson, Medical Health Officer, giving the result of eight samples of water during the month of July was received.

A letter from Mr. William Kennedy, Jr., regarding a proposed visit here was also received.

Superintendent Dobbin also reported that he had advised the John MacDougal Company that it had been necessary to shut down the turbine pump on account of the heating of the bearings. He also reported that a representative of the makers was in the city at present and intended to make the necessary repairs.

Communications were read from Messrs. F. White and J. R. Bell regarding the payment of water rates. The communications were received, but no action was taken.

The matter of application for a water main on Romaine street was again considered. It was agreed that it would be impossible to proceed with the laying of such during the present season.

The various accounts were then read and passed. Chairman T. F. Matthews, W. H. Moore and Robert Hicks were present.

CHARGED WITH OBTAINING BOARD BY FALSE PRETENCES

The case at police court this morning of George Ballmer, a stranger, charged with obtaining board from Gordon Wright by misrepresentation was adjourned until tomorrow morning. Ballmer obtained board at the complainants under the claim that he expected a check from the C. P. R. for his months work. Investigation proved that he had never worked for the C. P. R. At the conclusion of the case this morning, Arthur Graham recognized Ballmer as the man who had obtained several weeks' board with the White House.

CARS LEFT TRACK.

When an axle on a box car on the G. T. R. "Moonlight" to Port Hope broke near Garden Hill on Tuesday night three cars went off the track. The auxiliary was called out and the track cleared in the course of a few hours.

RAILWAY FREIGHT TRAFFIC IS HEAVY

A scare was given some of he employes of the Grand Trunk a few days ago when seventy-five men were laid off. The reason given was that the Government ordered the transportation of grain from the elevators to cease. This order has been rescinded however and the G. T. R. yards have become so busy that last night the yard engine toiled away incessantly. Most of the work here is caused by the heavy business at the Quaker Oats.

Appointed General Superintendent Grand Trunk Pacific Hotels

Mr. Morley Donaldson, Vice-President and General Manager of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, announces the appointment of Mr. David B. Mulligan as General Superintendent of the Grand Trunk Pacific System of hotels, with headquarters at Winnipeg.

Mr. Mulligan is a Canadian by birth but has had experience in many of the greatest hotels on the continent, including the Waldorf Astoria and the Holland House, New York City and the old Palmer House, Chicago. He is especially well-known to the Canadian travelling public, having been in the hotel business in Ottawa for a considerable time. For the past three years he has been manager of the Hotel Breslin in New York.

The Grand Trunk Pacific Hotels include the Fort Garry at Winnipeg, the Macdonald at Edmonton and Qu'Apelle at Regina. The Fort Garry has already obtained an international reputation for the elegance of its appointments and the excellence of its service. The hotels in Edmonton and Regina are now approaching completion. The Railway also plans the erection of a big hotel at Prince Rupert and summer hotels in Jasper and Mt. Wilfrid Ireland Has Had Too Many

"I only want another chance," pleaded Wilfred Ireland at this morning's session of Police Court. Ireland was charged with imbiding of the cup that cheers.

"We won't keep such drunken fellows around," objected the Magistrate as he registered a fine of $5.75 or ten days in jail.

"It's Central Prison the next time," was the parting shot of the Magistrate.

SEWER PROBLEM BEFORE ONTARIO BOARD OF HEALTH

His Worship Mayor Buller, Alderman Johnston, Alderman Anderson, the City Solicitor, G. N. Gordon, and R. H. Parsons, the City Engineer, appeared on behalf of the city before the Provincial Board of Health. Mr. F. D. Kerr appeared for the township of North Monaghan.

The object of the hearing was to hear the objections of the township of North Monaghan to the extension of the outfall sewer along Park street through the township of North Monaghan to the river. This will connect with the new sewage disposal plant which the city intends to erect, under the directions of the Provincial Board of Health. The case was argued at considerable length by the solicitors for the township and city, and judgment was reserved.

When City Solicitor Gordon was seen today he said that he had doubt that the city would succeed on all points of its contention, and that Monaghan would not be entitled or allowed to connect any sewers with the new outfall sewer of the city, nor that there would be any reservation in the subsequent right of the township to connect to any of the city's sewers. Mr. Gordon further stated that the chairman of the board intimated that the city would likely be asked to pay the costs of the application.

If judgment is given as the city sollicitor hopes to get, it will be very satisfactory to the city, because the residents of the township of North Monaghan will not be entitled to connect with the sewer where it runs through the township, and will sooner or later require to be annexed to the city, if they desire to have the privileges and benefits of sewers, water works and electric lighting. Mr. Gordon said that he expected to have the order for possession of the plant next Saturday, as his application is returnable before the Judge on that date.

TAILOR SAID TO HAVE TWO WIVES

Former Tweed Man Lands in Trouble

St. Catharines, Aug. 13.—Louis Fairburn Roberts, a tailor, late of Tweed, Ont., faced a serious accusation in police court yesterday morning—bigamy. The charge was laid by his wife, a good-looking dressmaker. The allegation is that he went through a form of marriage with a woman whose name is unknown in Detroit, while already married to the complainant.

The Crown Attorney was not ready with the evidence in the case and it was adjourned for a week. This case was he culmination of a charge preferred against Roberts of non-support by his wife, who alleges that he had not contributed towards her keep since 190[illegible]. Evidence to this effect was heard and in view of the bigamy charge the magistrate's decision was not given.

LET'S MOVE TO LINDSAY.

A number of citizens have been laboring under the impression that meat prices have advanced in Lindsay. However, up to the present time the prices have not advanced, and Lindsay butchers maintain that they will put forth a strong effort to keep the prices the same as at present, and if possible reduce them rather and increase.—Lindsay Post.

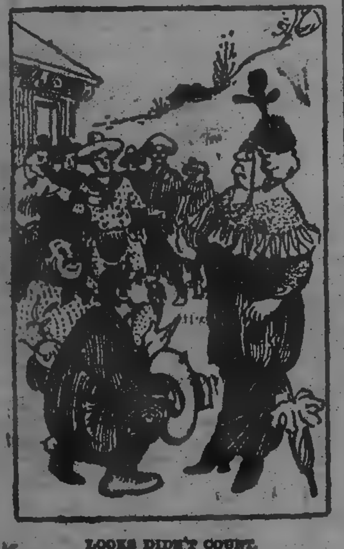
ARIZONA KICKLETS

The Editor Feels the Benefit of a Good Thrashing

By M. QUAD

THE postmaster of this town (who is ourself), the deputy U. S. marshal for this district (who is ourself), the mayor of Giveadam Gulch (who is ourself), the editor of the Arizona Kicker (same man) and the senator from this locality (once more) was out on the street the other day, wearing his hat on his ear and stepping high, when a riproaring man from the back townships came along and seemed to be in need of some fatherly advice. We had given him about a yard of it when he sailed into us. Though we had the idea that we could pulverize him in less than three minutes, he blacked both our eyes. When a man gets to that point where he imagines he runs this whole country and is the smartest man on the face of the earth it is a good thing for him and the rest of mankind for somebody to come along and take him down a few pegs. We own 100 acres of sandy soil just outside of town and twenty city lots inside of it, but we have let go the earth and shall assume a very humble demeanor until our eyes go out of mourning.

One day last week a woman fifty years old got off the train at Blue Hill station to look for her brother, and within two hours she had twenty offers of marriage. She was a woman with false hair, a lame leg and a cataract in one eye. But looks didn't count. At sundown she was married to a man worth $30,000. If there are any other single women headed this way let 'em stop off at this town. We guarantee at least fifty offers of marriage per day for a week, regardless of age or physical condition. As mayor of the town we agree to find husbands for 200 marriageable women as fast as they can descend from the stage, and every man proposing marriage will be worth at least $3,000.



LOOKS DIDN'T COUNT.

The Kicker will be represented in Washington next winter by Major Tinkham, who is well known to the citizens of Giveadam Gulch as a square man. During the past fifteen years the major has established and busted five weekly newspapers, run a magazine into the ground and showed his literary abilities in other directions. He has killed three men, wounded five others and broken in about 100 bucking bronchos. He has kept a poker room, run a blacksmith shop, acted as undertaker and made a success as an exhorter. We have sized him up pretty carefully and believe he will succeed in Washington. We pay him $7 per week. What he gets outside of that he will have to skirmish for. He takes with him a faro layout, a lasso, two guns, a box of poker chips, six decks of cards, a warclub and a pair of moccasins, and every one in town will wish him good luck when he starts.

Among coming social events are two high teas and one low coffee by Mrs. Colonel Stagg. She has already ordered twenty-four blue bordered napkins, and those who know her ambition to excel will rest assured that nothing will be left undone to make these events a royal flush.

Mrs. Captain Deland returned from St. Paul last week and during a brief call at the office informed us that she intended to make society howl during the winter months. She has planned a lasses candy pull, two spelling bees, a birthday party and a swell reception and some of her china cups and saucers she brought back with her cost a quarter apiece.

It is needless to add that we shall be in on the above named events as the acknowledged leader of the Four Hundred. Next week we will send our white shirt to the laundry and otherwise get ready for the opening of the social season.

THE IDEAL JURYMAN.

His Age and Qualifications From an English Point of View.

There is a general agreement in London legal circles that the best jurymen are to be found among men sixty years of age. The opinion is that jurymen at that age show better judgment than younger men.

A leading London barrister, asked for his opinion, said: "I prefer men about fifty years of age. A defending barrister in, say, a criminal case which has certain sentimental elements will always welcome a young jury. He knows he can touch their emotions far more easily than he can those of men over fifty. Sentiment is very rare at fifty, and a man is cold and purely logical. The average man who has reached the age of fifty looks upon things from a materialistic point of view, and his judgment is therefore unaffected by sentiment.

"Education, save in certain civil cases, is no great asset to a juryman. The bricklayer or the mechanic has just as much knowledge of human nature and a sense of justice as the professor, and in many respects barristers and judges prefer the unlettered juryman to the man of culture, though in the case of the latter he is less susceptible to an emotional plea. The man with sound common sense, learned not from books, but from everyday life, is not so easily led either by judge or counsel as many suppose, and if you add the wisdom of years you get the ideal juryman."—Exchange.

SUBMARINE CRAFT SURPASS WARSHIPS IN DEADLY POWER

A DIVE UNDER THE SURFACE.

The Terrifying Sensation and the Agony of Roaring Noises That Bewilder the Novice as the Vessel Goes Down Into the Depths of the Sea.

Wherever the British Government maintains a naval station you may happen to see a tall staff cutting through the water as though borne by some unseen hand beneath the surface. On the top of the staff is a slight bent hood pointed in the direction of motion. This is the eye of a submarine.

From the lens in the front of the hood a picture of the whole seascape is carried down by a succession of mirrors in the hollow staff until it is thrown on a prismatic lens at the bottom. Here the navigator of the submarine watches a moving picture of what is going on above the surface of the water and guides his boat accordingly.

We said boat advisedly, because it is really a vessel for the transportation of human beings at sea. It is, moreover, more than a floating craft, swimming on the surface like a swan. It is also a diver, darting down into the depths like a fish.

Let yourself be shut up in it and dive with it and it seems more like a tightly corked bottle. Your first sensation as the boat starts downward is that you have foolishly allowed yourself to be shut up in a death trap from which there is no escape. Your heart sinks faster than the boat.

And then something happens to make you forget everything but that this craft is a hellish contrivance for destroying your hearing. As the submarine dips under the surface and all outlet for sound is cut off by the sealing waters the rush of the sea around the steel walls becomes the rattle of spring hail on a tin roof. You remember that old and painful swimming hole experiment when you held your head under water and let a playmate strike two stones together. But here the assault on your eardrums is as though a million stones were striking together. A pebble falling through the waters on the steel hull sets the inside clanging like a Chinese temple full of jangling gongs. You must shout to be heard.

Through the roar from the vibrations of the steel shell come the insistent crackling hum of electric motors, the rattling fire of gasoline engines, the whir of machinery and the barking cough of exhausts. Your craft seems to be nothing but an elliptical mass of concentrated noise slinking through the sea. You fear that it will blow up from its own vibrations.

When you have in a measure controlled your protesting ears you look around and see a wonderful array of engines, machinery, deadly torpedoes lashed together in pairs and the steel tubes from which they are projected with compressed air all stowed away in the least possible space.

The double walls surrounding you are themselves huge ballast tanks, which can be filled with water through valves opening into the sea outside or can be emptied by the force of compressed air from within. As these tanks are filled the hull of the submarine sinks until only the periscope, the elevated eye of the vessel, shows above the water. When the water is forced out of them the boat becomes light and rises to the surface until its conning tower, superstructure and the upper part of the hull are exposed. Then the craft is navigated like any other boat.

When the vessel is submerged the navigator at the lower end of the periscope has a far more intricate task than the steering of an ordinary boat. The periscope, of course, brings him a limited view of the sea about. Then he must steer in two planes instead of one. His craft turns not only to the right or left, but also up or down.

To enable the vessel to stay under the water a longer time than usual the submarine carries a reserve supply of air. This emergency supply is compressed in a steel flask under the enormous pressure of 2,000 pounds to the square inch. Should the flask burst the explosion would wreck the boat. Perhaps a better idea of the tremendous concentration implied by this pressure may be gained from the statement that if this storage cylinder were punctured with a hole no bigger than a needle and if the tiny jet of escaping air were to strike a man it would pierce him through and through like a bullet and even drive a hole through an inch thick board behind him.

For ordinary purposes the air supply used under water is carried in ordinary cylinders at much smaller pressures. Unusual precautions have to be taken to prevent the contamination of the air supply by gases from the storage batteries and from the gasoline motors.

Concentration epitomizes the submarine. Its energies and utilities are packed in like the parts of a puzzle; and in the concentration of deadly power it surpasses any other weapon of man.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Passion is out of place in any discussion and more than ever in a right cause, for it befogs and bemuddles it.—Gogol.

GERMAN REGIMENTS GONE.

Two Were Destroyed at Muhlhausen By the French.

LONDON, Aug. 13—The strict censorship and consequent dearth of despatches from Southern Alsace seems to indicate that movements of the utmost importance are in progress there. A Basle despatch says the Germans are reported to have sustained terrific losses in the attempt to dislodge the French from their position back of Muhlhausen. The 112th and 169th Regiments are reported to have been annihilated and several prominent officers also fell.

A Berlin despatch declares that the German troops near Muhlhausen have captured ten French officers, five hundred men, four guns, ten wagons and many rifles.

According to the report German territory has been cleared of the French. It is also stated that at Lagarde the German troops made more than one thousand prisoners, about one-sixth of the two defeated French regiments.

The French Minister of War explains that the engagements on the Franco-German frontier are no more than outpost skirmishes.

"The best denial that can be given to the report that the French lost 20,000 men at Altkirch," says the Minister, "is that the total effective French troops did not reach that number."

It is further explained that the advance of the French infantry on Muhlhausen was to cut the centre of German communication, and it is added that this was successfully carried out.

The communication concludes:

"We are placing in upper Alsace a considerable number of troops."

Several hundred German prisoners passed through the Champigny station, near Paris, yesterday on their way to Poictiers, where they will be interned. The soldiers seemed quite unconcerned as to their fate. The German officers in the party, however, were sulky.

Tried To Wreck Train.

WINDSOR, Aug. 12.—Two different attempts to wreck fast passenger trains were made early yesterday morning. The Chicago-New York flyer was going through Jarvis at 50 miles per hour at four a.m., when it struck a pile of ties placed on the track. Passengers were badly shaken.

Two hours later, at daylight, and a short distance farther along the track, flyer No. 6 hit another obstruction placed on the track, but did not leave the rails.

Railway officials and the police notified the military authorities.

Montenegrins Dominate Scutari.

LONDON, Aug. 13. — The Times publishes a despatch from Paris, which says that the report that Montenegrins occupy Mount Tarabosch, dominating Scutari is confirmed.

Philippines yearly imports 20,000,000 pounds of salt.

THE MARKETS

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—Notwithstanding the efforts of the English, French and Dutch to cause a renewal of exports from the United States, the trade here remained sceptical today, either that the financial or military prerequisites were near at hand. Prices for wheat recovered only in part from a break of 2⅛c. Despite comparative firmness at the close, the market showed a net decline of ⅝c to 7-8c. Corn finished 1c to 1⅛c above last night; oats up 3-8c to ⅝c, and provisions at an advance of 5c to 20c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 12.—The wheat market opened 1⅛c to 1⅝c lower for October and December, oats ⅛c higher, and flax 2c lower to ⅝c higher. Trading was quiet and prices weakened in sympathy with the United States markets, the export difficulty influencing the market.

The range in prices at noon was 1⅝c to 1¾c lower for October and December wheat, ⅛c for oats and 3c to 3½c on flax.

There was a good demand for cash wheat from Ontario millers, but offerings were few. Winnipeg wheat opened 1⅛c to 1⅝c lower, and closed ⅝c to 1⅛c down.

Winnipeg cash wheat closed 1¼c to 1⅜c lower for contract grades. Cash barley was quoted 51c to 57c.

The weather over the west has greatly improved.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 12.—Owing to the light offerings of oats on spot and the very strong cable advices received, which in some cases bid as high as 56c per bushel here for them a much stronger feeling developed in the market today, and prices scored a further advance of 2c to 3c per bushel with a fair demand for car lots. There was no change in flour, but the undertone to the market is strong. Demand for rolled oats is good. Mill feed is active and strong. Baled hay has advanced $1 per ton. There was an increased demand for butter from the west and a larger volume of business was done. Cheese is strong but trade is rather quiet. Eggs strong and prices for strictly fresh advanced 3c per dozen. Dressed hogs 50c per 100 pounds higher. Lard ½c to 1c per pound up.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Aug. 12.—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market the receipts of live stock for the week ending Aug. 8 were 1450 cattle, 1425 sheep and lambs, 1150 hogs and 1200 calves. The supply on the market for sale this morning consisted of 1200 cattle, 1000 sheep and lambs, 1100 hogs and 700 calves.

The feeling was stronger and the indications are that prices will rule higher next week. The supply today was much larger than usual on Wednesday, but it consisted principally of common cows and bulls for canning purposes, for which there was an active demand from local packing concerns and for shipment to the Buffalo market. Sales of bulls were made at $5.25 to $5.50 and cows at $3.75 to $4.50 per 100 pounds. The trade in butchers' cattle was fairly active.

The tone of the market for hogs was strong. The supply was fair, with a keen demand from packers. An active trade was done, with sales of selected lots at $10 to $10.25 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars. A few small lots sold as high as $10.50, while some were delivered on contracts made early last week as low as $9.75.

The market for small meats was very active.

OXFORDS AGAIN WORN.

Low shoes have colored uppers in cafe au lait or biscuit cream. These are mounted well down into the vamp and run to the sole at the sides, a French trick that has dominated shoe manufacturers this season. Women like it because it undoubtedly makes the foot look smaller.

The oxford tie has come into fashion again and rivals the English pump, although it is not as neat looking on the foot because of the laces or ribbon used. There are women who adopt the oxford for country use and use leather thongs instead of ribbons, and, again, those who adopt patent leather ties for the afternoons have taken up varnished ribbon, which they arrange in a flat bow on the instep.

PETES' HOME-BREW HEAVER STOPS RUSHING SENATORS

Stan Creswell Gagged the Shagmen and Held Them to Two Runs

Thirteen may be unlucky. Nit. Peterboro won, 9-2. "Shag" and his meal eaters did their best against Creswell, but the native born was master. After it was common gossip, regarding the superiority, the Ottawa crew tried to burlesque the pastime. Creswell was termed the Blucher in The Review of yesterday. He came through in the batttle with flying banners. He curtailed the Ottawa wins and showed the fans the finest brand of hurling that has been shown during the series. All credit to Cressy. He was the master hand in almost every innings and you have to show the writer a better port-side prospect in the league at the present. He had loads of stuff, and he delivered it. Opposed to him was Roberts who was slammed rather freely, and when Cozy Dolan took his place he was not treated any too cordially. The Peterboro club fielded in grand style, while Ottawa showed signs of raggedness. Hits and bunches of them won the game, while Welsh grabbed a fly which was consigned for two bases. War is ——. The city editor instructs the writer to chop it because of the war dope. Anyway we won, and although I cannot tell the fans more about the great victory, it is sufficient to rise and remark, "There was nothing to it." Peterboro outplayed the invaders from the ground up, which means in the infield and outfield. Take a peep at the following casualties:

GOLF

Blounters Went to See Amateur Game

Several of the Petes, including Joe Byrne, hiked it over to Riverside Park last evening to witness the Mercantile League game between the Red Caps and the Drafting Room.

The war scare must have struck the paid hirelings of Curly Blount, as they "forgot" to add their sheckels to the league treasury.

"We thought we'd come over and see some of this amateur stuff," quoth Joseph.

"Well," added the Mercantile League wag, "the most of us are of the opinion that you would be rather 'fed up' on it after what you've been through this week."

DRAFTING ROOM WON FROM RED CAPS AFTER TWO WERE OUT IN FIFTH

Single, Error and a Double Scored Jackson With Winning Tally

The Mercantile League game last evening at Riverside Park between the Red Caps and Drafting Room ended in a win for the latter, but only after a hard five-inning fight which was not decided till two were down in the last frame. When the teams came to bat in the fifth the score stood 2-2. The Red Caps were retired in perfect order, as were the first two Draftsmen, but Jackson, the next man up, singled. Barrie got a life when Kendry dropped an easy pop fly, and then Stanton came through with a long double to centre, which drove in Jackson with the winning run.

Pat Gorman was on the mound for the winners and pitched very good ball. Rahmel also dished up a fair variety, but the errors by his teammates practically lost the game for him. There was very little brilliant fielding performed by either team excepting Swanson's catch of a foul fly back at the fence.

The win by the Drafting Room makes a tie standing for both C. G. E. teams, De Laval and Bankers.

PLENTY OF PRIZES FOR LABOR DAY

Chemong Indians Will Likely Figure in Ball Game

A committee of the Trades and Labor Council met last night to deal with the sports program for the celebration on Labor Day.

The Council has been greatly assisted by the liberality of merchants and others who have donated valuable prizes. These, besides two silver cups, include a set of dishes, valued at $25, two suits of clothes and a ring. There will be about 20 sporting events.

St. John's and All Saints' football teams have entered the competition for the Peck cup and it is probable that a silver cup donated by G. A. Gillespie will be offered as a prize in a baseball game to be staged by the Indian team from Chemong and a local Mercantile league nine. The Indians want to come to Peterboro for the holiday.

NOTABLE TIME RECORDS

The longest baseball game on record was played May 3, 1909, at Bloomington between the nine of that city and the crack players of Decatur. The score was tied until the twenty-sixth inning, when the game ended with a score of 2 to 1 in favor of Decatur. The time was not recorded.

The shortest game on record was played in the regulation nine innings on September 19, 1910, at Atlanta, whose crack nine were defeated by the Mobile team, score 2 to 1, in thirty-two minutes by the scorers' and reporters' watches.

As to who will win the Summer Pastime now running in this paper and in the least time is a matter that will soon be decided.

Alas for the man who will never be useful except to give the undertaker a job.

"There would be less trouble in the world if more people observed the neutrality rules."

COMMENT

As You Like It

HOPELESSLY BEATEN in yesterday's game 'Shag" allowed his men to make a comedy out of the battle. It was not the mere fact that he sent Dolan in to relieve Roberts, as the first baseman is a pretty fair hurler and it would have been foolish to use up a regular hurler with the game lost. Aside from that "Shag" sat down in center field, Dolan kidded Powers and Rogers cut up like a kid on first base. To add to the joke the Peterboro club ran bases in crazy style and were nipped. The work of Umpire Lush was shaky again.

CRESWELL SHOWED a bunch of stuff yesterday and looks as good as any hurler on the club. The win yesterday will give the youngster all sorts of confidence and he should be used regularly from now on, with fair success.

"SHAG" THINKS Kelly is the most promising young catcher in the league. No doubt Kelly shapes up like a future star. He has a good arm and when the rough edges are removed should be O.K. His great weakness is inability to hit curve balls.

THE UNDERTAKER will now sing "You may linger but I'll nail you at the finish."

THE PETES play in Toronto today, Friday and Saturday. The Beavers have been renovated again and Shultz and Burrill are now mentioned as those missing via the "can" route. Sullivan who broke fences and every other sort of breastwork in the International is playing in the outfield for the Beavers. The forfeited game will be played over again during the series.

The average train of thoughts carries no freight.

NORWOOD LOST TO HASTINGS

Winners go Into Semi-finals of Intermediate Section

Hastings, Ont., Aug. 13.—The Hastings lacrosse team defeated Norwood on their own grounds yesterday by a score of 8 to 6. The game was well contested at all stages, the half-time score was 4 to 3, three-quarter, 6 to 5. It was a good game from a spectators view as there was close checking and good combination on both sides. Dr. Sutton in goal for Norwood was a wonder and kept Norwood from having a big score run up on them. By winning to-day Hastings are champions of Intermediates, District No. 10, and go into semi-finals.

The Game of Cricket.

Cricket dates from the reign of Queen Elizabeth and had its origin in rounders and stool ball. Lord Chesterfield was the first man of weight to take it up seriously and Eton the first public school. In those days scores were notched upon tally sticks, the ball had heavy cross seams, the bats were curved, and the fielders stood almost in Indian file. The early laws of the game had their inception at the Star and Garter Inn, Pall Mall, and one of the few of these original laws which obtain to-day is that of the toss-up. The wickets were twenty-two inches high and the ball six inches in diameter. The first county match was when Kent played all England in 1711.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

THE PROCRASTINATOR.

We dilly dally all the day
 In idleness and song,
And then we wonder why it is
 We do not get along.
And when the day is at a close
 We idle half the night,
And still we cannot comprehend
 Why things don't work out right.

We sit serenely in the sun
 And whittle on a stick
Or tune our little light guitar
 And simple music pick,
And when the day comes to an end
 In looking at the score
Discover we are only where
 We were the day before.

We make resolves as to our rest
 We tumble in at night
That on the day that's just ahead
 We'll work with all our might,
And when the morrow comes along
 We quite forget to try,
And it resembles to a T
 The one that's just gone by.

And so we run our life along
 In planning to succeed,
And if we drag a living out
 In luck we are indeed,
And at the end we lay us down
 While eons roll away
And rest as sweetly as the ones
 Who labored every day.

A Setback.

"What's the matter?"

"He sprained his arm, and they are afraid he never can pitch again, so his folks are going to make a doctor or something of that sort out of him."

Wholesalers' New Price List Calls for General Increases

A further boost in staple grocery lines may be looked for as the wholesale dealers have arranged a price list which calls for general increases. The wholesale men refused to divulge the list, and as the retailers have not been asked to buy under the new prices, they cannot say just what proportions the increases will assume. One wholesale man stated that he looked for increases of from 25 to 35 per cent. There is also a chance of a scarcity of flour. Some millers seem to be over-sold and others of the trade are holding out in the hope of securing better prices in the foreign market. The most noticeable jump in prices is in rice, which has increased $1.00 per hundred during the last two days. Starch, syrups, matches, canned meats, corn, raisins, rolled oats, rice, castile soap, spices, flour, sugar and all imported pickles, etc., are the most affected by the trouble in Europe. All imported goods will continue to climb in price according to the manager of Kinnear's grocery firm.

VICTORS CANNOT MAKE WAR PAY

A passionate reader accuses The Mail and Empire of not having read Norman Angell's book, "The Great Illusion." This is a dastardly charge and must be refuted without delay. The ground for the accusation was a paragraph which appeared the day the powers of the world were at war, "Norman Angell, please write." It is difficult to prove that a thing is a joke; it is only possible to asseverate that it was jocularly intended. The author of the paragraph had no idea that Norman Angell would write, and having read his book and some of his lectures, was of the opinion that he had, as a matter of fact, written all that was necessary. Moreover, it is very plain that Norman Angell is not to be classified with those who cry peace, when there is no peace, and who preach disarmament in the face of danger. Indeed, he explicitely said that he would oppose the reduction of British naval expenditure by a single dollar i nthe circumstances. He did not predict that there would be no more wars. He did not say that war was never right. He under took to show that war could be profitable to the victor, that in human nature there was no ineradicable tendency to war, and that, as a matter of fact, the warlike races did not inherit the race.

One Profit of the War.

The present war, instead of proving the fallacy of Angell's doctrine, is likely to justify it. Mill once pointed out that a thing could not be true in theory and false in practice. If it proved false in practice, it must have been false in theory, too; and since Norman Angell proved that war could not be a benefit to the conqueror, in modern conditions, the present war will substantiate his argument. There was one point he did not discuss, and this was mentioned by The Mail and Empire a few days ago. He had nothing to say about the tremendous advantage to Europe and to mankind that would result from the cessation of the armament struggle. Roughly speaking, the people of Europe pay $10 per head, or $50 per family, every year for the luxury of maintaining their armies and navies. There can be no argument that it would be a gain to them if this tremendous tax were reduced or abolished. That the present war will reduce or abolish it is not to be doubted. Therefore the present war, if it results in the destruction of militarist bureaucracy will be a benefit in this respect.

No Profit for the Victor.

Angell's theory is that war is all loss, to the victor not less than to the vanquished. He admits that in the old days war was very profitable to those who won. If a warrior could go out and capture an extra farm, a couple of slaves, or a herd of cows, he was obviously that much the richer. If modern warfare would permit a conquering country to put the inhabitants of the conquered country to the sword and seize their possessions he would be wealthier than before. But this is no longer practicable. Wealth has become international. If Germany were to destroy England, for instance, she would be in the position of a commercial traveller destroying his patrons. If the United States were to destroy Canada she would be robbing herself of her best customer, of the customer that gave employment to hundreds of thousands of Americans. Canada being destroyed, who would support the conquerors?

Canada a Bill of Expense.

Norman Angell mentions the case of Canada, and supposes Canada to be conquered by Germany. He points out that if Germany were to "own" Canada she would have to "own" it in the same way that Britain does. While many people in the United States have an idea that England makes money out of Canada, the fact is that Canada has always been a bill of expense to England. Any trade favors that Britain enjoys in this country are the free-will offering of the Canadian people. The British Isles derive a revenue from this country. We pay the salary of the Governor-General, and that is all. Nor could Germany derive any revenue from this country. She would still have to pay the market price for every pound of beef and bushel of wheat grown here. If she did not, the produce would be shipped somewhere else. If this was prohibited, the people of Canada would naturally cease to produce beef and wheat except at a price that would pay them. You cannot force a man to sow wheat at the point of the bayonet.

The Indemnity Illusion.

He shows, too, that the nations of great military strength are not better off than their neighbors who have little strength. The people of Holland, Belgium, Switzerland and Denmark are in every way as prosperous as the citizens of France, Germany and Russia. The payment of a huge war indemnity is of little profit to the victor. The most striking illustration of this truth is found in the case of Germany and France. The greatest indemnity ever imposed was paid by France. "The direct cost of preparing for a war, and of guarding against a subsequent war of retribution must, from the nature of the case, exceed the value of the indemnity that can be exacted." Ten years after the Franco-Prussian War Germany was a great deal worse off financially than France, and was trying to borrow money off her victim. Bismarck's later life was clouded by the spectacle of what he regarded as an absurd miracle, the vanquished recovering more quickly than the victor.—Mail and Empire.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY IS AUTHORIZED

Husband Made Purchase and Made Deed in Wife's Name

Judge Huycke, today granted an application for the transfer of local property, from the name of the wife to her husband, William Arthur Irving. C. R. Widdifield acted for the husband while W. T. Willoughby, solicitor for the inspector of prisons and public charities was also present. The property was purchased with the husband's money and the deed made out in the name of his wife. Some time ago she was removed to an hospital for insane, following a nervous breakdown and it is for that reason that the application for a transfer of the property to the husband's name was made.

Under the law, the wife could not make a deed owing to her mental condition and the application was the only course open. The solicitor for the inspector of prisons and public charities will have authority to make the deed as a result of the judge's order.

AFTER SEVERE CHECKS ENEMY IS NOW ATTACKING LOUVAIN

Huge Army With a Battle Front of Three Hundred Miles is Engaged at Almost Every Point---German Advance Will be Given Decisive Battle Near Namur---Four Battles Wednesday.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 14.—Brisk fighting continues along the great line of battle, which extends for fully three hundred miles from forty miles northwest of Liege, Belgium, as far as Belfort, France, as the German army, estimated at no less than a million men, presses forward through Belgium and along the border line between Belgium and France.

Following engagements at Hasselt, Haelen and Diest and Eghezee, to the south of Louvain, the German army, it is reported, reached Louvain and opened an attack on that city, which is about sixteen miles from Brussels and in line with Namur, the second line of the Belgian defence.

The fact that fighting is going on at Louvain seems to indicate that after the battle of Diest the Germans must have been reinforced and pushed through to within striking distance of Brussels. It is unlikely that the allies will defend the Belgian capital, which is unfortified.

The two most important battles have been fought at Eghezee, and at Haelen, in both of which the Belgians are reported to have been victorious. In the fighting at Eghezee, toward which 80,000 Germans are advancing from the north in the direction of Namur, according to the Germans' original plan, the Belgians rushed out to meet the oncoming Teuton force, assuming the offensive, much to the surprise and apparent consternation of the Kaiser's hosts, who expected to meet only defensive resistance, and that considerably farther along than where they actually met the Belgians.

After a series of furious exchanges, during which the German front is reported to have become demoralized and to have been forced backward for a considerable space, the Belgian vanguard pressed the fighting so hotly that the Germans thus engaged fell back with severe losses, leaving in the hands of the cheering Belgians several of the latest types of improved machine guns mounted on motor trucks.

Again, in the environs of Diest and Hasselt, the Belgians assumed the offensive after an all-day struggle Wednesday, wherein they smashed a German division at Haelon, pushing it back upon Hasselt and St. Trond. In this engagement, which will be known as the battle of Haelen, the Germans are reported to have lost 2,500 men, besides a considerable quantity of field equipment.

Immediately after driving back the Germans, Belgian reinforcements were rushed up in case of the Germans returning to the advance. However, the Belgians' timely action has had the effect, it is said, of halting the advance of the extreme right wing of the German army of the Meuse.

A report is current here that German troops in Belgian Luxemburg are starving and fainting by the wayside, which appears to bear out an earlier report that the German commissariat had proved a failure.

It is believed that if the German advance, which has been checked by the Belgians at Haelen, Diest and Eghezee should succeed in pushing on northward as far as Namur, the strong fortress at the junction of the Rivers Sambre and Meuse, the German arms would find out quickly that they had met another stumbling block like the fortresses about Liege. The defences of Namur are considered by the Belgians as well nigh impregnable—at least, sufficient to bar the German advance for as long a space as the forts at Liege have held out.

To reach northern France, as had been planned, the German army of the Meuse must drive back the allied French and Belgian, armies of some 350,000, which now forms a bristling barrier on a line from the marvelously well-fortiged city of Antwerp to Namur, and on a battle front reaching from the River Dyle to the River Meuse.

Shells were still bursting in the vicinity of Diest, in the north of the Province of Brabant, at 7.30 p. m. Wednesday, following the battle of Haelen. Half an hour earlier the country between Haelen, Diest and Zeelhem had been cleared of German troops, save the dead and wounded, many of whom lay within the firing zone. The bodies of over 200 German soldiers were found lying in a space 50 yards square.

A message confirming the victory of the Belgian troops says that the Germans lost three-fifths of their soldiers, these being killed or wounded, while the Belgian loss was comparatively small.

A church, a brewery and some houses in Haelen and two bridges over the River Demer were destroyed by the Belgians, who also gathered a large quantity of booty, placing it in front of the town hall in Diest. Many horses also were taken. The German column is said to have been 5,000 strong.

WOMEN OF PETERBORO WILL RAISE A WAR FUND BY OPEN SUBSCRIPTION AND CLOSED COLLECTION

The Decision of Enthusiastic Meeting of the Daughters of the Empire—Collection Will be Taken in Boxes Placed on Flag Draped Automobiles—Apportionment For Hospital Ship and Local Purposes in the Hands of Committee.

In response to the call of the Daughters of the Empire, a large and representative gathering of the women of Peterborough met Thursday afternoon in the recreation room of the Armouries to consider ways and means by which money could be raised for the Hospital Ship offered by the women of Canada to the British Admiralty. The meeting was presided over by the Regent of the Peterborough Chapter, Mrs. E. B. Clegg. After the singing of the National Anthem, which to all present had a new significance, Mrs. Clegg addressed the meeting on the purpose for which it was called and referred to the fact that Peterboro people were face to face with a more serious problem than many places in the Dominion. They were sending men, many of whose families would probably require assistance before the war was over, possibly from the beginning of it. The necessary comforts for those going to the front would cost money and time and work and the hard times which always result from war would still further complicate the problem. A discussion then followed on the best means to be adopted for raising a fund to meet all these demands. The greatest enthusiasm prevailed and eloquent expressions of patriotism and of willingness to sacrifice for others in this national crisis met with a hearty response from all present leaving no doubt that the Peterboro women would not fail to do their share and more than their share of all the duties facing them. It was decided finally upon a motion by Mrs. Travers, seconded by Miss Peck, that there be a "war fund raised by the women of Peterboro the means employed to be an open subscription list and also a closed collection, the latter to be collected in boxes placed in flag-draped motors all over the city in charge of women of a committee to be appointed at this meeting. This open collection is to be preceded by a procession of flag-draped motors through the city.

Upon a motion by Mrs. A. Stevenson, seconded by Mrs. Walter Roger, is was decided that this fund so raised be a general war fund and that the apportionment for hospital ship and local purposes be left in the hands of the committee.

P. McLean, Mrs. Dr. Young, Mrs. Devey, Mrs. (Canon) Davidson, Mrs. Cressman, Miss Montgomery, Mrs. John. Mrs. (Dr.) Sutton, Secretary Miss A. Weir.

It was then decided to have the collections on Tuesday, August 18th. Mrs. Hazen Ritchie was appointed treasurer.

A lettet was read from Major Bennett enclosing a generous contribution to the fund. Several other unsolicited contributions were an evidence of the fact that Canadians feel it a privilege and not a burden to help in this the greatest crisis the British Empire has known since the Napoleonic wars.

Offers of automobiles for Tuesday are already coming to the convener of the committee, Mrs. Travers, and to the Secretary. A meeting of the committee is called for this evening (Friday) at 7.30 in the Recreation Room of the armouries. Every member is expected to be there without further notice.

At Orillia.—The canvass was made Tuesday. 60 ladies took part. They had the assistance of 30 automobiles, and covered not only the whole town but much of the surrounding country, going out as far as Jarratt, Warminster and Uhthoff. They completed the work by 6 p. m., and by that hour $1,400 had been reported. Subscriptions received yesterday raised the total to over $1,500. The response was most cordial and generous. Everybody contributed, even to the children. The subscriptions ranged from two cents to $25. One little English boy brought in ten cents yesterday, and expressed the wish that he might go to the war. Out at the Hospital for the Feeble Minded, a number of the employes and workmen contributed a day's pay, and over $200 in all was raised there. If other places do as well as Orillia, there will be no difficulty about raising the sum required for the hospital ship.

At Omemee, while the ladies have not organized a chapter, they are securing subscriptions, and in Port Hope, a chapter has just been o- realize quite a large sum. ganized and the members hope to

ABUNDANCE OF HORSES

Government is Buying Five Thousand for Contingent

ANIMALS CHEAPER

Number of Volunteers Greater Than Required Says Col Hughes

OTTAWA, Aug. 14—The buying of the 5,000 horses required for the first Canadian contingent began yesterday. It is stated that there are plenty of horses in the country and the price is about $75 lower than last year. The Government has been offered horses in lots of one thousand, but it has decided not to purchase them in that way, but to buy in small lots, mostly around the centres where they are required by the different artillery brigades. It is announced that if any attempt is made to hold up the Government upon the price of the horses in any district it will simply leave the district and buy elsewhere, as it can easily do.

Col. Sam Hughes stated last night that the enrollment lists had come in from a number of sections and, in every instance the number of volunteers was greater than required. The totals are being telegraphed in to-day from the 200 commanding officers throughout the country, and the whole number of men who were enlisted will be announced to-day. The Minister will then decide how many men are to go from each district and the mobilization will begin. The officers for each regiment will be announced within a day or two. Where regiments are going as units the present officers will be retained as far as possible. Col. Hughes expressed satisfaction at the number of men who have enlisted. Everything has been entirely voluntary, he says—the enlistment, vaccination and everything else. In fact, he did not try to arouse the country over the enrolling of volunteers, but deliberately held it in check.

There is still speculation over the appointment of the commanding officer for the contingent, in view of the likelihood of Col. Hughes' services being required in Canada in connection with future mobilizations, and the defence plans for the Dominion. Gen. Lessard of Toronto, commanding officer of the second divisional area, is still mentioned.

The work at the mobilization camp at Valcartier is proceeding apace. Two miles of trenches have been dug and are ready for the targets.

BRITISH NAVY CAN PROTECT SHIPPING PROCLAMATION SAYS

Declaration of War on Austria Draws all Eyes to the Mediterranean, Where a Battle Between the Austrian and Franco-British Fleets is Imminent---Austrian Vessels Ready off Pola.

LONDON, Aug. 14. — When at midnight last night Great Britain officially announced that she had declared war on Austria-Hungary, she asserted her supremacy on the sea by urging all nations trading with the British Isles and colonies to despatch their ships with the confidence that His Majesty's navy would afford them full protection.

At the same time the warning was issued by the British Admiralty that the North Sea had been mined by the Germans in order to cripple British warships and destroy merchantmen flying a neutral flag. No guarantee can as yet be given with regard to the safety of the North Sea passage, although some steamships, as already reported, are taking the risk.

By her declaration of war on Austria-Hungary, Great Britain has drawn attention to the Mediterranean, where the strength of the fleet is not known, owing to rigid censorship. It is known, however, that France has assembled almost her entire navy in the Mediterranean Sea, hence there need be no anxiety with regard to the safety of either British vessels there or those flying a neutral flag along the trade routes.

British steamships, then, have clear seas through the Mediterranean to India, Australia, and to Chinese and Japanese ports, and if the recent report is accurate, that Turkey has purchased the ubiquitous German cruisers, Goeben and Breslau, about whose location on the waters new rumors have come almost daily, then there is all the more reason to be undisturbed.

Word is hourly expected here of a great naval battle between the Austrian and Anglo-French fleets for the mastery of the Mediterranean Sea.

The Austrian fleet, stripped for action, is reported to be awaiting the coming of the hostile fleet off Pola, about fifteen miles from the mouth of the Adriatic. The Anglo-French craft were early reported to be off the entrance of the Adriatic, and it is believed that the Austrians cannot escape giving battle.

The fortification of Pola, the Austrian naval base, are not believed sufficiently strong to withstand a heavy bombardment, and in the opinion of experts its guns will offer little protection to the Austrian warships.

The Bank of England gained £886,000 gold yesterday, and the weekly statement shows a gain of £5,392,000 for the week. Despite the increase of liabilities, said to be enormous, the ratio of the reserve has risen to 17 per cent, as against 14 5-8 last week.

Steamers with passengers and provisions continue to arrive from Scandinavian North Sea ports. Coastwise traffic is being steadily resumed and trawlers are going about their legitimate business. Two cargoes of wheat and provision steamers from Rotterdam and Copenhagen arrived yesterday. Among the passengers from Copenhagen was Jules Cambon, the former French Ambassador at Berlin.

The British Government, having successfully coped with the attempt to raise the prices of food, announces that certain drugs, the supply of which is limited, and the price of which has been raised in some instances 50 per cent. by the wholesalers, will be taken possession of if exorbitant prices are charged.

The Hong Kong correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Co. says it is rumored there that the British fleet in the Far East has succeeded in cornering the German Far Eastern squadron.

Weight is lent the report, the correspondent adds, by the fact that shipping along the coast is resuming its normal basis.

SEVEN SUNKEN GERMAN SHIPS WERE PASSED

According to Captain of Danish Steamer

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 14. — A despatch to the Chronicle from West Hartlepool says the captain of the Danish steamer Hulda Maersk declares he passed seven sunken German ships fifteen miles off Spurn head at the north east entrance of the Humber. Only the masts were visible above the water but the captain believes they were German men of war.

TWO WARSHIPS WITH WOUNDED AT HONG KONG

The Boats Show Evidence of Having Had an Engagement

Shanghai, Aug. 14.—Two warships each having four funnels badly damaged, and carrying many wounded entered the harbor at Hong Kong yesterday. Their identity has not been learned here but the vessels are believed to be either the British armored cruisers Minotaur and Hampshire or the French armored cruisers Dupleix and Montcalm.

They are reported to have had an engagements with German cruisers of the same type, Scharnhorst and Gneisenau.

BUGLER HERO AGAIN GOING TO THE FRONT

Two pictures of Mr. Douglas F. Williams, of Toronto, who was brigaded with the Gordon Highlanders at the battle of Paardeberg in the South African War. Although only 13 years of age at the time he sounded the charge that started 20,000 British troops on the final rush. He has enrolled again for active service.

Port Hope Viaduct Is Being Guarded

Port Hope, Aug. 14. — Two men from Toronto have been sworn in by the C. N. R. and have been placed on guard at the viaduct just west of the local station. They have pitched their tent at the east end of the bridge and will work twelve-hour shifts. They have an abundant supply of ammunition and any person found tampering with the bridge will be severely dealt with.

Just as an engine of the Canadian Northern railway passed over the trestle bridge behind the Industrial Farm near Langstaff at 5.15 Wednesday morning, the six loaded freight cars in the rear left the tracks and bidge and cars collapsed into the valley below. Instantly a flash burst from the wreckage and soon the whole mass was in flames. In half an hour all that remained of the train and the bridge were a few wheels and trucks and some twisted rails and beams from the bridge. The engine and tender remained on the top of the hill. Had the coupling between the tender and the first car not broken, the engine would have been dragged down into the flames.

AN UPRISING IN EQUADOR

Guayaquil, Ecuador, Aug. 13. — Troops have been sent into the coast province of Manabi to quell an uprising. It is believed the rebellion will be speedily subdued. Congress met at Quito, and selected Alfredo Baquerizo Moreno for president.

It is in Ecuador that Herbert Johnston, of this city, is now engaged in missionary work.

VOLUNTEERS DOWN TO THE REAL WORK

No Definite Date for the Departure of the Local Contingent

MORE RECRUITS

The 109 volunteers enlisted for the infantry in this city were put through a strenuous drill at the armouries this morning. For two hours the men were instructed in manceuvres of modern warfare and all were pretty well tired when the drill was over. This afternoon the men were marched to the rifle ranges where the afternoon was spent in target practice. Nothing definite as to the date the soldiers will leave has arrived.

More recruits were sworn in last night.

It is likely a committee will be appointed to deal with the question of aiding any families who might suffer by the bread winner's absence.

Local Athlete Fractures Arm

Orville Kennealley, the well-known baseball and hockey player, had the misfortune or fracturing his left arm between the elbow and wrist this morning. Mr. Kennealley is employed by the De Laval Co. placing guards on machines and met with the accident while slipping a belt on a pulley. The fracture is not exceedingly serious but will keep him out of baseball for the rest of the season.

He was manager of the De Laval baseball team and his absence lessens their chance to cop the flag.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Brussels, Aug. 14. — 13.5 p.m. — It is officially announced that no movements of importance have taken place since Wednesday's serious engagement between the German and Belgian troops. The situation of the Belgian troops remains favorable.

THE WAR EXTRA MANIA.

THE TORONTO NEWS got out a second extra to say that two huge armies may already be in battle. We suppose the logic of the News proceeds thus wise: Third extra—Three large armies may be fighting. Fourth extra: German army thought to be routed. Fifth extra: 50,000 may be killed in big battle. Sixth extra: Niobe attacks German Fleet. Seventh extra: German Fleet sunk. Eighth extra: Kaiser crucified. And so on ad infinitum, as long as the crowd buys 'em. Next day — all yesterday's reports denied.

THE SUBTLE GLOBE.

THE GLOBE of Wednesday, August 4th, has a leading article intended to demonstrate the wisdom of the Laurier separatist policy. Apart from the doubtful expediency of discussing such a subject at present, and of trying to make capital for the Liberal party while professing its willingness to drop all such references, the Globe's argument is virtually that Canada should make no promises to other parts of the Empire. The Globe falls back on the "rank and rotten" assertion that cooperation pre-arranged and understood means dependence. Surely the present emergency amply demonstrates the folly, if not worse, of the Laurier policy. The Globe is championing it at the very moment when it is set at naught by stern necessity.

Why should the Globe change its position? At first it seemed to recognize the necessity of dropping party tactics in expressing the public sentiment on Empire affairs during the danger of a great war. As the leading Liberal paper in Ontario, it was to be commended for its patriotic position, but for what appear to be small causes the good example is being transformed into something reprehensible. To back down now discredits the sincerity of its former position. Why is it that the leading Liberal paper in Ontario must be made the shuttlecock of party tricksters? If Liberalism in Canada is to be worthy of party, if it is to be better than a code for rebels, its leading exponent should be either freed of barnacles or taught consistency.

THE GLOBE AND THE EMERGENCY.

THE TORONTO GLOBE, which went out of its way the other day to convince its readers that the emergency now confronting Canada and the Empire is not the emergency that was foreseen by Sir Robert Borden, is in a sorry light in view of Sir Robert's speeches. Whatever difference of opinion there may exist on the question of Canadian naval aid, the fact that an emergency did and does exist cannot be reasonably denied. Denial cannot alter the condition of things now, which is that the Empire is at war and Canada has not done very much in preparing for it. Now, all admit, the Globe included, the seriousness of the situation, and Canada is doing what she can and what might have been well under way a year ago.

Note what the Premier said:

> Sir Robert Said in Parliament on March 29th, 1909: "The day might come—I do not know that it will come — the day might come—it might come tomorrow, it might come next week, it might come next month, when the only thing we could do in the absence of preparation in this country would be to make some kind of contribution."
>
> Sir Robert Said on the 12th January, 1910: "The speediest organization would not make our Canadian naval service effective in less than ten years. Probably 15 or 20 years would be required; and the crisis, if a crisis is to be apprehended, will come within five and probably within three years."
>
> Sir Robert Said on the 5th December, 1912: "This Empire will never undertake any war of aggression, and all the influences of Canada will assuredly be arrayed against any such course; but we know that war has come many times within the past fifty years without warning, like a thunderbolt from a clear sky, and thereby the power, the influence and the destiny of more than one nation have been profoundly affected. A naval war especially may come with startling suddenness, for these tremendous engines of war are always ready and prepared for battle.
>
> "But today, while the clouds are heavy and we hear the booming of the distant thunder, and see the lightning flashes above the horizon, we cannot and we will not wait and deliberate until any impending storm shall have burst upon us with fury and with disaster. Almost unaided, the Motherland, not for herself alone, but for us as well, is sustaining the burden of vital Imperial duty, and confronting an over-mastering necessity of national existence. Bringing the best assistance that we may in the urgency of the moment, we come thus to her aid, in token of our determination to protect and ensure the safety and integrity of this Empire, and of our resolve to defend on sea, as well as on land, our flag, our honour and our heritage."

OUR ANNUAL FIRE LOSS.

CANADA as a young nation has many things to be proud of, many things to regret, and some things which should be a disgrace to any country. One of the latter consists of our enormous fire waste. In the year 1913, Canada suffered a financial loss of approximately twenty-six million dollars by fire, and this amount represents only the loss by the destruction of buildings. To this should be added the actual money loss caused by interference with the continuity of business, the losses to public utility companies, in wires, meters, telephones, etc., and also that of the municipal corporation in requiring the use of expensive fire fighting equipment.

How long shall we allow this disgrace to continue? When a forest fire consumes a large tract of our best merchantable timber we sit back and expect nature to replace the loss. When we, through utter carelessness, burn up that which the energy of man has produced, we simply ask the question: "Was it insured?" We forget that we are, indirectly, paying the insurance. The company which has carried the policy occupies the position of the middleman, collects the premiums and pays the losses, collecting in addition whatever amount is required to cover the expenses of conducting the business and paying dividends.

The man who through carelessness takes the life of another is guilty of manslaughter. The man who through carelessness destroys by fire either his own property or that of another is equally guilty of incendiarism, if not in the eyes of the law as at present construed, at least in the opinion of his fellowmen.

When governments can be induced to appoint fire marshals, with power, after investigation, to place the responsibility where it properly belongs, and when punishment is meted out accordingly, then may we look for an improvement in our conditions. Our fire losses for the past three years have been as follows:

	Fire Losses	Deaths due to fires
1911	$21,459,575	317
1912	22,900,712	203
1913	26,346,618	236

With an increase of approximately three and a half million dollars in fire losses in 1913 over 1912, what may we expect in the year 1914? Will it be a still further increase, or will Canadians, by the exercise of individual care, show an appreciable reduction in this heavy drain upon their resources?

Montreal Star.

It has been too plain all through this crisis that Bismarck is dead!

And no German statesman seems to have inherited his sagacity and adroit diplomacy.

The key-stone of his policy was friendship with Russia. That has been frankly abandoned for years. In fact, this new Germany has made the mistake of challenging the two unbeatable European nations at the same time—Russia and Britain.

In nearly every case prior to the present merely the pacific temper of Great Britain and the earnest efforts of British diplomacy for peace averted war.

"Oh, William Henry," said the boss, "I find you are a total loss, you fill me with disgust; your mind is never on your job and when you work you fairly sob with sorrow, that you must. You're thinking of the baseball game, when you should hump your lazy frame at cleaning up the floor; your thoughts are all of having fun, you do not try to earn your mon—I'll need you here no more." I would not give much for the boy who does not find a mighty joy in corking games of ball; but in the weary world of prunes we must improve some afternoons — amusement isn't all. Go to the game, O youthful fan, go there whene'er you rightly can, and not neglect your task, and when you're there, be unafraid, yell loud and long, drink lemonade, eat peanuts by the cask. But when the jamboree is o'er, and you are back at work once more, forget the fun you had; with other willing workers join, and try to earn the boss's coin, the kopeck, and the scad. It's bad to mix your work and play; be joyful on your holiday, and earnest when you toil, and in the long glad years to come your luck will not be out of plumb, the pot will always boil.

REED'S WITTY THRUST.

It Silenced For the Time the "Great Objector," Holman.

There are many stories of the caustic wit of Thomas B. Reed, the famous speaker of the house of representatives. One of his most amusing thrusts was delivered at William S. Holman, a member of congress from Indiana. It was perhaps the keenest witticism ever uttered in debate on the floor of the house.

Holman was a constant objector to the expenditure of money by congress and had honestly earned the title of "Watchdog of the Treasury." One day, when the committee was perfunctorily putting through a number of bills for the erection of government buildings in various cities, Holman was constantly on his feet, objecting to their consideration. But when Indiana was reached and the committee began to propose appropriations for buildings in the towns of that state Holman's objections came with much less spirit and finally ceased altogether. When at length a bill was offered that carried a generous appropriation for a building in Holman's own town, he rose and expressed hearty approval. Hardly had he taken his seat when Mr. Reed was on his feet. "Mr. Speaker!" he shouted; and then, in gently sentimental tones, he recited Byron's familiar lines:

'Tis sweet to hear the watchdog's honest bark
Bay deep mouthed welcome as we draw near home!

And the "great objector" forgot to object any more that day!—Youth's Companion.

New Buildings For O. A. C.

There will be two new buildings erected at the Ontario Agricultural College, or at least they will be started this year. First is the new building for the physics department. The new structure will have a frontage of 103 feet and is to be three storeys high. The cost is estimated at about $50,000, which will come from the Federal Government's grant to Ontario agriculture. Plans are now nearly ready and tenders will be called immediately.

Another new building to be started at once is the maids' dormitory. It will be 100 feet long. The cost will be about $20,000, which was appropriated by the Ontario Legislature at its last session.

Humor and Philosophy

NOT FOR HIM.

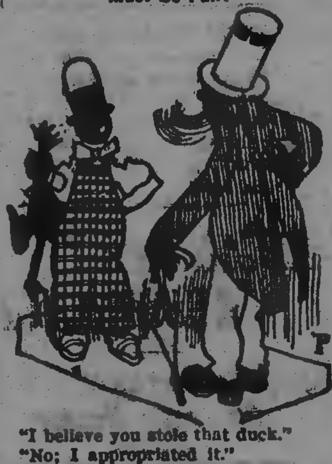
A man may live a quiet life,
Just sort of sit around and smoke,
And have perhaps a friend or two
With whom to crack a seasoned joke,
Push care and trouble to the rear
And idly while the time away,
Just like a true philosopher.
But can he if he's married, say?

He may be filled with the desire
For sweet simplicity and such,
A disposition just to glide
And not to worry overmuch,
To work a little for a change
And at the proper time to quit,
But if he has a bustling wife,
Pray, will she ever stand for it?

With ten or twenty little ones
To call him "Father" and to climb
All over him and pull his hair
How can he have a quiet time?
And if he rises to escape
And from their clutches does indeed
The burden still is on his mind
Of all the little mouths to feed.

A man may have a pleasant life,
But if he has a wife on hand,
With several youngsters on the side,
It is not of the quiet brand.
The scheme he has for peace and ease,
To vanish like the mist begins
The moment that the doctor says:
"Cheer up, old Spoopendyke! It's twins!"

Must Be Fair.



"I believe you stole that duck."

"No; I appropriated it."

"Do you think that was right?"

"It was the other fellow's game. Isn't it legitimate to beat it?"

Useless.

"I think, daughter, that you would better turn that young man down."

"It would not do any good, dad."

"Why not, I'd like to know?"

"Haven't you heard the general opinion of him?"

"No. What is it?"

"He is a rising young man."

That Early.

"I wonder how five came to eat the apple?"

"I can understand that readily enough."

"Why was it?"

"Perhaps they were tired of canned goods."

Good Advice.

"I am ravenously hungry, lady."

"Then, my dear man, you are very reprehensible."

"Why?"

"You should not allow yourself to get in that extreme condition."

What He Thought.

"Marriage is a lottery."

"Is it?"

"Yes."

"Well, I have picked the capital prize in advance."

Knew Them.

"I have such a lovely disposition."

"You need a press agent."

"Why?"

"Only way the world will ever find it out."

Worse Possibility.

MONEY AND A MAID

And a Financial Deal That Had a Curious Climax

It is not necessary to mention her name, but it is of interest to note that she is the daughter of one of "the first families of Virginia," and one characteristic of these same first families is apt to be an utter carelessness of that which pays for your daily bread and wine and which keeps us all out of the poorhouse—money.

She was just rising eleven, this little maid, two years ago when her father first noted her lack of interest in things financial. Starting as a barefoot boy because of the prodigality of his progenitors, he had drifted north, worked for a scant living at whatever he could get to do, developed an ability, studied, worked and climbed until at last he found himself a success and was able to spend about $10,000 a year for the maintenance of himself and the wife and child he had accumulated. Then said the wise papa to himself, remembering his days of poverty and stress, "I must teach her to save."

He tried several plans, all of which failed to have any good effect. Just a year ago he hit upon a scheme which seemed to have merit.

"Here, Boots," he said, "I want to make a proposition to you. This is what I propose: I will give you a brand new dollar bill every Saturday night, and I will write the date upon each one. At the end of the year I want you to show me how many of those actual dollar bills you have, and for every one you can show me I will give you two. Do you think you can make money that way?"

The child thought she could and repeated the conditions as well as her mind grasped them, but her father thought she did not get them accurately.

"Wait," he said; "I'll write it out so that there cannot be any error."

So he wrote:

"I will give you a new one dollar bill every Saturday night. I will write the date on each one as I give it to you. For every such bill that you can show me at the end of the year I will give you two others." Then he signed it.

There was a dearth of childish funds for awhile in that household and not a few efforts on the part of the daughter to extort money from her mother, who was wise and refused accommodation. But some way, it did not then transpire how, the little girl dug herself out of penury and into comparative affluence and that without meaning to exercise guile. She seemed to have money in her purse and was quite able to hold up her end at the soda fountain or wherever else her little friends gathered, and her parents, who said nothing at all about it to her, wondered and speculated, finally agreeing that Boots was spending at least a large part of her allowance.

The dollar bill came every week, duly inscribed with the date of the gift, and was accepted by the little maiden with appropriate thanks. Then came the Christmas holidays, and the parents wondered if she would save her money or remember them. She remembered them, but not with much expenditure. Then came the last of the fiscal year, and the father inscribed another note and turned it over to her.

"Now, Boots," he said, "I have given you fifty-two of these, and I promised you two for every one you could show me at the end of the year. How many have you?"

"I'll get them for you," said the innocent child and ran away.

The old folks had a laugh between themselves while she was gone, thinking that she would exhibit two or three bills and fully believing that the experiment had failed. Then in came the daughter. She laid a sheaf of bills down before her father.

He counted them—fifty-two! All unused and bearing his indorsement of the date of gift. Among them was the agreement written by her father.

"Now, how much do you owe me?" she asked.

"I reckon I owe you $104," he said, "but I cannot see how you managed to save every one of these bills and yet had all the money you have spent."

"Well, pop," she answered, "it's this way. I told Joe one time that I couldn't spend any money, although I had it, and he asked me why. I told him and showed him what you had written. Then he made me what you call a proposition.

"He has an allowance of $2 a week. He said he would give me 70 cents a week if I would keep all the bills and give them to him at the end of the year after showing them to you. It's a perfectly fair agreement. I have had my 70 cents a week, I show the bills, you give me $104 and I turn over to him the $52. He makes $15.00, and I make $104. And I don't have to be poor or broke."

Now, what would you do with a child like that?—Detroit Free Press.

Let those who would affect singularity with success first determine to be very virtuous, and they will be sure to be very singular.—Walter Colton.

Real Appreciation.

The impulsiveness of great men often has led to amusing incidents. In "Reminiscences of My Life" Henry Holiday tells, among other anecdotes of the Pre-Raphaelites, this story of Rossetti, who was an ardent lover of rare and beautiful china:

Rossetti dined one evening with friends who had learned from him the joys of china collecting. The dinner was served in beautiful specimens of various sorts of ware and for the better display of the dishes was set out on the table. The salmon was served in an especially precious dish. When the cover was removed Rossetti started, leaned over to examine the dish, took it in both hands and turned it upside down to see the marks on the back. The salmon, of course, fell out on the tablecloth, but Rossetti paid no attention and only exclaimed, "The very dish I wanted and was going to get tomorrow!" The lady was so elated at having got the dish ahead of her guest that she quite forgave the irreverent treatment of her salmon and of her tablecloth.

Straightened Out the Blunder.

Beef was very scarce in Ladysmith during the siege, but Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton, then a colonel, insisted that "horse is not half bad when properly cooked and when one is used to it. In fact," he said, concluding a discussion, "I have a joint cooked tonight, which I hope you will all sample. Of course, there's beef, too—to-night!" Every one at the table preferred the beef, with the exception of Colonels Ward and Ian Hamilton, who ostentatiously carved generous slices from the horseflesh." The dinner was nearly over when one of the servants whispered a communication to Ward. Up he sprang. "I'm distressed, gentlemen," he announced to the startled company. "A silly mistake has been made. These joints were mixed somehow, and you have been eating the horse. I'm really annoyed. But I hope you'll be convinced now that the meat is splendid eating. I'm sure you all seemed to enjoy it." Glances were exchanged; moustaches were twirled. Nobody seemed ready with a response. Then a voice from the bottom of the table piped up: "Oh, don't distress yourself, Ward! I thought some mistake had been made, so I just changed those dishes as they stood on the sideboard. It was you and Hamilton who had the horseflesh all right!"

PARTY FROCKS.

Old Fashioned Designs Are Carried Out In Lingerie Materials.

GIRL'S VOILE FROCK.

Lingerie gowns in adaptations of the styles made famous by the pictures of Kate Greenaway are popular for little girls' party wear. They may be plain, embroidered or trimmed with lace, but a handsome sash is an invariable accompaniment.

Pictured here is a charming frock of hand embroidered voile. The high waist line and puffed sleeves are quaint and attractive.

A charming garment for the small girl is a little white nainsook made by hand and hand embroidered. It is cut in princess style, perfectly straight from neck to hem except that a low placed band of ribbon is run through wide loops of the material and tied in a bow in front.

Hand embroidered with scallops and dots is the neck, the ends of the short cut in one sleeves and the bottom of the little garment.

IRISH LOOMS HUMMING.

Increasing Demand for Homespun Revives Industry.

The demand for homespun cloth is increasing and to-day the mills and looms of Donegal and Conemara, Ireland, are humming in the effort to equalize supply and demand. This is a condition of late years only, and it was Queen Victoria who, by interesting royalty, created the present demand for the fabric.

Fourteen years ago the looms in Ireland were silent. The revival came in 1899, when Queen Victoria gave an order for a considerable quantity of Irish homespun woollens. This was the beginning of present-day conditions. The order created so much interest that other orders began to come in and within a few months the looms were going again.

To-day the demand for homespun comes from almost every country in the world. This demand has greatly increased because of the present vogue for Balmacaan coats. At present there is a ready sale for every yard of homespun, of every grade, turned out.

The Irish peasants have clothed themselves with cloth of their own manufacture for centuries. Not so many years ago the spinning wheel was always included in the wedding presents from the parents to the bride. This method of manufacturing is passing, though to-day in Donegal in the homes of many of the peasants the whirr of the spinning wheel can still be heard. When the royal order came ancient spinning wheels were hunted up, renovated, and hands that had almost forgotten the duties required of them were put to work again.

A cottage that houses a loom can be recognized at once, because of its length. A loom fills the entire length of the house, which is a one-storey structure. Additional space for the spinning wheels necessitates an increased frontage, which gives the cottage a low, squatty appearance. Though crude in workmanship the machines used for making homespun are serviceable and accurate. Many of them have passed down from father to son for generations, and the secrets of their amazing accuracy and durability are lost. They stand worn and dyed by the smoke of the burning turf, monuments to the workmanship of other days.

Weaving is the industry of the north of Ireland just as lace making is the monopoly of the south. It is predicted by those who have made a study of the subject that the weaving industry will spread all over Ireland.

LONG TUNICS.

They Are In the Ascendant For Gowns of All Types.

The long tunic is seen on every type of costume, from the street suit to the negligee. Fluffy lingerie frocks of sheer organdie and embroidery have the staid and stately tunic, and if there must be ruffles the ruffles are put on the tunic.

Some of the long tunics worn in the street are buttoned down in front; others show buttons all the way down the back. Some of these tunics are quite simple in cut, with a slight flare at the sides and a very straight line at the back, from sash bow or edge of jacket to ankle. Others have a widely flaring cut or are set into the waistband with small plaits or even gathers.

APRICOT LINEN GOWN.

The gown pictured here is of apricot linen with a long tunic, part of which is arranged in box plaits. The kimono blouse is cut with a low front, into which is fitted a vest and flare collar of white organdie. The gown is adorned with white bone buttons and has a girdle of patent leather.

Milady's Mirror

Summer Bathing.

Bathe with reason in summer as well as winter. Do not drop your warm baths and indulge only in cold plunges. You will be the more comfortable for an occasional hot bath. And remember that a very cold bath, either in ocean, still water or a tub, can bring on cramps and serious intestinal troubles if taken too soon after a hearty meal.

Another folly is depending upon sea bathing, when at the shore, for cleansing purposes. Sea or lake bathing is merely a sport, and the body should always be cleansed in still or fresh water after a dip of this sort.

The average man sponges off his body with the bucket of water left in each tiny bathhouse after his plunge. The average woman rubs off the salt water and dresses without bathing because she says fastidiously that she does not like the looks of that "nasty bucket." Continued bathing in salt water, unrelieved by a fresh sponge, is not good for the skin.

In summer a warm, not hot, bath at night is most cooling, and the bath in the morning should be only a quick sponge with cool, not cold, water. The woman who dresses in the middle of the afternoon or just before dinner and bathes then should not bathe just before retiring also. The quick morning sponge and the moderate afternoon or evening bath are quite sufficient for each twenty-four hours.

The Vacationist's Eyes.

If there is one time when the eyes are more severely taxed than at any other it is during summer months. Free from the whirl of business or social affairs, the fair vacationist grasps the long sought opportunity to indulge her love of reading or delicate embroidery.

Quite generally she reads while reclining in a comfortable hammock under the trees or stretched at full length on the porch or bedroom couch. "I know it's not right," says one independent girl, "but it's my vacation, and I'm going to be comfortable."

A noted oculist, who considers the happiness of a patient as well as her physical good, insists that there is no harm whatever in reading in a recumbent position if the head is well bolstered up and the light shines on the book over the left shoulder. Nothing is more fatiguing to the eyes than attempting to use them when a strong light is pouring straight into them. The habit of reading in the hazy light after sundown is equally injurious.

Refreshing the Vacationist.

For the woman vacationist who has no bathroom a huge bowl or, better still, an old fashioned foot bathtub is essential. With the aid of either of these she can sponge in cool water in the morning and in warm at night.

If her skin is sluggish and she has a generally rundown feeling in hot weather let her try the vinegar bath. For this allow a pint of pure cider or wine vinegar to two gallons, which is about what is needed for the average sponge bath.

Put this into the basin and stand in the tub. Use a large sponge and fill it sopping with the mixture of water and vinegar. Close your eyes and press this to your face.

Repeat this several times and then proceed the same way, pressing the sponge to the base of your brain and on your shoulders until your body has been literally showered with vinegar and water. The body is then patted, not rubbed, dry, and the patient should lie down and rest for awhile.

Simple Hair Tonic.

The following hair tonic is recommended as stimulating and nourishing. It will bring new life and blood to the hair bulbs. Before commencing treatment well wash the scalp with warm soft water and a good shampoo. Take twenty grams of quinine sulphate, two drams of spirits of rosemary, two drams of tincture of cantharides, one and one-half drams of dilute acetic acid, three and one-half ounces of water. Combine these and rub freely into the scalp and hair every day. The diseased and worthless hair will probably continue to drop out for a week or two; then the new growth should begin to make speedy progress.

Freckle Remover.

A bleaching cream that will help to remove freckles requires two ounces of pure strained honey added to half an ounce of glycerin, a dram and a half of citric acid, half an ounce of rectified spirits and three drops of ambergris. Melt the honey, but do not let it get hot; beat it into the glycerin while the citric acid is dissolving in the spirits, add the ambergris to the latter; then beat the two mixtures together, using a silver fork. Use nothing in the way of metal in the preparing, a china bowl being the best for the beating, and keep in small porcelain jars.

Skin Bleaches.

In using lemon juice to clear the skin of blemishes a cold cream must always be applied after the juice has dried on, otherwise the acid causes an unpleasant roughness, which ruins the skin. Cucumber rind rubbed on is a good bleach, but this, too, makes the skin rough, and cold cream should be applied after using the rind.

Sir Robert's Favorite.

Sir Robert Laird Borden, during his long association with the legal and judicial fraternity at the bar of Nova Scotia, accumulated a fund of stories of lawyers and their clients. The Prime Minister is fond of one in particular, which deals with an old and frequently arrested offender, who was making one of his erstwhile appearances in the prisoner's dock. The judge had assigned to his defence a young and ambitious but inexperienced lawyer. Before passing sentence the cadi asked the prisoner whether he wished to say anything.

"Nothing, my Lord," was the startling response, "except to bespeak the clemency of the court for my lawyer."

Nyu Speling For Scuuls.

A campaign to remove some of the barnacles clinging to the English language in the nature of intricate spelling is getting under way in Ontario with the preparation of a dictionary and encyclopedia of new spelling by Prof. D. R. Keyes of Toronto University.

The object of the society of which he is a member is to change the English language so that the same sound will always have the same spelling and the natural spelling.

The following words illustrate the changes: Collegiate—coleejiait; institute—instityut! principal—prinsipal; branch—braanch; society—sosaieti.

In England the Simplified Spelling Society has a membership of 2,301 as compared to 480 two years ago. Rev. M. Mitford of Toronto, who is interested in the movement, states that the people of Ontario spend over $1,000,000 yearly in compelling the children to memorize thousands of words which result in nothing but damage to the child's reasoning faculties.

A Fish Story.

"The inns of dear old England are picturesque," said Richard [illegible] Beane, on his return from England, "but the food they serve is something terrible.

"After a visit to Blenheim Palace I entered an inn in the quaint village of Woodstock. As I lunched—or tried to lunch—my landlord said to me:

"'The great Duck of Marlborough once set in that chair you're a-settin' in, sir.'

"'Is that so?' said I.

"'And the dook once drank 'is beer out o' that same mug you're a-drinkin' out of.'

"'And I bet,' said I, 'I bet he refused to eat at this fish, too. Well, take it away, my man. I don't want it, either'."

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expenses by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

CANADA'S FISH TRADE GROWING; RESOURCES GREATEST IN WORLD

Government Is Making Progress In Its Effort to Sell the Fish of the Atlantic Coast to the People of the Inland Cities and Towns—Seaboard Is a Veritable Fish Pasture.

On the Canadian Atlantic coast where the wealth of the sea has been barrelled up and exported the world over, some braw lassies from the north of Great Britain a few years ago gave the fisher folk lessons in the art of curing herrings, as it is done elsewhere, says The Family Herald. But it was stated in the House of Commons the other day, that the fish thus put up sold no more readily, nor expensively than those New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Quebec had been putting up in the same way for centuries. A mechanical fish drier was established at Souris, Prince Edward Island, with the object of inducing the fishermen to adopt this method of drying their catches so as to be independent of weather conditions.

While the fish treated in the drier were equal to the best, the fishermen were not induced to adopt that means of curing their catches. This was, no doubt, owing to the expense involved in operating the drier.

For the past few years the Department of Marine and Fisheries has been endeavoring, and with marked success, to develop the trade in fresh fish from Canadian Atlantic and Canadian Pacific points to the interior markets of the country. This work was first taken up in 1907, at which time the larger markets, such as those of Montreal and Toronto, were being mainly supplied from United States ports and in some instances with fish which were first imported into that country from Canada.

That condition of affairs has been stopped and the markets have been very largely expanded. Last summer the service was extended by the running of a cold storage express car one day each week from Mulgrave and Halifax to Montreal, for the transportation of fresh fish, and it is probable that arrangements will shortly be concluded whereby a similar service will run through to Toronto.

No doubt improvement is possible in the regulations governing the fishery, and the curing of fish, and a good deal seems to be expected from the new Pickled Fish legislation passed at the last session. The Hon. Mr. Hazen, Minister of Marine and Fisheries is evidently determined upon lending the deep sea fishery all the assistance science, and a friendly Government can bestow.

Financially and commercially the industry merits all the attention it can receive. Last year its total value was $33,389,461. The year before it was $34,667,872. But it must not be forgotten that these figures include the lucrative salmon and halibut fisheries of the aPcific.

It has to be pointed out, however, that the total for 1911-12 was $4,702,439 greater than any other previous total, so that the result for last year is substantially greater than that for any other year. To the total the sea fisheries contributed $29,315,772, and the inland fisheries $4,073,692.

These results were produced by 65,081 fishermen, who manned 1,669 vessels and tugs, and 34,501 boats; together with 23,327 workers who were employed on shore in the various canneries, fish houses, etc., preparing the fish for market.

In the course of the year the number of boats using gasoline engines, as a means of propulsion, was raised to 5,911 by the addition of 331.

The total capital invested in Canadian fisheries was $24,388,459.

To say that Canada possesses the most extensive fisheries in the world is no exaggeration; moreover, it is safe to add that the waters in and around Canada contain the principal commercial food fishes in greater abundance than the waters of any other part of the world. The extraordinary fertility of what may be called our own waters is abundantly proved by the fact that apart from salmon, all the lobsters, herring, mackerel and sardines, nearly all the haddock, and many of the cod, hake, and pollock landed in Canada are taken from within our territorial waters.

The coast line of the Atlantic provinces, from the Bay of Fundy to the Straits of Belle Isle, without taking into account the lesser bays and indentations, measures over 5,000 miles, and along this great stretch are to be found innumerable natural harbors and coves, in many of which valuable fish are taken in considerable quantities with little effort.

It has been thoroughly established by scientific observation that there are immense pastures in the ocean, where fish thrive and multiply, and other parts which are deserted by live things, as are the Sahara and other deserts of the land.

Some of the largest, and probably best provided of these pastures extend from some miles north of Newfoundland, down to about opposite the middle of New England. That is to say there are fine supplies of plankton — waters furnished with microscopic fish food along the whole Atlantic front of Canada.

In these vast watery pastures swim and browse the great cod which first won renown for North America fisheries, when Basque fishermen netted them before Jacques Cartier sailed into the Baie des Chaleurs, or Cabot visited the island first named Cod-land, then Newfoundland.

There also disported themselves those shoals of herrings which at certain breeding times, cause thousands of tons of roe to be thrown up by the tides, and discolor the water for many miles with milky milt.

MANY TOURISTS ARE STRANDED

Ten Thousand in Switzerland Are Hard Pressed

LONDON, Aug. 14.—The fashionable season in Switzerland was at its height when war was declared, and as a result more than 10,000 English and American tourists are stranded in that country. The British Minister at Berne has issued the following proclamation:

"During mobilization travel through France is impossible, and tourists are recommended to remain where they are until it is possible to arrange for transit."

Many tourists are hard pressed for the bare necessities of life. Some are trying to borrow small amounts on their letters of credit, these being often for large sums.

RUSSIA HAS 7,000,000 MEN.

Immense Army Is Mobilized Along Western Frontier.

ROME, Aug. 14.—From a reliable source in St. Petersburg comes the announcement that Russia has mobilized an army of 2,000,000 men on the German frontier, a similar number of men on the Austrian frontier, and an army of a half million on the Turkish boundary and the Roumanian frontier, respectively, while holding 3,000,000 additional men in reserve.

Russian Successes Reported.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 14.—(Via London.)—A Russian force has taken the town of Sokal, Austrian Galacia, by assault, inflicting heavy casualties on the Austrian garrison, according to a semi-official announcement.

An official statement says:

"On Aug. 10 and 11, the enemy made careful reconnaisance on the frontier at the governments of Kovno and Suwalki. A German detachment of four battalions, three squadrons of cavalry and 18 cannon, attacked Eydtkuhnen, East Prussia, but was repulsed."

Several houses in Sokal, which is 45 miles northwest of Lemberg, were set on fire and burned to the ground by the Russian troops, because civilians had fired from on the attacking force.

The Russians captured some military building material, pontoons and telegraph instruments.

ARTILLERY BRIGADES

Details Are Announced by Militia Department

OTTAWA, Aug. 14.—The detail of the artillery of Canada's force was announced last night by Col. Morrison, Director of Artillery. It will consist of three brigades of 18 eighteen-pound guns each, making a total of 54 guns, with one heavy battery of four sixty-pounders additional. The total force will be 23 officers, 772 men and 746 horses for each brigade, making a grand total of 69 officers, 2,316 men and 2,238 horses for the three brigades. The heavy battery of the sixty-pounders will be taken from the Montreal Heavy Brigade, and will consist of six officers, 192 men and 144 horses. In addition to this there will be a divisional ammunition column of fifteen officers, 553 men and 7[illegible] horses.

The batteries have all been ordered to mobilize at once at the brigade headquarters in Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto, respectively. They will be equipped and placed upon a war footing at each of these centres before they are sent to Valcartier.

Owing to the fact that the British system is to be adopted in regard to the size of the batteries there will be six guns instead of four in each battery, thus necessitating the breaking up of the present Canadian units, which have only four guns each.

The first brigade will consist of the Ottawa, Belleville, Gananoque and Kingston batteries, and will mobilize at Ottawa. The second brigade will consist of the 3rd Battery of Montreal, the 22nd Battery of Sherbrooke, the 21st Battery of Westmount and the Moncton and Sydney Batteries. They will mobilize at Montreal. The third brigade will consist of the 4th Battery of Hamilton, the 7th Battery of St. Catharines, the 9th Battery of Toronto, the 6th Battery of London and the 14th Battery of Cobourg. They will mobilise at Toronto.

Canadian Cruiser With Shearwater and Algerine Reach Esquimalt.

VANCOUVER, B.C., Aug. 14.—Completing a cruise in which she has distinguished herself the Canadian cruiser Rainbow reached Esquimalt yesterday morning at six o'clock. The Rainbow went out in face of the Leipzig and Nurnberg to the rescue of the two little British gunboats on the southern California coast, almost a thousand miles from home.

The Rainbow specially convoyed the Shearwater, while the Algerine took a course close into the shore. The Leipzig was within 100 miles of them on two or three occasions.

CRUISERS IN A DUEL

German War Vessel Finally Escapes Near Bermuda

HALIFAX, N.S., Aug. 14.—For half an hour on Thursday night H. M. S. Bristol, the smallest British warship in the North Atlantic, fought a long-range duel with the Karlsruhe, the largest and fastest of the German cruisers, which have been trying to intercept British shipping on the North Atlantic. Fleeing from H. M. S. Suffolk, which interrupted the Karlsruhe coaling at sea from the North German Lloyd steamer Kronprinz Wilhelm, the German cruiser was intercepted by the Bristol southwest of Bermuda, and for a half-hour a long-range running fight took place in the blackness of semi-tropical night.

Racing through the heavy swell at a terrific clip, the ships exchanged broadsides without inflicting much damage, the conditions being very unfavorable for accurate gunnery. Although the Bristol's consorts were at least 100 miles astern, the German would not stand and fight. Altering his course, he gradually drew away from the Bristol, owing to superior speed, and after half an hour was out of range of the British ship's six-inch bowchase. All through the night the chase lasted, but somewhere in the darkness the German doubled and made off south to San Juan, where he put in for coal some days ago.

Details of this action, the first single-ship fight in which a British man-o'-war has engaged in these waters in a hundred years, were brought to Halifax yesterday by H. M. S. Suffolk, the flagship of the Atlantic squadron.

Gallant Frenchman Decorated.

PARIS, Aug. 14.—The first officer to be decorated for gallantry in the war is Second Lieut. H. J. Bruyant of the 15th Dragoons. Gen. Bruyant, said the officer with seven others had a fight with Uhlans and the officer killed the officer in charge with his own band.

Fed the Brute.

Sir Charles Tupper in his book, "Recollections of Sixty Years," recalls an experience of his daughter in Canada during the Riel rebellion in the northwest. She was in the region of trouble, and on a day when she happened to be alone in her home "in walked a strapping Indian, all war paint and feathers. She thought the best thing she could do was to feed him. She cooked everything in the house—potatoes, meat and bread. When all was consumed—and these Indians will eat at a meal enough to lost for three weeks—he had grown to a very large size. As he could not speak a word of English or French, he evinced his gratitude by patting his protuberant stomach, with a guttural "Ha, ha, ha," and left.

Plague of the Black Death.

That terrible plague the black death, originating somewhere in the east, passed by way of Armenia into Asia and thence to Egypt and north Africa. Reaching Sicily in 1346, it spread over Italy, France and nearly all of the countries of Europe, including the British isles. The mortality was appalling, some 25,000,000 of people dying from the dread epidemic. The nature of the great pestilence has been a matter of much controversy, but it is generally conceded that it was closely related to what is known today as the "bubonic plague."—New York American.

KAISER IS RIDICULED BY HIS SISTER

German Emperor Has Been Caused Many Uncomfortable Moments

By the death of the romantic old Grand Duke of Saxe-Meiningen, the kaiser's eldest sister has just been elevated to the position of a "crowned head," for she is the consort of the new ruler of the states of Saxe-Meiningen. Only one other of the kaisea's sister is a sovereign—the wife of the King of Greece. The kaiser's eldest sister, the new Grand Duchess of Saxe-Meiningen, is a lady of rare personality, and one of the most interesting women in Europe. She has caused her imperial brother some tempestuous moments and many a hard word during her fifty-four years and now that she is a sovereign princess and, as it were, "on her own," she may cause him more.

Charlotte of Prussia, as she was in early days, was born at the New Palace at Potsdam, on the 24th of July, 1860. Her mother was England's Princess Royal, and she was Queen Victoria's first granddaughter.

For seventeen years Princess Charlotte of Prussia remained the chief joy and consolation of her mother's life.

The Family Feud.

When old Bismark and his dour diplomats in Berlin were intent upon making life miserable for the English princess who was destined to be the "Empress of the Hundred Days," it was always her daughter Charlotte to whom she went for sympathy. From her eldest son, the kaiser, she got little comfort, Wilhelm II, was from infancy completely imbued with Prussian junkerdom, and he yearned for the day when he would be an Imperial Majesty. There was a considerable affection between the kaiser and his sister Charlotte, who was but a year or so younger than himself, but as the future kaiser and his sister grew into years of discretion, a wide breach gradually developed between them.

Kaiser Wilhelm, as all the world knows, was always giving himself "airs," and his sister, who had inherited her mother's strong English common sense and hatred for poseurs, became addicted to a habit of ridiculing her brother. But the kaiser had his revenge, and his sister is said never to have forgiven him for it. One day young Prince Wilhelm of Prussia, as the Kaiser then was, brought home to the New Palace in Berlin a young student who had just arrived in Potsdam, who was of royal blood, and destined to be grand duke of Saxe-Meinigen.

Forced to Marry.

Prince Bernhard, was a clever youth. But he was no soldier. His inclinations were in the nature of Greek research, and a uniform was a source of annoyance to him. Prince Wilhelm, having poked no end of fun at the young officer, coolly told his sister Charlotte that she had to marry him. Charlotte was but sixteen years old. Charlotte laughed at Prince Wilhelm. But it turned out to be no laughing matter! Young Prince Wilhelm's father was already a hopeless invalid; his mother, as became an English Pricess Royal, was a lady of the meek and gentle order, and before his own parents clearly recognized what their son had done Prince Wilhelm, had betrothed his sister to the heir of Saxe-Meiningen, and all Germany was talking of the match. And but a few months later the Princess was married and taken to Meiningen!

Queen Victoria was inexpressibly shocked. Prince Wilhelm alienated his new brother-in-law. Contemptuously the kaiser referred to Meiningen as "The Professor-in-Arms."

The latter, a refined and scholarly gentleman, hated junkerdom like poison, and was not afraid to tell Wilhelm II. "what he thought of him!" And ructions followed.

The new kaiser practically turned the heir of Meiningen out of the German army; and his brother-in-law's stern denunciation of German military methods, when the artilleryman Heinrich committed suicide in 1903 rather than suffer bullying from his non-commissioned officers, has become historic in German military annals. And Charlotte of Saxe-Meiningen and the kaiser have never been friendly since. She is devoted to her husband.

THE VACATION WARDROBE.

Limit the Number of Garments, but Select Them Carefully.

In selecting the wardrobe for the summer vacation common sense should be the guide. The first essential is to be prepared for any sort of weather. Therefore a couple of tailor suits are indispensable, one of the smarter type, the other of the "sports" order—simple, serviceable and substantial. A motor coat and a waterproof, the latter a "mackinaw," in good color and of irreproachable make; a wrap that, while thoroughly protective, is fit for the smartest occasion when uncertain weather must be guarded against, may be included.

A sufficiency of trim tailor cut shirts for these gowns and perhaps one or two blouses should be selected. Immaculate and appropriate footgear—dainty shoes or boots, with cloth tops for the best gown, real country boots or shoes for the other, a couple of hats, one of the simplest type for travel and hard wear, the other as modish as you please, but not of perishable order, and a sports cap may complete the outdoor kit.

Unless one is going to a house where extensive festivities may be expected two evening gowns should be quite sufficient. Don't forget those delightful and dainty rest gowns of the kimono type, made of thin broche silk and cotton or crape, that are so useful and charming and take up next to no room in one's baggage.

Only one evening wrap need be taken, and that a thin one—such as a graceful voluminous burnoose of ninon or mousseline de soie, which can be folded into the tiniest compass and yet affords sufficient warmth to protect one against drafts or chills indoors—for if one has to motor to dinners or dances at a distance the motor coat would be worn during the drive.

Moire Sashes.

There are some charming new sashes made of wide taffeta moire ribbon. The ends are folded into a point and finished with a silken ornament and tassel. These sashes are wrapped twice about the waist, and the ends are then tied and left to hang loosely over the skirt.

Because you can't get the other fellow's viewpoint is no reason why you should assume that he has none.

OBITUARY

JOHN McMASTER.
MRS. EMILY McMASTER.

Mr. John McMaster, aged 66 years, a lifelong resident of Asphodel passed away at Nicholls Hospital yesterday afternoon. The body was forwarded to Norwood today where interment will take place on Sunday.

It is rather singular that his brother's wife, Mrs. Emily McMaster, aged 62 years, of 1½ Stewart Street, also passed away yesterday afternoon. The funeral will take place on Sunday afternoon from the family residence to Little Lake Cemetery at 2.30. Service at the house by Adjutant McElhiney at 2 o'clock.

The late Mrs. Pearce was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and her beautiful Christian character won for her the high regard of numerous friends. She is survived by her husband, two sisters and four brothers. Mrs. S. D. Carver of this city is a sister. Both Mr. and Mrs. Carver attended the funeral which was held at Ingoldsby, Friday, August 8.

NO SKIMPING AS YET AT TABLE OF HOTEL NESBITT

Usual Menu for the Guests, Dispute the War and High Prices

The high cost of living has not affected the jail menu, according to Deputy Sheriff Hall. The usual table d'hote assortment of eats is being given the prsoners. It consists of porridge, soup, scilly, potatoes, bread, tea, knives and forks. Strange to relate, the jail is not overcrowded as one would imagine, owing to the hard times. There is one woman in the cells, and if business increases, the jail authorities will face a room shortage.

According to law, a female prisoner has to be confined in a separate corridor. In the corridor where the lone female is confined there are 12 cells. She practically occupies the 12, and if the other become overcrowded it will be necessary to lodge the prisoners in the hallways, as none of the males can be placed in the coridor where the female prisoner's cell is located.

For the benefit of those who have not defined table d'hote, it is indigestion for seventy-five cents.

BELL TELEPHONE EMPLOYEES AND EUROPEAN WAR

The Executive of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada has announced that employees who are sent to the front in the present war will have their positions kept open for them, and those whose families are dependent on them and not otherwise provided for will receive half pay during their absence in the field.

LIGHTWEIGHT WRAPS.

Semi-long afternoon wraps of plain and flowered silks are a Parisian fancy.

Linen dust coats for woman are very plain, useful looking garments.

Imported golfine is much used for women's sports coats.

Coat chains have gone out, but bead necklaces of all colors are much in vogue.

Dressing sacks are shirred at the waist line as they used to be.

Long strings of jet are worn with elaborate evening gowns.

To clean an enamel bath, moisten kitchen salt with turpentine and rub into the bath. See that the bath is quite dry before applying the polish with a dry cloth.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

WHY THE DELAY?

Editor Review,

About what time will our City Council wake up and do what every other place is doing for local soldiers and those they will leave behind them, or has the city no representatives for its people but the Women's Association and the Girls' friendly.

Yours,
H. M. S. CONDOR.

TOO FAR TO WALK.

Editor Review,

Dear Sir,—What is the use of advertising Cobourg's patroitic horse show when there is no patriotic railway to run an excursion train to it so that we may be able to return on the same day? We could supply a contingent of patrons that would add materially to the fund to be given to the soldiers of this district who go to the war if we had the travelling facilities.

Yours, etc.,

Missionary Auxiliary Held August Meeting

The August meeting of the Missionary Auxiliary of the George St. Methodist Church met at the home of Mrs. Allison, Water Street, on Tuesday afternoon.

Mrs. Kendry presided over an interesting program of singing by the members, and the story of the mission work among the twelve thousand Italians in Toronto, which is in charge of Rev. S. W. Dean.

After the program, Mrs. Allison served a dainty lunch on the lawn which was much enjoyed.

Contraband Goods Defined by Treaty

All the Present Belligerents Signatories of Agreement Reached A Few Years Ago.

Important to neutral nations and all countries capable of furnishing supplies—in neutral ships, of course—is what is contraband in time of war. Those articles which can only be used for peaceful purpose can be made liable to seizure for violation of a blockade. Other articles depend upon the circumstances.

There is much controversy as to how far the United States, for instance, can sell to Canada those things which her people have been accustomed to exporting, without violating the laws of neutrality. As far as food supplies are concerned, our neighbors may sell us all they wish to, and we in turn might sell them to the army if we liked. It all depends upon how efficiently the enemy can maintain a blockade. A blockade between the United States and Canada would be impossible, so our neighbors can still supply us with watermelons, California oranges, or any other delicacy for which we have the price.

In 1909 a convention of the principal naval powers was held in London and an important decision arrived at. It was the first time an agreement had been made between the maritime nations of the world as to a list of articles which are to be absolutely free during war. The convention established three classifications for cargoes in neutral vessels—(1) absolutely free cargoes or parts of cargoes, (2) absolutely contraband, and (3) conditionally contraband.

(1.) The articles absolutely free include raw cotton, wool, silk, jute, flax, hemp and other raw materials for textile industries, and fabrics woven therefrom; oleaginous nuts and seeds, copra, india rubber, resins, gums, hops, raw hides, horns, bone and ivory, fertilizers, ores, earths, clays, lime, chalk, stone, chinaware and glassware, soaps, paints, varnish, soap ash, caustic soda, sulphate of soda, ammonia, agricultural machinery, and many other articles which by their nature would not be of value in warfare.

(2.) Absolutely contraband articles consist of arms and powder of every description, military equipment of every kind and character, and saddle-draft and pack-horses.

(3.) The list of conditional contraband articles is made up of food supplies, fodder and grain, gold and silver, coined and in bars, and paper representing money, air ships and flying machines, and articles which might possibly be used as munitions of war.

The signatory powers were Great Britain, the United States, Germany, Austria-Hungary, France, Italy, Japan, Russia and the Netherlands. This understanding greatly lessens the miseries of war to nations not engaged in it. For instance it would not close the factories of Great Britain and ruin the cotton States of the American Union. Unless an effective blockade were established it might even permit very considerable trade between one section of a country and another, or the countries of allies joined in war, by using neutral bottoms.

CORRUPTION IN AUSTRIA

Press is Muzzled and Government by People an Unknown Quantity

In Austria the press, as a whole, is corrupt. That is to say it prints what the Government wants it to print. If it does this skilfully it is rewarded; if it fails to do it, then it is suppressed. The country is overrun with lawyers, practically the whole civil service is in their hands, and the first step to getting a Government job is to become a lawyer. The finances of the country are in control of the Jews, and Jews also own most of the newspapers. The real "people" in Austria, the people who run the country and have got it into the present war, are the Government officials, the bureaucracy, appointed by the monarch, and buying majorities in Parliament from one section or another of the representatives of the people. If the representative of the people proves himself a true representative according to our standard he would find himself deprived of patronage. No Government money would be spent in his constituency. The result is that the very people he tries to serve become tired of him and decline to elect him again. Thus the absolute power of the Emperor and his [illegible] is riveted on the people.

Woman's World

Young Women's Christian Association at the Exposition.

MISS REBECCA F. M'KILLIP.

The Young Women's Christian association is planning to entertain its members delightfully at the Panama-Pacific exposition.

This great and influential organization of women has been represented at every previous world's fair, but for the coming one at San Francisco in 1915 the association hopes to surpass all former efforts.

The building which it will erect on the grounds will be not only a clubhouse for its members, but a center of attraction for hosts of others.

One feature of the building will be the auditorium, where stereopticon views illustrating what the association is doing for young women all over America will be shown. Lectures and other entertainments will also be given in this beautiful and comfortable hall.

In the building will be a rest room, a writing room and a dining room where dainty lunches will be served at moderate prices.

Besides this, there will be an exhibition of work coming from all parts of the country and sent by association members. It will be along the lines encouraged by the association classes. There will be specimens of needlework, photographs, literary work, etc. In the domestic arts line a great variety of things will be shown. Best of all, prizes are to be awarded for the most meritorious work in each line. Some of these prizes are quite considerable—enough to enable an ambitious girl to make the trip who otherwise might not be able to do so.

The activities of the association in regard to the Panama-Pacific exposition have been placed in the hands of a specially appointed body known as the Panama-Pacific exposition committee of the national board of the Young Women's Christian association. Miss Rebecca F. McKillip is secretary of this committee, and those who desire particulars of the contest or are interested in knowing more of the helpful and interesting work that the association expects to do for young women who attend the fair may learn of it by inquiring of her at 600 Lexington avenue, New York city.

Fans to Match Gowns.

A fad that promises to be popular will give the clever girl an opportunity to exercise her deftness, for it is having a fan of the same material as her favorite dress. She can buy the sticks to which to attach the material, or with just a little patience and care she can utilize any fan foundation for the purpose. Hand painting, sequins, lace and tiny beads are used to ornament these.

Enamels are used on many fans. The Watteau style is paramount in these, and that elusive old French pink is seen here to advantage.

Some of these enameled sticks are studded with gems. The sticks which are made of gold are bordered with a rim of tiny pearls and diamonds, and little gemlike enameled pictures appear on the upper parts of the larger outside sticks.

Yellow a Popular Color.

Tulip yellow is a popular color. Another yellow shade much in favor is primrose, which is so delicate that it may be worn by women with light hair and blue eyes, a type to which most yellows are forbidden. Exceedingly dainty is a dancing frock of primrose colored pussy willow taffeta, trimmed with garlands of little blue and lavender roses and having a wide girdle of lavender ribbon. The pretty frock is matched by gloves of primrose tinted silk with wrist embroideries.

Parasol Fabrics.

All sorts and kinds of material are used for the present day parasol. There are taffetas in figures, stripes and stunning plaids. There are those, too, in vividest oriental colorings. Again, we have richly brocaded silks and satins. Silk cord as a band at the handle and held prettily in place by tiny silk bows of gayest colors is another attractive novelty. Loops of velvet ribbon may also be used to slip over the wrist when the parasol is not up.

THE MARKETS

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Accumulating domestic stocks and the canceling of export contracts had a depressing influence today on the price of wheat. The market closed heavy at 3-4c to 1 1-4c net decline. Corn showed a loss of 1-2c to 1 1-4c, compared with last night, and oats of 1-8c to 1 1-4c. In provisions the outcome was the same as last night to 10c off.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 13.—Wheat prices were lower again today, little or no trading in futures being transacted. Liverpool was easier, and it is confidently expected that the export difficulty will be satisfactorily arranged in the near future.

Winnipeg wheat opened ⅛c to ⅜c lower, and at noon had declined a further ⅝c to 1⅝c. October was at $1.04, December at $1.02⅞, May at $1.09.

Oats opened unchanged and held steady. Flax opened ½c lower and declined further, closing at a sharp break in all months to 5¼c to 7¼c down. The cash demand was good for contract grades of wheat, and offerings were unequal to the demand. Buyers were houses with eastern milling connections.

Cars inspected on Wednesday were 85, as compared with 199 last year, and in sight were 100.

The weather map all over the west was cool, freezing points being touched at Humboldt only.

War Will Help Canada.

MONTREAL, Aug. 14. — Sir William G. Van Horne, ex-president of the C. P. R., on being asked what he thought of the war, made the following statement: "I do not imagine any harm can come to Canada, and the longer it continues the better it will be for the Dominion and the United States. Our crops of wheat, oats and coarse grains will obtain prices that will more than recoup Canada for an outlay she may decide to make on behalf of our Empire."

GERMANY DELIBERATELY SOUGHT WAR, IS OPINION IN UNITED STATES

The United States has declared itself neutral in the great war, but it is obvious that the majority of Americans sympathize with Great Britain and France. There are even citizens of Germanic extraction who blame the Kaiser for precipitating the awful conflict. Tens of thousands of people in New York and other parts of the Republic, who face financial ruin because of the Emperor's unbounded military ambition, are praying that the British forces will utterly destroy Germany as a world power.

Rear-Admiral Mahan, the chief naval authority in the United States, has published a statement in which he represents the war as one of calculated aggressiveness by Germany. He ventures the opinion that the absence of the German Emperor from Berlin at the time of the Austrian ultimatum to Servia was an act cleverly designed to deceive. In his view the aggressive insolence of Austria's ultimatum to Servia, taken with the concession by the latter of all the demands except those too humiliating for national self-respect, indicates that the real cause of the war was other than set forth by the ultimatum. "... knowing from past experience how the matter must be viewed by Russia," the Admiral went on, "it is incredible that Austria would have ventured on the ultimatum unless assured beforehand of the consent of Germany to it. The inference is irresistible that the substance of the ultimatum was the pretext for a war already determined on as soon as plausible occasion offered. Germany's procedure is to overwhelm at once by concentrated preparation and impetuous momentum."

The New York World said in an editorial: "The Kaiser plunges Europe into the most devastating conflict known to human history, and every civilized country reels under the shock. And about what? In reality because the reactionary party of Germany was determined to invite a general European conflict in order to stay the advancement of political reforms. In the very vanguard of the twentieth century in most respects, Germany has straggled back into the seventeenth century politically. The curse of mediæval government has hung over her noblest achievements. Every impulse toward political freedom has been beaten back by the mailed fist, and at a great crisis in their history the German people are deprived of that power over their own political institutions without which the English-speaking races have justly come to regard life itself as intolerable."

Alleged Atrocities by German Troops

BRUSSELS, Aug. 14.—(Via Paris)—It was stated here yesterday that intervention of the neutral powers is to be asked for by the Belgian foreign minister, through the diplomatic representatives in the Belgian capital in reference to alleged repeated violations by the German troops in Belgium of the Geneva and Hague conventions.

M. Davignon, the Belgian Foreign Minister, has drawn up a long list of cases declared to be fully attested of the killing of the wounded, the abuse of the white flag, the killing of civilians and the seizure of private and public funds.

Peasants report that the Germans are waging a war of extermination. They allege that the troops are firing on priests and are killing and wounding people indiscriminately. Whole villages, according to their stories, are being wiped out by the invaders.

According to a semi-official despatch the German troops before Kalisz, Russian Poland, have issued a proclamation stating that every tenth inhabitant of Kalisz will be shot in the event of further resistance.

HANK O'DAY WANTED TOO MUCH FOR "ZIMMY"

Deal for Trade of Kicking Third Sacker Has Been Suspended Owing to Club Leaders Demands

New York, Aug. 14.—If John McGraw has Heine Zimmerman to help him in this fall's world series against the Athletes he will have to give Hank O'Day a great more than he has yet offered, said to be Fromme and Stock or Grant.

"I wouldn't trade Zimmerman for anybody or anything," said President Thomas, of the Chicago Nationals. "Well, now, I'll hardly say that, either," he continued.

"A fellow who says he wouldn't part with anything for any price is very likely to exaggerate. I suppose McGraw could get Zimmerman. I might consider an offer of Burns, Fletcher and Fromme. But I will not say I would trade Heinie for these three players, at that."

Manager Hank O'Day appeared to consider McGraw's reported proposition in the light of a joke.

"He offered me Fromme and Stock for Zimmerman last time I was here," said the leader of the Cubs. "He was told then that Zimmerman was held more highly by us. I do not wish to part with Zimmerman. Nothing less than Burns and Fletcher would command a moment's reflection on my part."

O'Day thinks that Zimmerman's big stick may yet help bat out a pennant for the Cubs. "Hank," said President Thomas have been trying their hardest for the past two weeks to dig up a couple of pitchers. Weakness in the box has been the chief cause of the Cubs' failure to make up ground on the leaders, in O'Day's opinion. The pilot of the Cubs visited Long Branch Sunday to see Acosta, an Atlantic League pitcher who had been touted to him.

O'Day is very hopeful that Cheney will recover his effectiveness before the season is much older. The pitcher declares that his failure the last six weeks is due simply to staleness. This resulted from overwork in the early part of the campaign. Cheney says his arms feel as well as ever for two or three innings, but that it tires quickly.

O'Day is very much impressed with Claude Derrick, the former shortstop of the New York Americans, recently secured from the Baltimore Orioles. Up to last Saturday Derrick's fielding with Chicago was extremely sensational. The tall southerner did not hit exceptionally well immediately upon promotion, but in his last few games has shown such a decided improvement in this line as to encourage renewed hope. Shortstop has been one of the few weak spots on the Windy City team this season—outside of pitching, of course.

WINNER OF DIAMOND SCULLS ISSUES DEFI TO BARRY

London, Aug. 14.—Sinigaglia, the giant Italian amateur sculler, who defeated the best that England and America could produce at Henley, and won the Diamond Sculls, is anxious to enter the professional ranks. He has issued a challenge to Ernest Barry, the present professional champion. He stipulates, however, that the race shall be rowed on Lake Como, in Italy, where he has done most of his rowing, and Barry is just as insistent that it should take p mec toanhgSES it should take place on the Thames, his home water. The Italian offered Barry $1,500 to go to Italy, but the Englishman refused. As holder of the championship he considers that aspirants should come to him.

Sinigaglia has proved himself a wonderful sculler, despite his erratic steering. This would have lost most scullers the race at Henley, but the Italian would run into log booms, take a zigzag course up the river and still beat his man by lengths. None of those he met at Henley were anywhere near a match for him.

ORILLIA HOCKEY CLUB MUST FIND SOME NEW MATERIAL

Most of Junior Champions Are Now Over Age Limit —Butterfield With Preston

Orillia, Aug. 14.—Appearances indicate that Orillia will have plenty of good material for an intermediate hockey team next winter. In order to qualify for a place on an O. H. A. team, players are required to be residing at a town at least by the first of August. Most of last year's players both in the junior and intermediate series were in Orillia on the 1st. The junior team will of course be nearly new, as most of the champions have passed the age limit. Quinn Butterfield is at Preston, and it is understood will play with the intermediates there. Johnston, the junior goal keeper, is with Wiarton for next winter.

Free Correspondence Course

Several competent educators have declared that no one thing in their line has had such a marked effect in developing the youth of our land as the invention and practical application of the many correspondence school courses. One interesting phase of the subject is the wide range of such studies now available. There seems to be no limit to the possibilities.

And now it is sports. Do you want to become a "fan" as quickly as possible? You can do it without even attending a game by consistently following up our Summer Pastime, now running in this paper. And at the same time you stand a good chance of winning some of the many prizes for proficiency. Isn't this well worth while?

COMMENT

As You Like It

Jack Spratt's pitching gave the L.C.I. a victory by 11-1 at Lindsay. Spratt did not give a hit and he fanned thirteen batters.

Doc Reisling's troupe opened an engagement in Ottawa yesterday and scored right off the reel. The attendance was quite large and the performers held the interest of the vast throng, throughout the entire program. The work of Mr. Heine Steiger was the best seen in Ottawa for some time.

Our own travellers to Toronto had an opportunity of witnessing the movies as Jup. Pluv stepped in and routed both teams and the spectator.

There is a letter in the sporting department for Jack Pilling, manager of the Red Caps. It is important.

BASEBALL DIPLOMACY.

How Connie Mack Arouses Confidence in His Players.

In the American Magazine Eddie Collins of the Philadelphia Athletics tells how Manager Connie Mack inspires his players with confidence in themselves:

"There comes to me an incident when he built McInnes' confidence wonderfully when Stuffy was still doing bench duty. In a game against Chicago a critical situation was looming up. In the eighth inning the score was 5 to 4 against us. After two were out Barry signaled and Lapp came to bat. By this time Mack was beginning to fidget and squirm uneasily in his seat, something he always does when the crisis of a game seems about to break. I heard Harry Davis, who was then captain, say:

"'Connie! Are you going to let — bat?'

"Davis had mentioned the pitcher, a notoriously weak hitter. I saw McInnes watching Mack out of the corner of his eye. The youngster trembled eagerly, hoping for a chance to go to bat in the pinch, and I think Mack saw him too, for he said to Davis rather loudly:

"'You know very well who is going to hit if Lapp gets on. There's only one man I'd put up—eh?'

"Davis inclined his head toward McInnes, and Mack nodded. McInnes saw all this, as Mack meant he should. Subsequently Lapp smashed out a two base hit, putting Barry on third, and McInnes, told to go to bat, rushed out from the dugout swelling with confidence. He had heard Mack as much as say there was 'no other man on the team he would trust in this pinch' but me. McInnes at that moment possessed overwhelming self confidence. A moment later he drove out the hit that won the game. Mack's little bit of diplomacy had met with success."

Tale of a Tail of a Stuffed Horse.

The stuffed representation of Napoleon's famous charger, Vizier, having worn out its third tail since its master's death, has recently been supplied with a fourth flowing appendage for the benefit of visitors to Paris. Vizier, except for its tail, is the "authentic" war horse ridden by Napoleon. After the animal's death the skin was stuffed and placed among the Napoleonic collection in the Invalides museum, and it became one of the objects which attract most of the attention of visitors. Of the three tails that have already disappeared at the hands of sightseers, despite the vigilance of the guardians, it is believed that at least two are in America in small detachments.

The Season's Offering.

Here's to the sweet girl graduate,
Very truly up to date!
On her patiently we wait,
Hoping we have met our fate,
For, to put the matter straight,
She can meet us at the gate
And upon her little slate
Put us down as second mate.

Oh, the sweet girl graduate,
Charming, bright and simply great!
We are here a candidate
For her favors, early, late.
We will call around at eight
Or the hour she'll designate.
For a ride or stroll or skate
We will gladly go her gait.

Yes, the sweet girl graduate
Has us going, we may state.
Here's our heart upon a plate.
May it prove a tempting bait,
And, no matter what the rate,
We will gladly pay the freight.

Princess of our heart's estate,
Be she Molly, Sue or Kate,
Belle, Elizabeth or Mate,
We are happy to relate
She has wholly turned our pate,
And to lose her we would hate.
Oh, the sweet girl graduate!

"Well," said Nuritch, who had been showing Kandor through his new house, "what do you think of the furnishin's?"

"They—er—show a great deal of taste," replied Kandor.

"Think so?"

"Yes, but it's all very bad."

"How is that?"

"Just a premature explosion."

"What caused it?"

"Yes."

"That so?"

"Yes; an automobile ran over him."

PRESENTATION OF GOLD WATCH AT AN OLD FASHIONED PICNIC; MASTER E. R. PAYNE THE WINNER

Yesterday afternoon there took place in the township of North Monaghan one of the old fashioned picnics, got up by the ladies of Public School district No. 1. It was held in the Elm Grove which borders on the Cavan Creek which at this point is held back by a small dam. The picnic was a great success in every particular. It is an annual picnic but this year it was made the occasion of a presentation of a watch to Master E. R. Payne, the winner of the prize for the Township of North Monaghan at the Entrance Examination. After the races were held under the direction of Adjt. McElhiney, of the Salvation Army, the prize was presented by Mr. Burnham who on being introduced said that he was pleased to be present not only to present the prize but also on the occasion of a picnic of this kind which revives the delightful old custom of meeting people under the best of all circumstances.

He said that he would like to remind the people that in this respect they were doing a great service because the bane of the present day was artificiality in everything and he reminded the winner of the prize also that the history of biography showed that while industry and energy were necessary, like the air we breathe, neither would furnish that great natural spring of strength and sweetness which flowed from a highly intellectualised human nature. The farther we attempted to remove ourselves from what God made us, the more we should err, and the less fruitful would be our efforts. He was pleased to see Mr. John Fowler, who, although he was 87 years of age and had a severe attack of whooping cough, still thought enough of the occasion to make the necessary effort to come out and patronize a real picnic. Adjt. McElhiney, Mr. Payne, the father of the boy, Miss Outram, the teacher to whose credit the training of Master Payne is due, and Mr. Gillespie, M. L. A., also spoke. Mr. Gillespie made a very happy reply to the request that he should be heard, and congratulated the people on the success of the picnic and the revival of the good old custom. The banquet under the trees was most sumptuous in every respect and was a credit to the ladies.

NO MEETING OF BOARD.

The meeting o fthe Board of Works billed for last night did not materialize as Ald. Duncan, Duffus, Stratton and McIntyre were the only members present.

NOVEL HANDKERCHIEFS.

A novelty is the crepe de chine handkerchief. It is made in all the lighter colors. Soft, dull blue, pink, yellow in several tones and gray are especially attractive.

Some of these handkerchiefs have hems an inch wide of a different color. Some have self colored hems, either wide or narrow.

Black handkerchiefs are now the craze of the fashionable set in London They are made in the very finest muslin or lawn and often spotted with a color or else brilliant hued initials adorn one corner.

Most of the new handkerchiefs appear to be obviously more ornamental than useful and are composed of the most filmy materials, even ninon not being considered too flimsy.

Very exquisite to go with the painted ninon gowns that are presently to be the rage are the tiny flowered morsels in white or the most delicate colors sprigged all over with violets or rosebuds. Others have borders of dogs' or cats' heads all round the inside of the hems.

Some women are having portraits of their pets embroidered in the corners of their handkerchiefs.

What has become of the old fashioned mother who thought that her small son was destined to become a great musician because he could get a tune out of a mouth organ ?

A home-made sauce for cold meat—Scrape a tablespoonful of horseradish, mix with one tablespoonful of mixed mustard, a teaspoonful of sugar, and four tablespoonfuls of vinegar.

F. C. WEBER

Proprietor of Peterboro's finest drug store will be opened for the public one week from Saturday instead of tomorrow, as announced. The new store of F. C. The store when completed will be the finest drug establishment in the city.

HOCH DER KAISER

Rear-Admiral Coughlan, of the United States navy, who has just retired, will be chiefly remembered because he recited "Hoch Der Kaiser" at a dinner of the Union League Club a couple of years ago, and almost created international complications by doing so. The verses are as follows:—

Der Kaiser von das Fatherland
Und Gott and I all dings command;
Ve two—ach! Don't you understand?
Meinself—und Gott!

Vile some men sing der bower divine,
Mein soldiers sing "Die Wacht am Rhein,"
Und drink der health in Rhenish wine
Of me—und Gott!

Dere's France, she swaggers all aroundt,
She's ausgespieldt — she's no aggound ;
To much we think she don't amound,
Meinself—und Grott!

She will not dare to fight again;
But if she shouldt, I'll showher blain
Dot Elsass and (in French) Lorrain
Are Mein—by Gott!

Dere's Grandma dinks she nicht schmall beer
Midt Boers and such she interferes;
She'll learn none owns dis hemisphere
But me—und Gott!

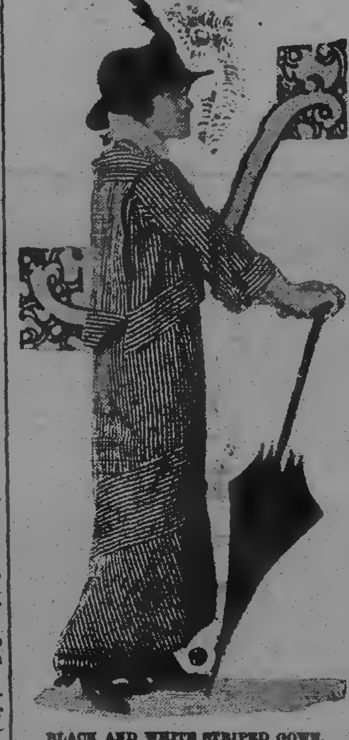
She dinks, good Frau, from ships she's got
Und soldiers midt der scarlet coat,
Ach! We could knock dem, Pouf! like flot,
Meinself—midt Gott!

In dimes of peace, prebare for wars,
I bear der helm and spear of Mars,
Und care not for den thousand Czars,
Meinself—midt Gott!

In fact I humor efry whim;
Mit aspect dark and visage grim;
Gott pulls mit Me and I mit Him,
Meinself—und Gott!

BLACK AND WHITE.

The Favored Combination For Smart Gowns In Paris.



BLACK AND WHITE STRIPED GOWN.

Even when cotton materials are selected there is a distinct tendency to favor striped or lined materials. The summer outing suit illustrated here is of black and white striped cotton fabric with Roman striped ribbon on the collar.

The black of the early season has been replaced by black and white, and it is hard these days to tell who is in mourning and who is not unless a crape or ribbon edged mourning veil droops from the hat.

Thin white waists are made all the whiter by strings of black beads falling over the front, and sometimes the black beads are echoed by a tiny smart bow of black moire or grosgrain ribbon set at the crossing of the surpliced waist front.

With tailleurs of black pussy willow taffeta, mohair and worsted mixture or poplin, all favored for the season's wear, these white waists with their black beads and bows are extremely chic even though decidedly suggestive of half mourning.

Cotton Duvetyn.

Duvetyn of the cotton variety is a good deal in demand this summer. It is delightfully soft and pliable and adapts itself well to the new styles. The duvetyn that was worn last winter was found to fray very easily and for that reason did not quite bear out the promises that were made for it. But the manufacturers say that the new duvetyn is more durable and substantial than the old. White skirts are made to wear with colored jackets of the same material.

Bordered Veiling.

According to the Dry Goods Economist, the strong vogue for bordered effects has resulted in the production of an exceedingly clever double bordered veil. This novelty has a different pattern on each edge of the veiling so that it can be made to serve the purpose of entirely two different bordered veils. Sometimes a narrow floral border will appear on one edge and a velvet or chenille dotted border on the other.

KAISER IS GREATEST GAMBLER IN WORLD, SAYS N.Y. HERALD

The fact that Germany declared war on England before England declared war on Germany does not indicate that war was any more welcome at Berlin, writes the London correspondent of the New York Herald, but in the preliminaries to this unparalleled trouble there has been a singular miscalculation of the underlying forces.

William II. could not possibly have dreamed that Austro-Hungary's attempt to chastise Servia would bring Russia into the field as an open antagonist. He could not have dreamed France would show the stiff backbone that has characterized her every move.

An Irresistible Destiny.

The Emperor appears to have been dragged along by an irresistible destiny into his present position. Having got started, he could not help himself.

With Russia on one side and France on the other, he appears to be determined that France must be attacked and defeated quickly or he is gone, horse, foot and guns.

Thus irresistible destiny drove him into Belgium in order that he might get into France in a hurry, and all the while Germany's Ambassador in Londoen, Prince Lichnowsky, with honeyed words, was seeking to persuade the Liberal government to remain neutral.

Those who have looked on believe now the German Emperor must be the greatest gambler in the world. He staked his empire, his army, his navy, his crown upon the neutrality of Great Britain, and that same irresistible destiny that has dragged his dominating, strong willed character onward has decreed that the Liberal government should be willing to fight, whereas William divined there was no fight in it at all.

So, at the last moment, to save his face, he made war upon Great Britain, knowing that he had gone so far in Belgium that he could not retreat, and that England surely would declare war upon him.

All Against Germany.

Everybody's hand now is against Germany.

German policy is being execrated wherever the English tongue is spoken.

The statemnt is made here that Germany, in order to frighten the English financial interests, actually spent $10,000,000 bearing stocks during the two or three days preceding the closing of the Stock Exchange.

Scotland Yard detectives, in searching the German quarter, have discovered in the possession of German butchers and others large numbers of bombs and rifles, indicating that the prospect of a German uprising right in the city of London has not been entirely a dream on the part of E. Phillips Oppenheim and novelists of that type.

PRINCE ALEXANDER TAKES GREAT INTEREST IN SCOUTS

During his term of office His Royal Highness, the Duke of Connaught, Chief Scout Master for Canada, has rendered invaluable service to the Scout movement, and will be greatly missed when he leaves. Prince Alexander of Teck, however, is no less interested in the Scout scheme and will doubtless carry on the good work of his predecessor.

Sir Robert Baden-Powell has recently been on several tours of inspection in various countries, and, writing afterwards to one of the county commissioners, giving the impressions of his visit, he stated that it was essential for the commissioners to have a grasp of their subject and plenty of keenness and energy in carrying out inspections, and in helping, as far as they could, their troops to go into camp frequently, for it was mainly in camp that the training underlying scouting could be readily carried into effect. It was also essential, he said, that the scoutmasters should be sincerely actuated by the intentions and aims of the movement in all their doings. It was necessary to employ plenty of "give and take" and self-denial, and to give ready response to the guidance of their commissioners. It was their business to "enthuse" the boys in taking up their work by employing imagination and originality in devising games, practices, and competitions. In a number of cases this had evidently been done already by scoutmasters, but in others they were adhering too much to rather "played-out ideas."

Local rallies, he considered, had a good effect in bringing scoutmasters together, and enabling them to compare notes and experiences, and it was in this way that it was possible to arrive at a good standard of training all round. He emphasized the importance of putting responsibility more liberally on the shoulders of the patrol leaders, as he had found that where this was properly done, and due regard paid to the "Court of Honor" carrying out its duties, there had followed a great development of efficiency, discipline and vitality.

International Visit.

During this summer a large number of scouts from Great Britain will go over to the continent to visit their brother scouts in France, Germany, Holland, Denmark and other countries ; also many troops from abroad are being entertained by British scouts. The Dutch scouts, for instance, are holding a big camp at the old Roman tower of Nijmvegen from August 4 to 11, and have invited English Scouts to be present.

Sir Robert Baden-Powell has sent the following message to the promoters of an international scout camp which is to be held in Denmark this year :

"I am much interested to hear of the scout camp that takes place in August in Denmark. I hope that the representatives of the various countries who are going to be present will not only have a thoroughly enjoyable time, but that they will also make many lasting friendships with their comrades from other countries, and thus form an additional proof that the bond of the scout brotherhood is stronger than any difference of race, religion, or class."

The Chief Scout is now making a special appeal to the yachtsmen of England on behalf of the endowment fund, which has reached the sum of £73,000. The Sea Scouts are training themselves to become reliable and capable seamen, and the movement is one which is valuable alike for service in the Royal Navy, the mercantile marine, or yachts' crews.

Sea Scouts.

Admiral Prince Louis of Battenberg has written to Sir Robert Baden-Powell as follows :

"I have no hesitation in saying that the training it is proposed to give the Sea Scouts is an admirable preparation for taking up sea life as a profession later on, be it in the King's ships, the mercantile marine, or in yachts. Lads that have had the love of the sea inculcated at an early age, who realize what discipline in its highest form means, who are taught to be resourceful and self-reliant, must be the best material for the crew of any craft plowing the sea, in whatever pursuit. We, of the King's service will watch with keen interest the progress of this new branch of your great work."

Lord Charles Beresford, the Chief Sea Scout writes: "I have the greatest belief in the future of the Sea Scouts, more particularly if yacht clubs, shipowners and others give us some measure of support. Nearly all British boys have a wistful longing for sea life and its adventures. They know that at sea they must learn readiness of resource, independence of action, good comradeship, forethought, discipline, loyalty and unselfishness. The sea creates and helps these characteristics."

HORTICULTURE

Don't stop cultivation in the flower or vegetable garden now. Keep the soil loose and the weeds out.

That the garden may look its best, pick the flowers constantly ; pansies, sweet peas, and roses especially. The best time to pick flowers is in the morning and evening when the sun is not bright and the plants are fresh.

Trim the hedge, but do not give a severe pruning.

It is time to make up lists of tulips and other bulbs that are to be planted in quantity this Fall. Send to some of the large importers of bulbs for their catalogues. Tulips, crocus, and daffodils do well outside.

Blight, a fungus disease, is liable to cause trouble this month. For the large garden, spraying with bordeaux is the best remedy. The most common formula is four pounds of lime, four pounds of copper sulphate, and forty gallons of water. Dissolve the bluestone in a fairly large quantity of water, slake the lime separately, mix the two solutions, and dilute the required quantity.

For the small garden the most convenient remedy for fungus diseases is to powder the leaves with flowers of sulphur or a mixture of flowers of sulphur and lime.

Would you enjoy the novelty of a few strawberries during the winter ? Put some plants in pots, plunge the pots out of doors, and bring them into the house in the Fall.

The old blackberry and raspberry canes should be cut as soon as fruiting is over. At the same time the young growth should be pruned back to a convenient height, say three and one half to four feet. Next year's crop will be increased by judicious pruning.

August is the insect month. Dusting the plants with lime is the safest treatment for cabbage worm ; poisons are too dangerous. Arsenate of lead is becoming popular as a poison spray ; it sticks to the foliage well.

Cultivation of bush plants should soon cease. If you have a fair-sized patch, it is good practice to sew a cover crop ; rye is suitable. Another plan is to give a mulching of manure.

Strawberries may be planted now if the soil is in good condition and moist. For raising very choice berries, one method is to set the plants one foot apart each way and trim off all runners. Every four rows a row may be skipped to leave a path.

Red raspberries are propagated by suckers which come up around the old plants. These may be taken up in the Autumn, heeled in during the Winter, and set out in a permanent bed the next Spring.

If you have a hotbed, cucumbers can be sown now and they will fruit in early Winter.

The late sown crops should be given every opportunity to grow. Thin properly and cultivate.

If you intend taking a crop of strawberries from the old bed next year, cut off the runners and trim the plants a bit.

Bring carnations indoors to pots, boxes or benches in the greenhouse.

Rubber plants can be increased now by binding some moss about the stems and keeping them moist. When the roots form cut the stems below the moss and pot the new plants.

Autumn blooming crocuses, if planted now, will bloom this Fall.

Bulbs of Madonna lily, a beautiful hardy, white lily, should be planted. They will make a small growth this Fall, but no injury from frost will result.

Black raspberries and dewberries are propagated by layering. The tips of the canes are bent over to the ground and covered with dirt to a depth of about four inches as soon as the fruiting season is past.

Celery is a moisture-loving plant. See that it gets plenty of moisture.

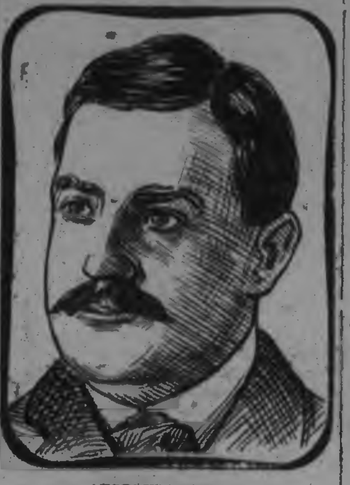
PRICE 2 CENTS

CANADIAN IS HONORED

Auguste Lemieux, K.C., is an Officer D'Academie.

Auguste Lemieux, K.C., a well-known barrister of Ottawa and brother of Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, has been notified by the consul-general of France in Montreal, that by order-in-council the Minister of Public Instruction, now Premier of France, has been pleased to confer on him the Order of Officer d'Academie, in recognition of his proficiency in French literature and his efforts for promoting French culture and looking after French interests generally in Canada.



AUGUSTE LEMIEUX.

The decoration consists of two academic palms in gold entwined together and studded with diamonds and rubies, supported by a rich royal blue silk ribbon.

The every-day decoration for street wear consists of a pair of gold palms entwined and a small knot of royal blue ribbon. This is worn in the buttonhole. Mr. Lemieux has been practicing law in Ottawa for some years and has a large circle of friends.

St. George's Dragon.

There has always been a good deal that is mythical about the dragon, though biologists tell us the skeletons of snakes lends some credence to the notion of flying serpents. Usually in literature the dragon is associated with the author of all evil, the devil. The ancient banner of the British kings bore the device of a dragon, and the leader of the others in war was termed the pendragon. Before the conversion of the Emperor Constantine, the old Lebarum, or standard of the Roman army, bore a bronze dragon and the bearer of the Roman standard, even after the cross replaced the dragon, was styled a "draconarius," or dragon bearer. According to the teaching of the Greek Catholic Church—Greece has the same national saint as Great Britain—St. George is to be described as "tropalophoros," or standard bearer (in Greek). Our enquirer will remember that in the old church windows and pictures St. George is commonly depicted with a standard. He would therefore bear the Latin title of dragon-man, or dragon-bearer, and the legend would easily spring into being, of his encounter with a dragon. Still there is "Sir Bevis" and Spenser's "laidly worm" to be reckoned with, and it might upset heraldry to some extent if we altogether disposed of St. George's Dragon in so prosaic a manner as is here suggested.

Cost of Honors List.

The long list of birthday honors recently issued in London will provide the Treasury with a sum of about $3,350 in fees for grants of letters-patent. Lord Kitchener, who occupied the most prominent position on the list, will also have to draw the largest check. His new dignity will cost him $1,250.

The four barons must each pay $750, and the eight baronets will contribute between them $4,000. The peers and the new Knight of the Garter will require robes costing between $250 and $350 each; grants of arms may be desired.

In addition, a variety of licences for painting arms on motor-cars or embossing them on notepaper may be necessary. While some of the fees are comparatively heavy, they are much lighter than in the days of James I., when a baronet, for instance, had to maintain thirty soldiers, or in default pay $5,475 per annum into the Exchequer.

Will Lecture In India.

Leave of absence, in order that he may conduct a course of lectures in Lahore, India, has been granted to Prof. James Mavor, of Toronto University, by the board of governors of the university. Prof. Mavor is at present touring in the Western Provinces, and will proceed to the Orient early in September. The professor is famous as the author of a monumental work on the study of Russian economics; a subject which has engaged his attention for many years.

Smoking and Drinking Less.

The decrease in the consumption of liquor and tobacco by Canadians continues. During the month of June the inland revenue of the Dominion was $1,715,007. During June, 1913, that revenue was $1,785,230.

Penny-In-the-Slot.

The death is announced of Mr. Thomas Thorp, F. R. A. S., of Whitefield, Eng., who placed the first penny-in-the-slot gas meter upon the market. He made it at his own works, and the invention was first used in Casino Street, Liverpool. For a lifetime he had been engaged in scientific research, and some of his many inventions have far-reaching effect upon the scientific and commercial world, particularly in relation to the use of gas.

He was awarded the Wilde Premium, a much-coveted honor for original research, and he won many medals at national and international exhibitions. He was connected with most of the leading scientific societies in the country, and had served on the committees of the British Association.

Picked by Machine.

A motor cotton picker which works successfully and economically has been invented.

RATTLERS IN ONTARIO

Their Present Haunts Are Chiefly Around Georgian Bay.

Rattlesnakes—! Ontario has them in plenty, but in such barren, out-of-the-way places that they do not constitute anything like a public menace, as the big diamond-back rattler does in certain of the southerly United States. Niagara Falls vicinity once abounded with rattlers—big, venomous ones, the worst in the province, but they are gone now, even from the hidden grottoes of the falls, where were their special hives. And now, those that still live in the province are chiefly restricted to the shores and the barren rock lands of the Georgian Bay, and one or two are occasionally reported from Muskoka, and from the Eastern counties. The Western provinces and Canadian prairies have numerous prairie rattlesnakes, but they are a different species.

Now, the rock rattlesnake whose acquaintance some Georgian Bay summer cottagers will likely make, is poisonous. It has been examined by the biological authorities of Toronto University, and found to have a fine pair of fangs, a pair of poison glands in good working order, and a poison of a quality, while much milder than that of the big diamond-back, is yet strong enough to almost instantly kill mice and squirrels, and, while no human has offered himself to the test and there is no sure local record of a death from a rattlesnake bite, it is claimed that it would kill a child in half an hour, and would kill a grown man if the man were not in the best of condition.

In the first place the snake seldom grows more than three feet in length, is usually shorter and is thick for its length. The head is small, and about the shape of the end joint of the thumb. In color the rattler is dark, dusky brown, with vague large spots of a deeper brown almost completely covering it. On the end of the tail are the rattles, a grey jointed apparatus that grows out of the skin the way finger nails do. The snake vibrates the end of its tail tensely, and these rattles buzz with a dry whispering but far-reaching sound which sends a queer, creepy shiver through the nerves of one, even, who does not know what the sound is. In the mouth of the snake are the two fangs, slim and delicately curved like kitten's claws, and about half an inch long. These are attached towards the front of the mouth and lie backwards in soft cushions of flesh in the roof of the snake's mouth. When about to strike the snake opens its mouth wide, until upper, and lower jaws are in a flat line. The two fangs then rise up and stand out at right angles.

The snake strikes downwards, not jabbing as much as scratching with its fangs. And when the fangs scratch they are pressed upward by the blow, and their bases are pressed against the little poison sacks. And through tiny holes up through the fangs the poison is squirted on the principle of a syringe.

The snake can only strike with one-half its length. It cannot jump off the ground or stand on the tip of its tail, as some Munchausens relate. It coils into a compact pile and leaps with all its force. But it reaches only as far as it could when extended.—Star Weekly.

Lifeboat With Human Motor.

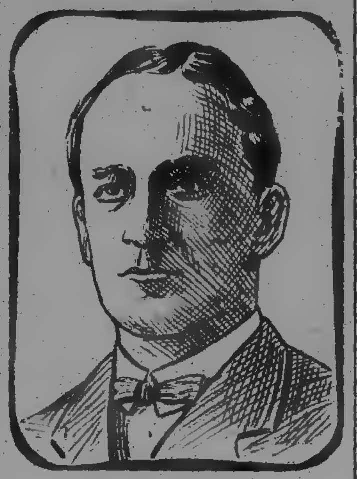
A lifeboat driven by a propeller which is worked by the crew, the invention of Mr. Winzer, was tried recently in the Surrey Commercial Docks by Board of Trade officials.

Four handles are provided, connected together in such a way that a crew of eight people can work the propeller, and crews of men and women were tried with good results. The lifeboat was loaded up to its full capacity—thirty-nine people, or the equivalent weight—and a speed between two and three miles an hour was reached. The boat also has a reverse motor. In bad weather it is claimed that the boat would be much more manageable than if propelled by oars.

SIR MAX AITKEN IS A KIPLING ENTHUSIAST

A Chance Encounter on Miramichi Led to Politics.

"When I first met Sir Max Aitkin," remarked a Canadian commercial man the other day, "it was at Truro, N.S., in 1906. Missing my train, I had to kill the day, and spent most of it in the public gardens—to my mind the most beautiful natural park in Canada. I got talking to a young chap there — stranded like myself—who gave his name as W. M. Aitkin. Fine, large speaking eyes of greyish blue he had, spread well apart. His firm-set jaw and forceful lips impressed me. He told me his age, 27; it wouldn't have surprised me had he said '18 except for the dominating strength of his features. I remember that his head struck me a size too large for this slight, fair-haired chap, plainly far from robust. His wide range of reading gained my interest at once. Happening to ring in a Mulvaney quotation that came pat, he told me how he had recently met the great Rudyard on the Miramichi river, and, being a Kipling enthusiast myself, his lively account of his intimate intercourse with the poet-novelist for several days was appreciated.



SIR MAX AITKEN, M.P.

"Later, having been asked to Aitkins' room at our hotel, I found him clicking away at a typewriter, and he satisfied my unuttered query at once. 'Insurance!' said he. 'There's a lot of correspondence about this game. Some people seem to think insurance men are bores and insurance a cross. If it's a cross they ought to carry it; how's that?'—with the brightest of smiles. I only mention that because everything I've read about the wonderful after-success of Sir Max enlarges on his seriousness alone. I've heard nothing wittier than the reception he depicted awaiting me when I reached Glace Bay with my millinery samples. He had just come from the little coal town, and told how a hustling hat man had already covered the ground, so that every store in the place was knee-deep in be-ribboned headgear—more than could be used in the place in five years. 'There's only one order he didn't get,' joked Aitkin, 'and it may be it will be yours—getting the Dominion Coal to buy bonnets for their mules in the underground workings.' Such side-lights on the chap who put himself through school, had started to write insurance before he shaved, was worth over a million at 30, and at 31 was a member of the British House of Commons, have kept alive my interest in Sir Max. And, by the way, when he first went to England the first person this meteoric Canadian went to see was his chance acquaintance of the Miramichi. Kipling was delighted to renew friendship, and introduced him to many influential people, among them the Right Hon. Arthur Balfour and Bonar Law. It was through the latter, of course—a Canadian like himself—that the erstwhile insurance purveyor entered the political lists at Ashton-under-Lyne and won out." — Toronto Star Weekly.

Bethia's Blunder.

Some years ago a thrifty old cottager named Bethia Rummy attended service every Sunday morning at the little church of St. Elzevir, some two miles distant from her cottage, on a hillside in Derbyshire, England. As regular in her provision for temporal wants as she was in attendance to spiritual necessities, her custom was to place a piece of bacon in a pot near the fire to be ready cooked against her return. Then, with her big Prayer Book wrapped in a snowy handkerchief, Bethia trudged off to St. Elzevir's. One Sunday, however, she came late and flustered to her usual place, just in front of the reading-desk, and, to her vicar's astonishment, remarked, as she unfolded the snowy handkerchief: "Lawk a daisy me, if I haven't biled the Prayer Book, and brought the bacon to church!"

Midsummer Fire.

The old Midsummer Fire festival, of Druidical origin, is still celebrated on the Continent, but there is probably only one spot in Great Britain where it is still observed, and that is Tarbolton, in Ayrshire.

For days before the festival the village lads collect materials for the great bonfire. The fuel is built upon an altar of turf, and a match is applied at sunset, after which the folk solemnly march around the blaze and the daring youngsters vie with one another in dashing through the flames.

ISLANDERS TALK UNION

Newfoundland Looks at Federation For First Time in Twenty Years.

For the first time in twenty years the Newfoundland newspapers and a goodly number of the people of the country are discussing the prospect of the colony combining with the Dominion of Canada as a really serious political issue in the island.

Although the question has figured in various election campaigns and each political party has tried to fasten on the other the odium of being pro-union, the charges and counter-charges then made and in some cases supported by seemingly irrefutable evidence that plans for selling the country were on foot, the situation was never regarded by the really thinking people as it is at present, when one of the leading daily newspapers on the Island—the Evening Telegram, an organ of the Liberal party for many years and mouthpiece of Sir Robert Bond, who led the Opposition party in the general election last fall—has opened its columns for a discussion of the subject for and against union, while another paper, the Mail-Advocate, organ of the Fishermen's Union or Coakerite wing of the Opposition, is outspoken in declaring that the policy of the present Administration can have no other result than to force the country to unite with the Dominion.

In population Newfoundland had 146,536 in 1869 and 242,996 in 1911, an increase of almost 66 per cent. in forty-five years. The population of the Maritime Provinces in 1871 was 767,415 and in 1911 was only 937,956, or an increase of but 22 per cent. in forty years, or an increase of but fourteen per cent. in the same period.

In the past fifty years her codfishery flotilla has doubled in number and quadrupled in tonnage; she has maintained and succeeded in the seal-fishery when Dundee and Halifax have abandoned it, and she is now prosecuting it with splendid steamships and reaping a bounteous harvest from it every spring. She enterprised the modern method of whale-hunting before Canada attempted it; her herring fishery became so important as to compel England and America to resort to The Hague tribunal for an arbitrament upon issues arising out of it. Her bait industry became so pivoted that her enactment to regulate it proved a stone from a David's sling, that lay low the Goliath, France, reduced the Gallic islets of St. Pierre-Miquelon to beggary, and enabled Newfoundland to re-establish herself in the European markets from which French bounty-fed competition had almost driven her.

Within thirty years she has built 1,000 miles of excellent railway, provided a fleet of twelve coastwise steamers tapping every section of the island of Labrador, and superior to anything of their kind in Eastern Canada, set up 2,500 miles of telegraph lines, erected eighty lighthouses, and doubled the outlay on the various public services by which the mass of the people benefit directly. Her exports have grown from $5,000,000 to $15,000,000. her imports being in the same proportion and her revenue from $1,000,000 to $4,000,000. The material prosperity, too, of the people has been enhanced in a still greater degree. She has overcome the consequences of a fire that devasted St. John's, in 1892, causing a loss of $20,000,000, with only $5,000,000 of insurances, a bank crash that nearly beggared her two years later, and the vicissitudes of the fishing industry in recent years, with a loss of millions of dollars of local capital.

Ordered Out of Court.

Col. J. S. Denison, police magistrate of Toronto, was ordered out of the police court in Montreal a few days ago. The colonel, who is visiting Montreal, thought he would like to see how justice was administered by the police court judges here. He entered the court and was then accosted by one of the orderlies, who asked him: "Are you a witness?"

The colonel said he was not.

"Are you a detective, plaintiff or defendant?" then asked the orderly, edging up to the magistrate.

Col. Denison again answered in the negative, and was then told to "get out."

The colonel asked if that was not a public court, and being told it was, walked right in and looked around, much to the astonishment of the orderly.

Stealing Grain.

Railway grain thieves have become so bold that the North-Western Railway of India are taking special precautions this grain season to prevent as far as possible the theft of grain bags from railway tracks coming to Karachi for despatch to foreign ports. These thefts during the last few years have become very frequent and have cost the railway management some lakhs of rupees. The method employed by the thieves is that of waiting at heavy gradients where the progress of the train is slow and mounting on open wagons, from which they throw the bags on the line. The carrying of police guards on the trains has not so far proved effective, and the railway authorities are now placing one of their smartest traffic inspectors on special duty to investigate all thefts as soon as reported.

BACK FROM FAR NORTH WITH FUND OF INFORMATION

M. Vanasse Tells of Native Lamps Which Furnishes Light and Heat.

Special reports of the officers who were appointed to take a census of the inhabitants of the Far North have been compiled by the census and statistics branch. These reports are of more than ordinary interest at least from an ethological, if not from a statistical point of view.

M. Fabian Vanasse, historiographer of the Canadian Government steamship "Arctic" under Captain Bernier, was appointed to take the census of Baffin Island and took in addition the census of Kilkenek, or Port Burwell, on the south side of Hudson Straits. His report contains the following interesting remarks as to conditions amongst the Eskimos. "The lamps which are used by hunters to light and heat their iglos, as also to cook with, are nothing more than a stone block of about eight to ten inches in circumference in which is carved a semi-circular cavity about three inches deep. This cavity is filled with seal oil, then a wick made of dry moss is placed around this bowl, and when this primitive wick is well soaked with oil it is lighted. The lamp gives a dim light and produces a heat of about two or three degrees. This affords all the light and all the heat which is enjoyed by the Eskimo during his existence in his house of snow. The yearly value of the hunt for each Eskimo hunter is placed at $800 or $1,000 on the premises. If this forsaken one of civilization were living in the proximity of our competitive markets, if he knew the value of the products of the hunt, if he was more concerned about the future, he might live in modest comfort, in spite of all the inconveniences he has to suffer from the inhospitable climate where God has placed him. But unfortunately the Eskimo has no idea of the economic values he holds in his hands after his slaughter of 10 or 20 polar bears, his capture of 25, 30 and sometimes 100 foxes, of two, three or four narwals, of eight to ten wolves, of hundreds of large salmon, each weighing 10, 20, or 30 pounds, and which he throws to his dogs. Besides this he is cheated odiously each year by the skimmers of the sea who visit him to collect his furs. At the trading counters he exchanges for a few pounds of biscuits and tobacco, a few quarts of molasses, pipes, matches and some few yards of showy cotton goods, his silky furs of the greatest economic value.

"Generally speaking, the Eskimo does not attain a very advanced age. Some have been met, however, aged 60 to 65 years. The average length of life of this people is from 35 to 40 years. There is no settled age for domestic pairing. There are couples of nine and twelve years; then children live together in the iglo as man and wife. The chief provides regularly for the wants of his companion. After a few months, and even a few years of this apprenticeship in married life, if any friction occurs under the iglo between the two apprentices, the couple separate without noise, and for the two life has to begin over again. A Christian can hardly honor with the name of "marriage" the unions formed under the iglo of the Eskimo. These unions are, for the most part, simply promiscuous pairings. But it must be said, to the honor of the Eskimos of Baffin Island, that this sad state of affairs tends more and more to disappear among these tribes. The zealous work of the Anglican unions among this people during thirty years has largely contributed to diminish, or even extirpate entirely this pagan vice, destroyer of the family and domestic happiness."

The visit to the domicile, or the iglo, M. Vanasse writes, is not what one may think. The iglo is of circular form, eight feet in diameter and as much in height. It is made of blocks of snow, the door is at the bottom, on a level with the ground, it is about one foot and a half wide by two feet high. It is not every one that can pass through it easily. To get in one must at first get on his knees, then lie flat on his stomach and slide in, snake-like, for a distance of about ten or twelve feet in the door. One never gets in and comes out of it spotless, for this vestibule is not kept in an exaggerated state of cleanliness. Once in the iglo you are asked to sit on a block of snow, which is covered with a deer-skin. In less than five minutes you are covered with the white hairs of this fur. But after a few visits to the domicile one does not notice these small details. The interpreter is alongside of you. Naturally this brave man, the sage of the village, has no idea of what constitutes a census. He has to be made to understand the questions put to the head of the iglo. There are English and French words which have no equivalent in the language of the Eskimo. Thus, for example, the words "years," "months," "days," "hours" are denominations of time absolutely ignored by the natives. These are so many mysteries to them.

"What is your age?" was invariably answered by "none savi mi." Then, M. Vanasse writes, he had to enter a conversation, carried on much more by gestures than by the voice, with the interpreter, in order to make him understand the question. This done, the interpreter and the hunter, or the wife of the latter in his absence, made endless calculations. It was a review of all the important events in the country from as far back as the hunter could remember, and the farthest away event was used as a basis to determine as near as possible the date of his birth.

Canal Tonnage Falls Off.

Canadian canal tonnage up to July 1 of this year amounts to 11,997,891, which is a comparative decline of nearly 4,000,000 tons, the figures for the same period of last year having been 15,783,093 tons. Most of the decrease was at the Soo, on account of less iron ore carriage.

Boers Are Hostile.

Anti-English feeling is pretty strong in many of the country districts of the South African Union as an after effect of the industrial troubles. One significant incident is reported from Trompsburg, a town in the Orange River Colony. An English traveling theatrical company, which had engaged a hall in the town, was refused the use of the hall and informed that English were not wanted. It is declared that in many parts of the country racial feeling is rampant.

SOME CHRISTIAN STORIES MAY HAVE COME FROM EAST

Interesting evidence that the Buddhist writings contain stories and parables that are repeated in the Christian Gospels is discussed in a recent article by A. J. Edmunds, who with Mr. Anesaki, a Japanese scholar, has been making an exhaustive comparison of Christian and Buddhist scriptures, and has tabulated the result in a monumental work entitled "Christian and Buddhist Gospels."

Buddha, founder of the Buddhist religion, lived about six hundred years before the Christian era. Hence the suggestion of the theological magazine means that part of what we regard as Christian teachings originated with Buddha.

These Buddhistic teachings are found in "The Psalms of the Brethren," "The Psalms of the Sisters" and a "Compendium of Philosophy," three very ancient Buddhist works that have just been translated into English by Mrs. Rhys Davids.

"The Psalms of the Brethren" contains sayings ascribed to Buddha, and is said to have been written not later than 250 B. C.

Here is one passage which parallels a famous sentence in the New Testament. A nun was persistently tempted by a libertine and plucked out her eye. "There!" she exclaimed, "take your eye," and gave it to him. "One cannot help being haunted by the suspicion," says The Theological Review, "that this story became as famous as other Buddhist legends which we now know to have been translated into the vernaculars of the Parthian Empire, the buffer state between Palestine and India. Why should not the story have been familiar to him who said: 'If thine eye cause thee to offend, pluck it out!' "

These Buddhist works also tell a story of a "penitent thief" and a "beloved disciple," both of which suggest the corresponding figures in the New Testament. The story of the penitent thief is said to bear a particularly close resemblance to that of the Gospels. The reviewer explains this by the fact that the Buddhist writings were translated into the language of Persia, which was the favorite means of communication in the lifetime of the Apostles between Palestine and India and the farther countries of the East. It is possible, the writer suggests, that the people of the Holy Land were quite familiar with Buddhism.

"Certain it is," he writes, "that so early as 2 B. C. the Buddhist 'Sutras' were translated into a vernacular. This vernacular was not Chinese, for the 'Annals' declare that the religion, though known in China then, was not believed in. Moreover, the vernacular translation was presented to a Chinese official by an ambassador from the great Yue-chi that people whose coins have come down to us with Greek on one side and Pali on the other. Was the vernacular Greek itself? Probably not. More likely it was Tokharish or Sogdian, known to have been used by that people. Specimens of Buddhist books in both tongues have been found in Central Asia. And both were current in portions of the great Parthian empire.

"Such being the case, we need not be astonished if Luke and John had heard of two towering characters in these 'Psalms of the Monks,' viz., the Penitent Thief and the Beloved Disciple. Yes, here they both are, as large as life. Indeed, their absence would raise doubts as to the antiquity and genuineness of the 'Psalms,' so prominent are these characters in the oldest books and sculptures. Quite the reverse would be the case with the gospels. Were we to find a recension of Luke without the Penitent Thief we should say at once, 'That looks like an earlier edition.' And why? Because Luke has to do violence to the text of his master, Mark, to get the story into the Gospel at all. Compare the synoptic narratives:

> " 'And they that were crucified with him reproached him.' (St. Mark, chap. xv., verse 32.)
>
> " 'And the robbers also that were crucified with him cast upon Him the same reproach.' St. Matthew, chap. xxvii, verse 44.)
>
> " 'And one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on him . . . But the other answered and rebuking him, said . . . . (St. Luke, chap. xxix., verses 39-40.)

"Why is Luke so anxious to introduce this character at variance with the older tradition? The answer is that he was a student of religion, and in the Syrian metropolis, which was the terminus of the Chinese silk trade, he had seen Kanishka's coins, which even now are found from India to Sweden. Upon these coins he had seen the name of Buddha in Greek letters.

"He had inquired who this Buddha was, and had found that he was the founder of a missionary religion of love and foregiveness, whose scriptures were being translated into Sogdian and Tokharish, two vernaculars of the neighboring Parthian empire. Scenes from these scriptures were being carved on temple gates in that empire, which ancient geography shows us was studded with a long line of hotels from Luke's own city to the Hindu frontier. He could not escape this knowledge in that great international metropolis. As a poet and an evangelist he made it his business to adapt the new Christian religion to the Gentile world. The Fathers of the Church are unanimous about this, as we all know."

"Will my husband live, doctor?"

"Well, madam, if he doesn't he'll come mighty close to it."

Zoology and Flags.

Zoology figures very largely on the flags of different nations. On the British royal standard is the lion. It was Richard Coeur de Lion, by the way, who altered the device from leopards to lions on the King's standard. The eagle appears on the standards of both Russia and Germany and both the lion and the eagle on that of Spain. Bulgaria has a lion and Mexico a bird quarreling with a snake. Taken together with the animals that appear on nations' arms the royal unicorn and Australian emu and kangaroo, a fairly comprehensive collection could be made from the various national emblems.

Armies and Navies Of Opposing Forces

Great Britain and Her Allies the Advantage in Numbers.

The following tables showing the strength of the armies and navies of the principal powers concerned in the present war are from the latest available figures. It will be seen Britain's navy is overwhelmingly larger than that of Germany and Austria combined. Britain's army is given only on a peace footing, but the war strength of her land forces is immeasurably greater, with her millions of subjects at home and in her colonies to call upon.

The Legion of Honor

The first decorations of the Legion of Honor, the famous French order of merit, were conferred in 1802 upon military and civil officers who had distinguished themselves under the consulates. The order was found ed May 19, 1802, by Napoleon, when he was first consul. The order was confirmed by Louis XVIII. when the Bourbons were returned to the throne and it has been continued, through the reigns of Charles X. Louis Philippe, Napoleon III. and the second and third republics. Many British subjects and other foreigners have received the decoration of the Legion of Honor.

Promises in Politics.

During a municipal campaign in Chicago a politician dropped in one morning to see a certain grocer. During the conversation that took place the politician asked, "And I may count upon your support, may I not?"

"Why, no, I am sorry to say," replied the grocer. "The fact is, I have promised my support to the other candidate."

The politician laughed. "Ah," said he, "in politics promising and performing are two different things."

"In that case," said the grocer cordially, "I shall be glad to give you my promise, sir."—Lippincott's.

For the Children

Biggest of All Dolls at the Panama Exposition.

© by Panama-Pacific Exposition Co.

Miss Panama Pankaline Imogen Equalrights is the lady's name. Her ninety foot stature is probably responsible for the length of her name. It is the reason, at any rate, for her boast of being the "biggest suffragette in the world."

The suffragette, as she is called for short on the exposition grounds, stands at the entrance of Toyland Grownup concession at the Panama-Pacific International exposition. She was in the midst of preparation for her first public appearance when the photograph was taken, when thousands of San Francisco's schoolchildren gathered on the exposition grounds to make merry.

The lady is clad in a long red cutaway coat and white skirt, with an up to date slit, and a bonnet seven feet in diameter. She also carries a huge drum, which she holds about forty feet from the ground, and a flagpole with a banner bearing the slogan "Votes For Women."

More than 500 yards of cloth are draped on the gigantic figure, and the material of her hat would be sufficient to stock an ordinary millinery store.

Flag Signals.

"Strike the flag" is to lower the colors in token of submission.

"Dipping the flag" is lowering it and hoisting it again in salute to a vessel or fort.

A "flag of truce" is a white flag taken before an enemy to indicate a desire for consultation.

The black flag from time immemorial has been unfurled as the flag of piracy.

A yellow flag flown from a vessel is a sign of disease and denotes quarantine.

A flag at half mast denotes mourning. When a man is lost at sea the vessel returns with its flag at half mast to announce the tidings of death.

When the president of the United States embarks in his barge the American flag is hoisted in the bow and at the main of the vessel.

Flags are everywhere used as the symbol of rank, and the officers whose rank is indicated by them are called "flag officers."

The red flag is a sign of defiance and is often employed by disturbers of the peace. It is also used to denote danger.

A Wonderful Corn Popper.

A new corn popper has appeared, and it is hard to imagine a more interesting slot machine. When your nickel is deposited an electric contact is set up, and a variety of things proceed to happen. First, a paper bag is pushed toward you. A certain amount of corn—it will fill your bag presently—drops into a revolving cylinder and begins to pop. Any kernels that may be obstinate fall through a sieve at the end of the game, and the freshly popped corn drops into your bag. If you want salt and butter you have only to press a button, and just the right amount will appear. Nothing could be clearer. Is electricity laughing at us? Of course.

The Cheshire Grin.

The Cheshire grin has long been famous, but, according to the best authorities, its origin is doubtful. The general opinion appears to be, however, that the people of Cheshire molded cheese to represent grinning cats The phrase afterward became applied to any one grinning in a manner suggestive of these cheese tabbies. In children's stories the Cheshire cat appears as a cat with a wide mouth, grinning from ear to ear.

My whole is a substance used to make cloth.

Discovered Prehistoric Bones.

Excavations on the site of the new Chronicle building in Fleet street, London, have led to the discovery of the bones of prehistoric animals at a depth of 33 feet below the present level of the street and about 30 yards from the spot where prehistoric remains of a woolly rhinoceros were found in 1903. The present find includes what Doctor Smith Woodward and Dr. Andrews of the Geological Department of the British Museum describe as "a beautiful piece of armbone of a lion." But there is some difference of opinion among other experts on the subject. The remains which belong to pleistocene times also include a bone of a mammoth and the hip bone perhaps of the same animal.

London Newspapers.

There are 40 daily publications in London, 183 dailies in the rest of the kingdom, while British weekly and monthly publications total 2,643 and 1,482 respectively. England, excluding London, has 138 daily papers and 1,365 weeklies. Wales has 8 dailies and 121 weeklies, Scotland 18 dailies and 263 weeklies, while Ireland stands well in the journalistic world with 19 dailies and 200 weeklies. In London there are 694 weekly publications.

The Voyage.

Pleasantly and quite at ease
Down the stream of life we glide,
With the meadows and the woods
Lying fair on either side.
As we view the shifting scene
And we hear the robins call
We are quite inclined to say
It's a good world, after all.

There are snags along the way,
Drifting wood and floating ice,
And an eddy here and there
Just to give the journey spice
And some small excitement lend,
So the voyage will not pall,
But we master them and say
It's a good world, after all.

Sometimes there are toil and sweat,
Labored pulling at the oar,
Bringing as their sole reward
Aching bones and muscles sore,
But the rest that comes is sweet,
The respite at evenfall,
And we fold our arms and say
It's a good world, after all.

So in sunshine and in shade
Slowly down the stream we float,
Toiling for a space and then
Listening to the wild bird's note,
Drifting through the balmy spring,
Summer's suns and mellow fall,
And we close our eyes and say
It's a good world, after all.

THE FOUR POST BEDSTEAD

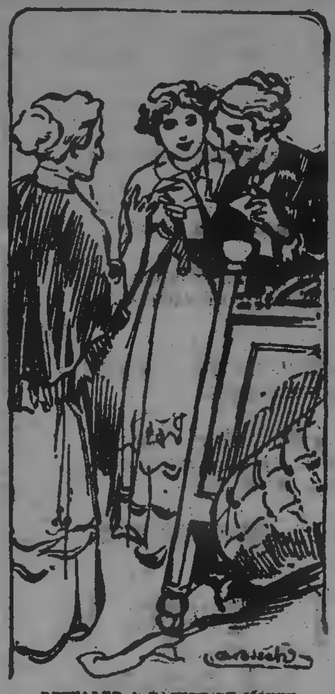
Or the Mysterious Workings of Providence

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Mrs. Henry Dowd stared coldly at Philippa Fancher, who was sitting on the other side of Lawyer Weems' office. Philippa looked expectantly at the little sandy haired lawyer, who was reading the last will and testament of the late Susan Fancher to the heirs.

"'And lastly,'" droned Mr. Weems, reading, "'I give and bequeath to my nieces, Amanda Fancher Dowd and Philippa Fancher, my mahogany four post bedstead, to be divided as follows.'" Here Mr. Weems blew his thin nose violently and coughed nervously before concluding the important document:

"'To be divided as follows: The two head posts, the headboard and one side rail to my niece Amanda Fancher Dowd; the two foot posts, one side rail and the foot piece to my niece Philippa Fancher, theirs to have and to hold forever.'



REVEALED A PACKET OF MONEY.

"That's all," said Mr. Weems, busying himself with his papers.

The six nieces from Plainville, who equally shared the meager bank deposits and the house and furniture of their deceased aunt, smiled furtively at one another as Mrs. Dowd and her cousin Philippa rose stiffly from their chairs and, without a word to the others, carried their bitter disappointment out of the office.

Although Philippa and her cousin Amanda had not been good friends for many years, now a common cause for complaint united them for a brief time.

"It's an insult!" declared Amanda Dowd, her stout form quivering with indignation.

"It is indeed," agreed Philippa primly. "After all I've done for Aunt Susan too. The winter when she had pneumonia I stayed with her day and night for two months, and when I went home she told me, says she: 'Phil, you'll be rewarded for this when I'm gone. I shall remember you generously in my will.'

"Says I, 'Aunt Susan, I'm not doing it for reward'"— Philippa stopped short and got very red when she saw the sarcastic smile quivering around Amanda's lips.

"Aunt Susan was fond of making promises," said Amanda hastily. "The time when I sewed for her two months steady so that she could make that visit to New York she promised I would be remembered first in her will."

"And you were last!" ejaculated Philippa sweetly.

"Except for your name I was," reminded Mrs. Dowd.

"And each of us only half of a four post bedstead!"

"It's an insult!" repeated Mrs. Dowd. "I don't understand Aunt Susan's promising us, who have done so much for her, and then leaving us nothing after all, when the Plainville nieces, who hardly noticed her, got everything worth while."

"Except half an old four post bedstead," muttered Amanda Dowd. "I've a good mind to burn my half up or give it away."

"You might give yours to Ida Finney, and I'll do the same," said Philippa. "She told me the other day that if she had another double bed she could take some city boarders. She needs the money."

"And then folks can see that we don't care a snap about the old bedstead," agreed Mrs. Dowd.

So it happened that little Miss Finney, whose hands, crippled by rheumatism, could no longer trim hats, came into possession of the four post bedstead which Aunt Susan Fancher had eccentrically divided between two of her nieces.

Ida Finney put the bed in her sitting room and rented it to boarders from the city.

One autumn day Ida hurried up the path that led to Philippa's side door. Philippa Fancher, who put up fruit and pickles for a living, was stirring a spicy mixture in a huge kettle on the stove.

"Come in, Ida," she called to the little milliner. "Your boarders gone?" she inquired after Miss Finney was seated.

"Not yet, though they are all ready to go on the 2 o'clock stage. Now, Philippa," went on Ida earnestly, "the folks who have been sleeping on that four poster want to buy it from me. They offered me—what do you think?"

Philippa added more sugar to her pickles and tasted them delicately.

"Five dollars?" she hazarded.

Ida Finney laughed excitedly.

"Fifty dollars! There, I knew you'd jump, Phil Fancher! Fifty dollars for the old bedstead that your Aunt Susan left you and that you despised."

Philippa reddened. "Did you accept the offer, Ida?" she asked stiffly.

"I did not. I told them that it didn't belong to me, being only borrowed from you and Amandy, and if it had been mine I wouldn't have sold it because it had belonged to your Aunt Susan."

"We gave it to you, Ida. You can sell it if you want to."

"I'm proud to have anything that belonged to Susan Fancher," said Ida Finney. "She was very kind to my folks once, and when I learned the millinery trade she loaned me the money to go into business. I paid it all back, too, but I ain't forgot her goodness."

Ida Finney arose and moved toward the door. "Well, I must hurry home again. I just thought I'd let you know about the offer."

"And you won't sell the bed and keep the money? We don't care," said Philippa.

"No; I'd rather not sell it. I know Miss Susan set great store by that bed. She said it belonged to her great-grandmother and it had a history."

Ida went out and closed the door rather sharply, as was her wont. She had a way of stirring one's conscience without actually preaching.

Philippa finished her pickles and then, changing her dress, went across the street to see her cousin, Amanda Dowd.

In a few words Philippa related what Ida Finney had told her about the four post bed which the city people valued at $50.

"Something Ida said made me feel ashamed of giving the bed away," ended Philippa sadly. "You see, I was very angry the day Mr. Weems read that letter, and so I didn't care about the bed or my share of it. I've been thinking that Aunt Susan was very kind to me. She did lots of nice things for me when I was a girl, and I ought not to have calculated on her leaving me any money."

Amanda Dowd nodded her head. "I feel the same way, Philippa. Aunt Susan helped my brother Jim to study for the ministry, and I guess I'll get my half of the bed back from Ida Finney. I'll give her $5 toward another one."

"So will I," said Philippa, who could ill afford it.

A week later Amanda Dowd and Philippa Fancher went over to see Ida Finney.

After an hour of lively persuasion the independent Miss Finney reluctantly consented to accept $10 for the bed, which the remorseful owners had given her some time before.

"I feel as mean as getout," said Ida as she placed the money in her worn pocketbook and led the way upstairs.

"As a punishment for my meanness I shall carry my half home piecemeal," said Philippa firmly as they proceeded to dismantle the ancient bed of its spotless coverings.

"And I shall do the same," said Amanda, her broad face grave with regret. "Now, Phil, do you know how to uncord the thing?"

Philippa worked with deft fingers, and presently the bed was apart and divided according to the last will and testament of Susan Fancher.

Philippa lifted one heavy post. "It looks as if it could be unscrewed here. See where the joining is quite plain. It will be easier to carry if it does come apart." She twisted the end of the post, and it moved easily around and around until she lifted the carved top and disclosed a deep, cuplike hollow. The hollow was filled with white tissue paper, which, pulled out and unfolded, revealed a packet of money—ten $100 bills.

In dazed silence her companions watched Philippa while she unscrewed the top of her second bedpost and found a similar sum of money.

Then it was Amanda Dowd's turn, and she, too, was remembered in the same manner by eccentric, kind hearted Aunt Susan.

Little Ida Finney watched them in tearful delight as they made these astounding discoveries, but Ida was to make a discovery on her own account.

"Ida Finney," said Amanda after a short consultation with Philippa, "Philippa and I would never have found this money if it hadn't been for you. You made us ashamed of ourselves, and, Ida, you've got to take this. If you won't do it gracefully I'll have it put to your credit in the Little River bank." She extended a packet of bills toward the little milliner.

"I don't dare decline it because I need it so badly," half sobbed Ida.

"Take it!" ordered Philippa and Amanda, and Ida Finney took the packet and cried over it like a baby, for it contained ten $100 bills.

As for the cousins, they bore the sections of the four poster home, and it is a credit to them both that each one was thinking more of the past kindnesses of Aunt Susan and of the mysterious workings of Providence, which through their own awakened consciences had brought them to a degree of prosperity.

HAD FAITH IN HIS IDEAS.

Jules Verne Felt the Things He Wrote Would Come to Pass.

Anything new about that wonderful man, Jules Verne, is invariably interesting. And in the Paris Temps Felix Dnqnesnel, who knew the author well, tells quite a lot about him that is "not generally known."

"I believe I invent possible things," Verne used to say, "which is very naive of me, because all that I write will be realized. Human knowledge will demolish the impossible." But if he believed in the realization of his imaginings his friends did not at first believe that he would be successful as an author.

One day, according to M. Duquesnel, when Verne was in the company of a number of his friends, he exclaimed with great seriousness:

"Mes enfants, I think I am about to leave you. I have the idea which, according to Girardin, is necessary to a man if he is going to make his fortune. I am going to write a romance in a new form of my own invention. If it succeeds it will be, I'm certain, the lode of the gold mine."

The friends laughed. "Laugh away," said Verne, "we shall see who laughs last." A few weeks later "Five Weeks in a Balloon" appeared and was an immediate success. He had found his "lode," which he continued to develop for half a century.—London Letter in Milwaukee Sentinel.

For What Other Purpose?

"I lost my watch and chain in a crowded street car."

"Why don't you see the chief of police?"

"You don't suspect him, do you?"

Expensive.

"Every time the doctor comes to see you you seem worse, my dear."

"Of course."

"Why of course?"

"Isn't he charging $2 a trip?"

THE COMING CHARMER.

We wait for June impatiently,
The month of sun and roses,
For simple man then takes a brace
And to his love proposes.
It's Cupid's own and special month,
And in the line of wooing
When men and maidens take a stroll
There's always something doing.

The robins in the apple tree
Sing to the swain, "Get busy!"
When sweet sixteen comes walking by,
His youthful head grows dizzy,
And both of them have heard about
The season of romances,
And neither wants to overlook
Or pass up any chances.

It is a very charming sight
To see a youthful lover
Shine up his shoes and slick his hair
And round a maiden hover.
It doesn't seem to worry her.
She welcomes his advances,
As any one in sight may know
By noticing her glances.

That's what we may expect in June,
The storied month for mating,
The month for which we sit around
And waste the moments waiting.
And any one who's seen it work
Is fortified with hunches
That there will be romances to burn,
Engagements done in bunches.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

Some people are such artistic bores that they are almost entertaining.

Even the most unorthodox like to believe in a little private hell of their own convenient to consign undesirables to.

It is a wise man who thoroughly understands that seeing is very often deceiving.

Most people have a certain amount of intelligence, but the skill some of them have in keeping it concealed amounts almost to genius.

The strong repugnance that some people have to money never seizes them until money is in their possession.

Some men are lucky because they are married and some because they aren't. It all depends, you see.

Doing as one pleases is only fascinating and absorbing as long as somebody else objects to it.

One disconcerting thing about facts is they have an unsettling way of getting in one's road and causing a general upset.

The purpose of an investigating committee seems to be to prove that it isn't so.

Sometimes it is bribery and sometimes it is patriotic regard for the pocketbook and special interests; all depends on the point of view.

The trouble about being prepared for the worst is that it is so apt to make some people so prepared dead anxious for it to happen.

Shattered.

He was a Hollander, just arrived in this country to seek his fortune, and he had much to say to his host. But he had great difficulty in regulating his pronunciation, and at times his words were almost unintelligible to his host's small boy, who sat in a corner of the room somewhat mystified. At last the Hollander departed, and the small boy said to his father:

"Daddy, is he a broken Englishman?"—New York Post.

LONDON'S CLEVEREST COOK.

It Is a Woman Who Ranks First With Wealthy Gourmets.

It is more satisfactory to have an accomplished woman cook than an accomplished chef in the kitchen, for the women are more resourceful, are less apt to make difficulties, and grumble less at their work. On the other hand, however, they are, as a rule, more extravagant than the men cooks, for they do not understand the economic side of kitchen finance.

It sounds very revolutionary, and quite contrary to the accepted view of men and women cooks. Nevertheless, that is the opinion of Mrs. Rosa Lewis, of London, Eng., the world's cleverest cook-chef—the woman who has invented dishes for royalty, whose services are in great demand when famous hostesses are entertaining royal guests, and who has contracted for many of the feasts for British Government Departments. She has cooked dinners for the regiments of the Household Cavalry, when they entertained a sovereign, and at one time controlled the kitchen of White's Club.

In the words of that "Prince of Gourmets," Lieut-Col. Newnham-Davis, Mrs. Lewis is the most celebrated woman-cook that this or probably any other day has produced. Mrs. Lewis is the proprietress of the Cavendish Hotel in London, and Lieut.-Col. Newnham-Davis tells us in his entertaining book, "The Gourmets' Guide to London," that she began to learn the art of cookery when she was a girl with a pigtail of hair down her back, in the kitchen of the Comtesse de Paris, when she was paid the large sum of a shilling a week. Her second place was in the kitchen of another French duke, and ultimately she went to London and built up her unique reputation.

In her kitchen are to be found quite a number of girls, who are carefully trained by Mrs. Lewis, and it is interesting to note that no cook with her training complete leaves Mrs. Lewis's kitchen for any place at less than $500 a year, which is a great deal more in London than it is in Canada.

Mrs. Lewis' time-table for a day when she is called upon to cook one of these dinners which have made her so famous provides a striking illustration of her energy. She is at the market at 5 a.m., to buy her material; at seven her staff is ready to help her in her own kitchen, and she begins with the last dishes of the dinner, preparing the sweets and ices; next she turns to the cleaning and preparation of the vegetables, and then to the materials of the soup and the making of the cold dishes. By one o'clock the meats and birds are all prepared for the cooking, and at six all the things to be cooked at the house where the dinner is to be given are put in hampers and taken over there.

It was Mrs. Lewis who invented a delicious kind of quail pudding, for which King Edward had a special liking. Another appreciative monarch for whose appetite she has catered is the Kaiser, for she ruled the kitchen at Highcliffe Castle during the Emperor's stay there of three weeks. But Mrs. Lewis is critical of diners as well as of dinners. To cook a dinner for people who cannot understand its excellences is, in her opinion, like "feeding pigs on mushrooms."

THE BOWSER COOK

She Gives Away the Episode of the Summer Screens.

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

I AM the Bowser cook.

I want to be loyal to the man, and yet I don't want the public to miss a good thing.

I am not like most other cooks, with an ear to the keyhole half the time.

When my work is done at night I take a seat on the basement stairs to ruminate, not to listen to the talk from the living room.

Of course if I hear anything interesting, that's all right, but I don't strain my ears any. I think that ruminating is much better than listening. I had just got to ruminating the other evening when I heard Mrs. Bowser saying to Mr. Bowser that it was time to put up fly screens and asking him if he wouldn't send up a carpenter to do the work.

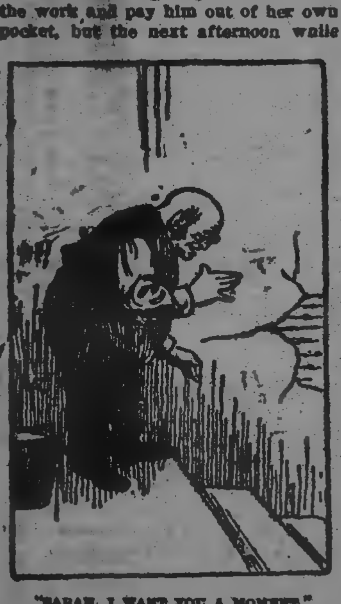
"Not on your life!" he exclaimed in reply. "There are twelve windows and twelve fly screens to fit them. A carpenter would be about six days, at an expense of $3 a day, putting them up, while I can do the work in one hour."

"But when you put them up last year you got mad and broke a clotheshorse at the back door."

"Never! You are thinking of some other man and some other house. Never got mad and never broke a clotheshorse. In a day or two I shall put the screens up myself and save the $18."

Mr. Bowser on the Job.

Mrs. Bowser said no more. I think she was intending to get a man to do the work and pay him out of her own pocket, but the next afternoon while she was shopping Mr. Bowser came home. It was about 3 o'clock, and when I looked surprised he exclaimed:



"SARAH, I WANT YOU A MOMENT."

"It's all right, Sarah. Business isn't driving just now, and I'm home to put those screens up. They are up in the storeroom, I suppose?"

"Yes, sir, but they need to be dusted off. I am ironing today and can't help you."

"Never mind the dusting. The style this summer is to have fly screens look as ancient as possible. Mrs. Bowser out, eh? Well, I'll hustle the screens up and give her a surprise."

He was into his old clothes and bringing the screens down in ten minutes. If each screen had ever been marked for a certain window the marks had been painted out, and Mr. Bowser had to go by guesswork. He began with the living room first. I heard him knocking and banging and pounding away for a long time, and then he called from the head of the basement stairs:

"Sarah, I want you a moment!"

When I got there he stood pointing to one of the windows with outstretched arm.

"Do you see it?" he whispered as he still pointed.

"I see that the screen is short for the window, sir."

"Yes; you see it is all of six inches too short. Why? Answer me, why?"

"Because you've got the wrong screen for the window."

"Because either you or Mrs. Bowser has sawed six inches off the top to baffle me. Don't tell me that a fly screen can shrink six inches in a season or that window frames can lengthen the same distance."

Another Conspiracy.

I pulled the screen out of the window and after a moment found the right one and replaced it and returned to my work. I heard him mumbling under his breath. He got the other screen in after a good deal of banging, and then he started to fit those in the back parlor. I knew that the screen he had down would never fit, but it wasn't my business to butt in. He moved the chairs around and banged at the sashes, and all of a sudden the house shook. I ran upstairs to find him on the floor with one of his feet through the wire screen. He was that dazed that he let me help him up, but no sooner was he on his feet than he shouted out:

"I'll have gore for this! Woman"—

"I am not Mrs. Bowser, sir!" I said as he tried to kick the screen off his leg.

"But you helped her to put up this job to assassinate me!"

"You must have stumbled and gone down. Can't you tell that those screens are for the back bedrooms upstairs?"

He sat down, breathing hard, and I ran up and got the right screens and fitted them in a jiffy. He felt ashamed of his temper and started in to tell me that he didn't believe I was in the conspiracy to saw his leg off, but I did not stop to listen to the whole of it. A few minutes later I heard him going upstairs, putting each foot down as if stamping off snow, and then all was quiet for ten minutes. I then felt it a duty I owed to Mrs. Bowser to go up and rescue him. He had torn down curtains and pole from one of the front windows and moved both beds and bureau in his efforts to fit the kitchen screen to a window not half its size. He was looking around for some living thing to pour out the vials of his wrath on when he caught sight of me.

Sadly Muddled.

"I was just about to call you. Do you deny that you have gone and tacked an extra piece on to this screen in order to spite me?"

"Haven't you got eyes in your head?" I asked. "If I had a brother ten years old who couldn't tell the difference between a screen door and a window screen I'd get a pair of glass eyes for him."

"Are you claiming that that is a screen door?"

"Of course it is. Ain't it two feet too long for the window? Ain't there panels to it? Ain't there a handle on it? I'm only a poor girl, sir, with a red headed mother and a fellow with a glass eye for a beau, but I can tell an elephant from a mouse."

"I'll be hanged if you ain't right!" he said, with a smile, after taking a long look at the door. "I suppose I must have been thinking about trading the house and lot for a chicken farm. You needn't mention the incident to Mrs. Bowser. Thanks for coming up. I am sure I can manage the others."

Mrs. Bowser Under Suspicion.

As I went upstairs I left him whistling away and feeling better. He got the screens into the windows after half an hour's work, strung out by his trying to make them fit bottom side up, and then he came down to the kitchen with the screen door. He was chesty and didn't mind upsetting the clotheshorse as he dragged the screen through. I watched him as he stood the door up. It was topside down. He stood back and surveyed it and shook his head and muttered:

"If Mrs. Bowser has been fooling with this door she'll hear from me in a way to make her tired!"

"You've got it wrong side up, sir," I ventured to say.

"Ah, yes. S'more of my absentmindedness. I was thinking about those chickens again. If Mrs. Bowser tries to pump you switch her off. The door is right side up now, and it's like a glove."

He soon had the thing screwed fast and the door swinging back and forth, but I was holding out for what came next. Most any sort of a baldheaded man can rehang a screen door, because there are all the marks of last year, but when you come to put on the spring to keep it closed—that's different. Mr. Bowser went ahead with the greatest confidence in himself, whistling as he worked, but when the spring was on and he stood aside the door flew open.

"More of Mrs. Bowser!" I heard him growl as he tried to make the door stay shut, but I didn't tell him wherein he was wrong. Instead of taking the spring off and turning it end for end, what does he do but take the whole screen off and turn the outside in. It wouldn't fit that way, and I told him that it wouldn't, and then he let go of his temper and shouted:

"I told you right at the start that it was a conspiracy! When Mrs. Bowser comes home"—

"I can put that door on in five minutes!"

"You can't in 5,000 years!"

An Exciting Finish.

With that he picked it up and sent it flying over the fence into a neighbor's yard, but in stepping back his foot struck something, and he went over backward and hit his head against one of the clothesline posts. I ran out to him with a scream, and in five minutes there were a policeman and three or four boys around him, and I was pouring water on him by the pailful.

Then it was that Mrs. Bowser arrived and quietly took charge. We got him into the house and upon the lounge, while some one turned in a fire alarm and some one else called an ambulance. I can't tell how long Mr. Bowser lay unconscious, but his speech was plain when he suddenly opened his eyes.

"Have I been going over Niagara falls, or has Mrs. Bowser been trying to murder me again?"

Oh!

"Where is your corset department?" asked the man, consulting his wrist watch, as he entered the department store.

"For your wife, I suppose?" suggested the floorwalker.

"Excuse me, sir; I have no wife."—Yonkers Statesman.

Friend of Connaught.

The Right Hon. Sir Francis Hopwood, additional Civil Lord of the Admiralty and Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, who recently paid a hurried visit to Canada and was a guest of the Governor-General at Government House, Ottawa, is an old friend of the Duke of Connaught and was a member of the staff of his royal highness when he went to South Africa to open the Union Parliament. Sir Francis has visited Canada several times previously, the most memorable of these occasions being in 1908 when he accompanied His Majesty, then Prince of Wales, to the Dominion upon the occasion of the Tercentenary celebration at Quebec. His name came prominently before the world as secretary to to the chairman of the select committee of the Imperial Parliament on the Jameson Raid, and later as a member of the royal commission to South Africa after the war to advise on the constitution for the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies. He is by profession a barrister.

Soon Remedied.

Lord Forbes, the premier baron of Scotland, whose recent tragic death is so widely deplored, was fond of telling an anecdote about a Scots minister who was caught in a heavy downpour of rain while on his way to his church one Sunday morning. When Dr. M—— arrived at the vestry he was very wet. Every means was used to dry him in time for the service, but as the hour drew near Dr. M—— became nervous, fearing that he would not be in fit condition to appear before his flock.

"Oh, I wish I was dry," he wailed. "Do you think I'm dry enough now?"

Patting him on the shoulder, the old beadle replied in his most soothing manner:—

"Bide a wee, doctor, and ye'll be dry enough when ye get into the pulpit."

Artisans Need Not Apply.

The Immigration Department at Ottawa has issued a circular stating its intention to not only warn all but agriculturists and domestic servants against coming to Canada now, but also to reject them if they happen to come under any of the restrictive clauses of the immigration law. The intention is to apply the law very rigidly, so as to prevent the present state of unemployment in the country from becoming worse. If an immigrant is liable to rejection for any reason he will not be admitted because he has a promise of employment, "because," the circular adds, "if he secures it, it is by taking a position which otherwise might have been filled by some of our recent unemployed, amongst whom every trade and occupation is already represented."

Cattle Dying Off.

Thousands of cattle have died in Saskatchewan and Alberta during the present year, the result of the dread disease, black leg. This was the statement issued by the Health of Animals Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture located in Regina. Quantities of vaccine, which will if applied in time, prevent the disease, have been sent to different parts of the province, and it is hoped by this means to secure a foothold in fighting the ravages of this most serious cattle disease. The exact number of cattle which have been lost could not be ascertained by the Department.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson VII.—Third Quarter, For Aug. 16, 1914.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. xxi, 33-46. Memory Verses, 42-44—Golden Text, Matt. xxi, 42—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

During these last days of the week preceding His crucifixion as He taught daily in the temple and went at night to the Mount of Olives He spake many things in His farewell messages to this unbelieving nation. Most of them are recorded by Matthew, Mark and Luke, but some by Matthew only. This lesson, concerning the vineyard and the wicked husbandmen, is recorded in each of the first three gospels. It is the old story of the love of God and the base and sinful ingratitude of man.

He loves the whole world, and "whosoever" means any one anywhere in the wide world (John iii, 16). He chose Israel to be a peculiar treasure unto Him above all people. He separated them from all people to be His inheritance, He brought them unto Himself that they might be a people near to Him, and He never dealt so with any other nation. He did this for them that through them other nations might learn to know Him for their good. (Ex. xix, 4, 5; II Sam. vii, 22-24; I Kings viii, 53; Ps. cxlvii, 20; cxlviii, 14; Isa. lxiii, 11-14.) Israel being set aside for an age, He is gathering from all the nations the willing whosoevers to be a peculiar people unto Himself that through them the world may believe and know Him (Tit. ii, 14; John xvii, 21, 23). The church, these called out ones, is failing as Israel failed, but He shall not fail or be discouraged, and in His time and in His way there shall be seen on earth the consummation of His eternal purpose in a kingdom of righteousness and peace which shall never end.

His dealings with Israel and their treatment of Him were written for our benefit that we might avoid their failures and bear better fruit than they did (I Cor. x, 6-12; Rom. xv, 4). We have seen recently that Israel was compared to a vine and also to a fig tree and an olive tree, but the one thing always desired was fruit. Compare Ezek. xv and John xv. The most full account of Israel as a vineyard is found in Isa. iv, 1-7, where His care of it is described somewhat as in our lesson, and He asks, "What could have been done more to my vineyard that I have not done in it?" Compare Ps. lxxx, 8, 9; Jer. ii, 21; Hos. x, 1.

The householder's going to a far country for a long time (verse 33; Luke xx, 9) reminds us of the story of the pounds and talents, but there is evidently a backward look here to the days of the prophets, as in Matt. xxiii, 34-39, as well as to this present age. A summary of their treatment of the Lord and His messengers is found in II Chron. xxxvi, 16, "They mocked the messengers of God and despised His words and misused His prophets until the wrath of the Lord arose against His people, till there was no remedy." He was only seeking that which was His own, fruit from His own vineyard for which He had done all that He could, some gratitude for all His love to them. Surely a reasonable expectation on His part, but this cruel treatment of His servants and thus of Himself was their reply to all that He had done for them.

Having sent servant after servant, only to receive the same ill treatment, last of all He sent unto them His son, saying, "They will reverence My Son" (verse 37). The record in Mark xii, 6, is "Having yet therefore one Son, His well beloved, He sent Him also last unto them." But they said when they saw Him, "This is the heir; come, let us kill Him and let us seize on His inheritance." This they did, and our Lord asks what shall be done unto such husbandmen. Their reply is in verse 41. So He condemns them out of their own mouth. Then He showed them from their own Scriptures that all their evil conduct had been foreseen by the God who so loved them. But it was as plainly foretold that the rejected one would yet be the honored one. He called their attention to Ps. cxviii, 22, no doubt having in mind also Gen. xlix, 24, for there is no more wonderful type of Christ in the whole Bible than Joseph in his sufferings and his glory, his cruel treatment and virtual death at their hands, their rejection of him and his dreams and their literal fulfilling of the same in bowing down to him for their lives after so many years. Our Lord had probably in mind also Isa. xxviii, 16; Dan. ii, 34, 35, 45. See the references of Peter and Paul to the same great truths concerning Christ as the stone rejected, but yet to be honored (Acts iv, 11, 12; I Pet. ii, 6-8; Eph. ii, 20).

When men grow angry in their rebellion against God and nations rage and kings and rulers take counsel against Him He can laugh at their impotence and say in quietness, "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion" (Ps. ii, 1-6). The believer may well rejoice that "the counsel of the Lord standeth forever, the thoughts of His heart to all generations," that "every purpose of the Lord shall be performed" and say gladly, "I know that Thou canst do everything and that no thought of Thine can be hindered" (Ps. xxxiii, 11; Jer. ii, 29; Job xlii, 2, margin). But what about the fruit, the much fruit, which the branches should be yielding Him because of His great, unfailing, unchanging love? Is He seeing in us of the travail of His soul?

Points for Mothers

Carriage Pillowslips.

The baby which is taken out for a daily airing in its carriage needs several slips for the carriage pillow. A covering that is dainty enough for any baby can be made from two handkerchiefs and a few yards of valenciennes lace. If one is skilled in embroidery the word "Baby" may be embroidered on one section of the pillow.

One handkerchief should be cut in two to form the end of the pillow, and the remaining handkerchief should be used for the center section. Measure the sides of the handkerchief in order to find out just how many yards of lace will be needed. The edge can be finished with lace.

Baby pillows should always have the center of the pillow plain, so when selecting them choose a design with a border or corners to be embroidered. Pad the petals and leaves with cotton of a medium weight. When embroidering the design use the satin stitch, French knots and outlining stitch.

Punched work is effective and can be used to its best advantage on dainty articles for baby. Purchase a pillow filled with down and cover it with a layer of linen or china silk. The slip cover is made by attaching the ruffle to the top and then stitching the bottom in position.

The hemstitched ruffle is easily laundered and is particularly effective, and a simple edging of valenciennes lace is also a good finish. The most attractive method of joining the ruffle to the pillow is to finish it with a narrow beading.

Gardening For Children.

If you have but a small city yard give your child a foot or two for his "very own" garden. Let him dig it up, prepare it, plant the seeds or purchase plants out of his own spending money. If he is interested in the garden it will be his special delight to keep it weeded and in good condition, allowing him to pick his own flowers and do with them what he will. The garden will be not only a pleasure, but a benefit.

One little boy who was allowed his little patch when asked what he wanted to plant in this wee garden, replied, "Pansies, because they have such sweet little faces." He was allowed to buy half a dozen plants and his greatest delight was to pick these flowers and take them to his mother each morning. Of course the stems were short, but she floated them in a glass finger bowl.

His garden was always in beautiful condition. One of his first duties in the morning was to rake up the ground, and the little watering can was put to use at least twice a day.

Playing Outdoors.

From 10 to 12 each morning the little ones should romp and play out of doors. If you have a good sized yard this may be used as a playground for the children.

In one corner have a small seesaw. In another part of the yard have a low broad fence made from studding. A boy never tires of climbing on this and seeing how well he can walk it. This is a most excellent physical exercise. Plan attractive plays that will give the children strong muscles well under control and vigorous exercises that will make the whole body healthy and give self reliance for later life.

A shelter in the yard is most helpful. It may be rude, but will serve the purpose of protection on very cold or warm days. It should have a large window to allow the sun to light and warm it, so that except on the severest days it is really a comfortable place in which the youngsters can play.

Cured.

"Mr. Johnson is different from other people."

"In what way?"

"He doesn't believe he would be a success on the stage."

"That is strange."

"No; he has tried it."

Both Essential.

Jones—Old Olirich bought an automobile.

Brown—Take him long to learn?

Jones—Yes; one month to run the machine and two months to pronounce the word "chauffeur" properly.

WORK ON NEW SEPARATE SCHOOL IS PROGRESSING

Will be in Readiness for the Opening of Next Term — Good Ventilation and a Large Playground

The new Separate School, the School of the Immaculate Conception, in East City, is rapidly approaching completion and will be in readiness for the opening of the coming term. The new school which is the former East Ward Public School, thoroughly renovated, presents an exceedingly fine apparance and adds greatly to the section of the city lying beyond the Otonabee. It is a four-roomed structure of red brick and will afford accommodation for some 175 pupils.

All the windows are so arranged so as to have the light coming on the left side of the scholars and the seats, blackboards and other customary fixtures are all of the most modern type. The painting and decorating has been well executed and makes a marked difference. A perfect ventilating system has been installed as well as a new furnace and heating equipment. Lavatories and water fountains, the latter doing away entirely with the drinking cup, are also to be found in convenient places. Each room has a separate cloak room.

The sheds and outbuildings have been cleared away, and a fine, well-graded playground has taken their place. All the walks are of concrete. The brick work was performed by A. Rose, the concrete by D. Mahoney, the carpentering by W. McAuliffe, the plumbing by C. A. J. Duranceau, and the plastering by M. Herron.

It is the intention to have all classes from primary to entrance. The children will be under the supervision of the Sisters of St. Joseph.

The work on the new Church of the Imaculate Conception and the rectory is being rushed forward, and it is expected that the opening of the former will take place some time during October.

School in South End.

The addition to the School of the Sacred Heart, so as to cope with the ever increasing attendance, was commenced on July 16th by the contractors, Messrs. A. Rose and N. Bibby and they fully expect to have it ready for the pupils in the course of two weeks. The addition is two story high and makes two new rooms, each with dimensions of 30 feet by 24 feet. Both are fitted with a separate cloak room 6 feet by 24 feet. A very fine asset is the large main corridor, fifteen feet wide and an exit at each end, thus affording the pupils xcellent protection in case of fire. In the upper flat a room 15 feet by 18 feet has been set aside as a teachers' room and will be suitably fitted.

The addition has been built at the south-west corner of the former building and like it is of white brick. The school now contains eight rooms as compared with two when first erected.

Division of Outside Work

His Worship Mayor Buller, Ald. Duncan, chairman of the Board of Works and City Engineer Parsons will meet this afternoon and make final arrangements for the dividing of the work on the sewers, sidewalks, etc.

The married men will of course receive the preference and will be worked in shifts of one week.

Isolation Hospital Closed Two Months

Amid the dark and heavy war clouds a slight ray of sunshine falls. The Isolation Hospital has been closed since June 25th, which means that for nearly two months the city has been free from contagious diseases. The authorities hope that the beds will remain empty for some time.

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS' IMPRESSIONS IN LONDON

Canadian Press Despatch.

New York, Aug. 15. — Richard Harding Davis cables the following to the Tribune on arriving in London: "What most impressed me is the absence of any news in English papers concerning any movement of the English navy and army. No interest at this time in any person with any ship or regiment is permitted to outweigh the wishes of all for the success of all.

This secrecy as to the present plans or the whereabouts of any military unit is enforced not only by orders of the War Office, but is the wish of every one. A father, son or brother leaves to join his ship or regiment, and after that his family neither knows where he may be.

It is a splendid compliment to the organization of the War Office. Also it is a compliment to the many millions who make no effort to break through the wall of silence Field Marshall Kitchener has erected between them and their army. We know England has declared war; in the papers we can read of red cross societies, of funds patronized by the Royal Family for those who may be wounded, for those who already have been left without support. No one need be a military expert to read in the streets the signs of a national war, but in no paper in the United Kingdom will he learn that by land and sea British forces are in the greatest war since the victory at Waterloo. It makes the position of a correspondent somewhat difficult, but it shows that into this struggle of giants England has entered without hysterical or vain boasting, but earnestly, calmly, and undismayed.

TITANIC STRUGGLE WITH GERMANS NEAR AT HAND

Belgian, French and British Troops Are at Some Points Unnaned Prepared to Receive the Onslaught of the Invaders—Belgians Have Inflicted Severe Checks on German Vanguard.

LONDON, Aug. 15.—Pushing forward by weight of numbers the German advance across Belgium is slowly but steadily proceeding and within twenty-four hours must come in contact with the allied armies, which, according to an official communication from Brussels last night, are in battle order at some point unnamed.

The Belgians in the outpost skirmishing, are said to have inflicted severe checks on the German forces, but on the whole the German wing has kept on its way and has reached a line from north of Namur to Haelen which suggests that the first big battle will be fought somewhere between Louvain and Diest, where the allies probably will try to block the roads to Brussels and Antwerp and prevent the German attempt to render North Belgium untenable.

Farther south French troops have entered Belgium through Charleroi, going to the relief of their neighbors and to aid in any attack directed toward Namur, while in the east the French are reported to have secured possession of ridges in the Vosges Mountains and to hold the passes of Le Bonhomme and Saint Marie-au-Mines, through which important roads pass and which it is declared gives them great strategc advantages.

The Germans are again hammering away at the Liege forts, and according to their accounts, one of the forts, Pontisse, has fallen. This, however, is denied by the Belgians, who tell of another slaughter of the invaders who, they say, attempted to rush the fortress.

Military strategists are of the opinion that the Germans are meeting with delay, which they did not count upon, and that every day the Belgians keep them fighting means an increase of Russian forces on their eastern frontier. They express the belief that unless Germany soon disposes of Belgium and France she will have to choose between with drawing a great part of her army from the west or leaving the road to Berlin open to the forces of the Emperor of Russia.

Already hordes of Russians are reported to be marching toward Prussia on the one side and to Austrian Galicia on the other. In the latter country they are said to be in the vicinity of the Styr river, which is on the route to Lemberg.

The official news bureau of the army and Admiralty has issued a warning to the public against placing the slightest reliance in the many rumors current daily regarding alleged victories or defeats or concerning the arrival of wounded or disabled ships of Great Britain. "These are without exception baseless," the warning says.

The probable attitude of Japan and Italy is still the subject of much speculation. Conversations are going on continually between Japan and Great Britain concerning Japan's duty under her alliance with Great Britain and the part she will be permitted to take in the peace conference following the war! There are persistent rumors that Italy will join the triple entente. The Italian Ambassador is a frequent caller at the Foreign Office.

If it should prove correct that Turkey has purchased the German cruisers Goeben and Breslau, war between Greece and Turkey is said to be likely, for Greece sees in the move an attempt on the part of Turkey to recover some of her islands taken in the last war. Russia to meet such a contingency would send troops to the Roumanian frontier.

BIBLE IN KNAPSACK OF EVERY CANADIAN

There will be a Bible in the knapsack of every Canadian who goes to war. The Upper Canada Bible and Tract Society have applied for permission to contribute the gospels to the cause and their request has been granted. The sword of the Lord and of Gideon will go with the Ross rifle.

Long Terms in Sing Sing for Kidnappers of Boy

NEW YORK, Aug. 15. — The maximum sentence of from 25 to 50 years in Sing Sing was imposed upon Pasquale Milone, leader of the band that kidnapped 8-year-old Frank Longo from his home on the East Side and held him captive for forty-nine days.

Francesco Malacuso, another member of the band, was sentenced to from 12 to 25 years in Sing Sing, while a third member, Vincenzo Acena, was given from 20 to 30 years. Six more alleged members of the band are in the Tombs awaiting trial.

According to the evidence produced at the trial, the kidnappers of the Longo boy threatened to dismember his body and shoot his parents unless the money was forthcoming for his return. Seven hundred dollars in marked money was given to the leaders by the boy's father. After his release Frank led the police to the place where he had been held and pointed out his captors.

Falsehoods Charges General Von Stein

Canadian Press Despatch.

Copenhagen, Aug. 15. — The Berliner Tageblatt of Aug. 12, which reached here today, contains a manifesto to the German nation by Gen. Von Stein of the general staff, in which the public is cautioned against believing any statements except those given out by the general staff."

It says: "In Engalnd and France falsehoods are being spread broadcast. You Germans have too much faith in your government to accept rumors too easily. The English accuse us of having suggested a partition with Holland in exchange for her neutrality. Such charges are beneath contempt and demonstrate the righteousness of our cause and the wickedness of our enemies." "You Germans also are spreading rumors of victories and defeats such as German occupation of Belfort and destruction of French regiments wholesale. Everything will be published at the right time, and we have given our word that nothing shall be exaggerated and nothing minimized.'"

"Few except those who are experienced in warfare can know or show with what great difficulties victories are won."

GENERAL MILITARY SITUATION DESCRIBED AS CRITICAL

Canadian Press Despatch.

LONDON, Aug. 15. — The Daily Mail says the cruisers Goeben and Breslau have received Turkish names and will be placed under the command of Rear Admiral Limpus, who was lent to the Turkish Government by the British Admiralty.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 15. — For strategic reasons the Belgian general staff says it will issue no more bulletins. The general military situation is described as critical.

WILL REST ON THE SABBATH

Volunteers Will not be Asked to Drill

After two days of strenuous work the local soldiers of the King will enjoy a rest tomorrow. This morning the volunteers were put through a stiff drill and were then taken to the lecture room where a stirring lecture on discipline by Sgt.-Major Dunkerly was delivered. Maps of war, miniature warfare and all other information were shown to the recruits.

This afternoon the heroes will be marched to the rifle ranges. Yesterday's work at the ranges was entirely satisfactory.

This evening Col. Clegg leaves for Ottawa in response to a call from headquarters. He will likely be given orders of very much importance.

All the boys are enthusiastic and eager for the fray but the uncertainty regarding the date of departure for the mobilization base is causing a lot of worry.

Recruiting will be continued tomorrow at 10 a.m. and 8 p.m.

Five members of the 40th regiment from Norwood passed through here today en route for Cobourg.

THE RENAISSANCE OF EUROPEAN POLITICS

CANADA will soon have an army division of twenty-one thousand men ready for active service in the European war. These twenty-one thousand men will go to Europe and fight Germans. They will bang off their rifles and fire their artillery in the hope that the will kill as many Germans as possible. They will slaughter men of their own stock, since Germans and English are both Aryan and Teuton, for the honour of their country and the glory of war. What did the twenty thousand odd Germans do to these twenty thousand odd Canadians? Nothing. They have been separated by thousands of miles of sea, they never saw each other, they never hated each other, they never defrauded each other. They have each and all worked peaceably in their several little towns and cities, and when rich enough, have even visited each other's country. Now they are getting ready as fast as possible to blow each other's brains out. Does it not seem blood-thirsty, brutal, savage? Seem? It does not seem—It is. Yet this is war, the glorious war that is now feeding on men and wealth and upsetting the trade of the world. Why should it be? Why, simply as Carlyle has said, their governors have had a quarrel, and they make these men fight it out for them.

In the present embroglio the war is clearly a governor's war. The Kaiser wants to be dictator of Europe. Britain and France won't let him, and so they go to war. The Kaiser has foreseen war and has prepared for it so expensively that peace was almost as costly as war. You see, when one man in an irresponsible position gets a false estimate of what his position means, what terrible things he can do.

The Kaiser is not the one man in the world who has misunderstood his mission. There are thousands of kaisers in this and every country who, unchecked, would plunge the world in war. Look at the managers of the Hartford Railway. They have made war on that railway's finances. The present condition of war in Europe condemns not so much the German Kaiser as the unchecked position he occupies. It condemns irresponsible government, and the defeat of the Kaiser, as the head of a strong but antiquated system means a renaissance in European politics.

Hence, this war is not one of aggression, but a defence, on the part of the allies, of liberty. Canada is sending her twenty thousand odd men into a governors' quarrel, with the hope that her enemies may be freed.

TIMELY ACTION.

THE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT has again demonstrated its foresight, and the usefulness of Canada in war time by its timely action in making arrangements with the Bank of England to handle gold intended for shipment to London.

The Finance Department will act as trustee to the Bank of England and will accept gold payments due the bank on this continent. This will relieve the present situation in regard to the forwarding of specie to London at high rates of exchange and at war risks.

Since the war broke out, gold shipments have almost stopped, while business has been embarrassed by the cost of exchange. Bankers in the United States and in Canada are now authorized to pay their London gold debts in Ottawa to the account of the Bank of England through the medium of the Finance Minister. The holding of the gold here will place the Bank of England in the same legal position as if it were in the custody of the Royal Mint in England and the bank can issue its notes against the gold held to its credit in the Ottawa branch of the Royal Mint.

The arrangement will also make it possible to sell grain and other produce bills in Montreal and New York without having to arrange at once for an exchange of specie across the Atlantic. Balances can be temporarily adjusted at Ottawa instead of at London. This arrangement will, therefore, greatly assist to restore Atlantic trade to a condition approaching normal, and should offset in a large measure any depressing effect which the war will produce on the trade of this continent.

THE RESPONSIBILITY.

"IF FINAL EFFORTS for peace should fail—! !"

Why is Europe going to war? asks the St. Louis "Republic." Austria-Hungary is a mere pawn in a game. With more than 22,000,000 Slavs held precariously in check by less than 20,000,000 Germans and Magyars who hate each other vigorously, Austria would not dare to move a finger against Servia were she not egged on by Berlin.

Germany does not even consider it necessary to pretend. The Kaiser has contemptuously brushed Austria aside. When Russia mobilized to come to the aid of the weak little Slavic State of Servia, Berlin did not "pander to the moral sentiment" of mankind by permitting Austria to demand that mobilization cease and then backing up her ally. She takes the initiative herself. It is Germany—not Austria, whose disagreement with Servia brought up the hurricane out of a clear sky — that declares war on her sister powers.

MAKING CRUISERS OUT OF LINERS.

THERE ARE many ships belonging to the British merchant marine which will be converted into armed vessels without delay. Many of the big liners used in the Atlantic passenger service will be converted into armed cruisers. The Cunard liner Mauretania will soon put to sea as an armed cruiser. It is expected that the equipping of the giant ship with guns and ammunition will take only a few days. The Mauretania then will proceed to England and will be a valuable ship for the transport of troops and supplies.

CAN AMERICANS WRITE SONNETS?

IT is doubtful. People living in the United States have written sonnets, but whether they are real Americans is another question. The necessity to produce incessantly and the concurrent demand for frothy stuff and plenty of it, make the production of good articles difficult if not impossible. Since a sonnet is always a gem, otherwise it is not a sonnet, the publication of what purports to be one in Collier's of August 15th seems to give an affirmative answer to our question. The twelfth line is a stunner—"And puts an awful crimp in love's young dream." George Fitch ought to get thirty days for writing those two words, "awful crimp," in a sonnet, and Collier's should be fined. They discredit all Americans who perchance have written or may be able to write, a real sonnet.

There is much in an unreturning step. Stanley every morning began where he left off the night before: he explored Africa. The postman today began where he began yesterday: he renewed acquaintances with Chaboillez Square.

An Assumption Is Seldom Safe.

Brockville Times.

If ever a country was justified in assuming that its integrity and independence and neutrality would be safe that country was Belgium. The great powers of Europe had solemnly guaranteed it. But without scruple or hesitation Germany deliberately violated its solmen obligations to Belgium and invaded it. Fortunately for the Belgians and for the whole world, Belgium, despite its guarantee of independence, had taken the wise precaution of maintaining a small but splendid efficient army. The morad is obvious and the lesson one which ought to be taken to heart by all Canadian pacifists. There is not a nation, great or small, which can afford to neglect its own defence, no matter what guarantees or treaties it possesses. Canada cannot afford to be without a strong defensive force.

Precious Help.

La Patrie.

The aid of the colonies is indispensable at the present hour. And it is necessary that Canada, the most important colony of the Empire, should be the first to direct food supplies to the Mother Country. Thus in deciding to offer a million sacks of flour, to the Imperial Government the Canadian Government has adopted the most efficacious way of contributing to the defence of the Empire. It is necessary that the Province of Quebec should imitate the example of the Federal authorities and the Province of Alberta, which has given half a million bushels of wheat. We have no wheat to offer, but we have willing arms, and we hope the Province of Quebec will soon take prompt action officially.

THE BREAKWATER.

Without, the roar of surf on jagged reefs,
Mad winds that shriek across a surging sea,
The swirl of breakers, drifting clouds of spume,
And storm-swept shores, grown old in tragedy.

Within, tall vessels swaying in their sleep,
Gray harbor-mists enshrouding mast and spar,
Ship's bells, low-muffled, over depths profound,
And, through the shadowed dusk, the first pale star.

Crumbling Thrones; Exiled Dynasties.

What was begun nastily as a war of autocracy is not unlikely to end as a war of revolution, with thrones crumbling and dynasties in exile. Civilization cannot rest at the mercy of despotism, and the welfare of mankind is not to be made the plaything of autocracy. If all Europe must be drenched in blood before this lesson is implanted in the minds of kings and courtiers, we may say of this war as Lincoln said of the war that exterminated human slavery: "The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether."

The Grain Growers' Guide of Winnipeg raised its hands in horror at the thought of Canada's being drawn into this war. Circulating largely amongst the newly-arrived settlers in the West, this ogan is a true menace to the true Canadian spirit and is a stumbling block in the path of progress. The Guide makes the familiar error of supposing that men of red blood have no other god but their pockets and bellies. There may be some of this kind of creatures in Canada. But they are not Canadians. In time they will wither away and drop off the branch. The Guide seems willing to follow them, in this case.

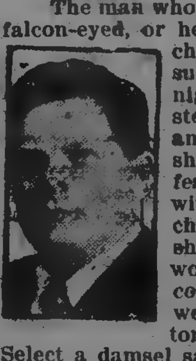
CHOOSING A BRIDE

By Walt Mason



The man who goes to choose a bride should cautious be, and falcon-eyed, or he will harvest woes; it is a most important chore—more so than going to the store to buy a suit of clothes. If you have dreams of pleasant nights around the fire, and home delights, sidestep the giddy maid whose thoughts are all of hats and gowns, and other female hand-me-downs, of show and dress parade. And always shun the festive skirt who'll never miss a chance to flirt with men at any cost; she may seem sweet and charming now, but, as your own and only frau, she's sure to be a frost. And when you see a woman near, who hankers for a high career, and combs her hair back straight, who says she's wedded to her art, whose brow is high, whose tongue is tart—oh, Clarence, pull your freight! Select a damsel safe and sane, who has no folly in her brain, who wants to build a home; if you can win that sort of bride, peace shall with you and yours abide, and crown your old bald dome.

THE COVETED C.A.

Many Canadians Now Seek To Become Chartered Accountants.

Examinations for entrance to what has been called "one of the closest corporations in this country" were being held throughout Canada recently, when a number of young men—thirteen of them from one large Eastern firm alone—endeavored to write their way into the Society of Chartered Accountants.

In the Old Country the occupation of chartered accountant affords, like the law or medicine, with which it ranks approximately in that land of caste a favorable opening for young men contemplating a professional career. Almost as numerous as solicitors and doctors in the big cities of England and Scotland are the chartered accountants, and John Doe, C. A., is a frequent proclamation among the rows of unobstrusive little brass name plates, the only form of advertising permitted there to professional men.

Across the seas practically all kinds of accounting work is monopolized by the chartered accountant, whose rights and privileges, attained only after a very severe training, are hedged about most carefully. But even there the corporation hardly guards its doors more jealously against would-be entrants than does its Canadian counterpart. Canadians contemplating a career as chartered accountants must put in five years of studentship, the last four of them spent with a firm actively engaged in the practice of that profession. Three examinations must be passed during that period. Of these the preliminary takes in the subjects of arithmetic, business correspondence, bookkeeping and the Bills of Exchange Act. Two years must then be passed in the office prior to trying the intermediate, which comprises arithmetic, bookkeeping and accounts, auditing and the statute and mercantile law. Then, at the end of his time, the student must essay the finals, which include bookkeeping and accounting, auditing, business investigations and statute law.

This is a very stiff test and though many are called few are chosen. Indeed a majority of the candidates, after their first success, are prone to forego the hard fight ahead of them for the C. A. degree, content that the knowledge requisite for the passing of the preliminary fits them to accept subordinate work from the firms in practice.

As in the case of old country lawyers and physicians, chartered accountants with an English or Scotch degree may practice in Canada after some slight preliminaries, but men from the other side are said to find it most difficult making a start under the totally dissimilar conditions prevailing in the Dominion. Despite the fact that a great deal of business is handled by one or two large firms, there are a number of chartered accountants successfully engaged in some of the large cities.

Canada, as a whole, is very short of chartered accountants, and once a student has put in his arduous apprenticeship and amassed the knowledge essential to pass the rigorous tests his admission to the society opens up a wide field in the practice of a very lucrative calling. He may engage in the general work of auditing, amalgamations and investigations, etc., while in the world of business high-salaried managerial positions in big corporations are continually calling for such certificated experts in figures.

His Editorial Capacity.

The president and directors of the Montreal "Gazette" tender a dinner each year at a leading club to the paper's editorial and business staffs and the heads of the mechanical departments. Those dinners are always held on a Saturday night, and on the Sunday afternoon following one of them, a reporter who had been told to write up the proceedings called up his editor's house for the purpose of getting more detailed instructions as to the space allotted him. A feminine voice answered through the telephone.

"This is Brown of the editorial staff speaking," said the reporter. "Is Mr. Jones there?"

"Well, he's not up yet," was the reply. "This is Mrs. Jones. Is it anything I can tell you?"

"I only wished to know what Mr. Jones intended me to make of that dinner last night," was the reporter's observation.

"Just wait and I'll ask him," came back in an acid tone; "but if you care for my personal opinion, I think that Mr. Jones himself made too much of it last night."—Toronto Saturday Night.

FOR SALE

Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald is offering for sale some beautiful Building Lots on Benson and Geraldine Avenues.

This property lies within two minutes' walk of the Street Railway and within ten minutes' walk of the heart of the City. The City water, gas, light and sewer service are installed, the property already being completely surrounded by beautiful homes. The site is an ideal one, with a gentle southeasterly slope, and being considerably elevated above the city and not in the immediate vicinity of any manufacturing industries. The air is always pure, healthy and invigorating. Nearly all the lots are already beautifully wooded with foreign and domestic shade trees, and for anyone contemplating the erection of a home, there are certainly no lots in the city that offer equal advantages.

Copies of Registered Plan No. 140, which covers the property, may be seen and all other information may be had at the offices of Mr. R. J. Kidd, J. T. O'Connell & Co'y, C. J. Carroll & Co'y, also at the office of the owner, Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald, Ontario Land Surveyor, 435 George St. Phone 885.

Perfect Balance.

Many a good figure is spoiled by incorrect carriage. Perfect proportions may answer for a statue, but the human form should express grace in motion as well as in line. There should always be balance.

Balance is attained through the law of opposing weights or forces, and to preserve it best in the human body the chest is thrown up, the head is slightly back. If you rest on the right foot the left hip is thrust out a little to the right and the head tips a little to the left to balance.

Here are some exercises which will help you to acquire balance or the habit of perfect equilibrium:

First.—Chest up, weight on both feet; point left toe directly at the side, keeping weight on right foot.

Second.—Pushing yourself up, rise on the toes and transfer the weight to the left foot.

Third.—Similarly, place right foot to the right and transfer the weight as before.

Repeat; placing the feet first forward and then back. Practice this for several days; then add the following exercises:

First.—Stand easily and swing the toe of one foot around in front of the body till it is in line with the toe of the other foot; then repeat with other foot.

Second.—Repeat the exercise, swinging the toe around the back in the opposite side till it is in line with toe of the first foot.

Angular Elbows.

Often the joint of the elbow will protrude in ugly fashion—angular and bony, yellowed and with a thick skin directly over the bone. Such an elbow is far from beautiful. Even this, however, may be remedied by patient perseverance with cocoa butter and the gentle rubbing. Lemon juice will help to whiten, and if needed the toilet pumice stone may be used where the skin is really more like leather.

This condition is often brought about by the improper way of placing the elbow on the wooden arm of a chair and leaning heavily upon it. In time the pressure of the bone from within causes the joint to enlarge and the skin hardens. Only persistent attention to softening and rubbing in the oil of cocoa butter will help this, and time will be needed. A dimple in the elbow comes with proper forming of flesh that is soft. Dimples are natural where there is soft flesh, and a woman may have them in her finger and elbow joints if she will only take care to keep the tissues of the skin nourished.

If You Are Too Fat.

The woman who is too stout should take a daily brisk walk. If necessary begin with short distances and gradually increase to about five miles per diem. Abstain from all rich, greasy dishes; give up pastry, potatoes, new bread and much butter. Half an hour after each meal drink a tumblerful of hot water with the juice of half a lemon in it. Before breakfast take a glass of hot water with a quarter of a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda added. The results will soon be apparent in decreased weight.

For Mosquito Bites.

Mosquito bites may be rendered speedily painless by rubbing the place with a piece of soap slightly moistened to produce a lather, which is allowed to dry. A touch of ammonia is good.

Eradicating Warts.

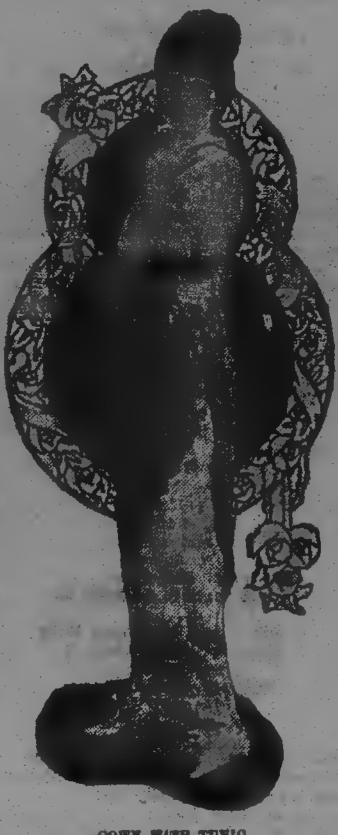
Warts will disappear if touched several times a day with acetic acid. Apply with a small camel's hair brush or the end of a match.

GRAY HAIR

Dr. Tremain's Natural Hair Restorative used as directed is guaranteed to restore gray hair to natural color or money refunded. Positively not a dye, and non-injurious. On sale at McDermid & Jury's Drug Store, Peterboro. Price $1.00 (postpaid). Write Tremain Supply Co., Dept. R.P., Toronto.

SEPARATE TUNICS.

They Are Useful In Rebuilding a Last Year's Gown.



GOWN WITH TUNIC.

Separate tunics may be purchased in the shops and are a boon to the woman who has a gown in need of renovation. The corn flower blue chiffon accordion plaited tunic illustrated here is worn with a gown of batiste and machine embroidery.

The silk hem on thin frocks is such a good thing that dressmakers have been loath to drop it, and so it appears on new summer frocks of lace and lingerie. Sometimes when lace or embroidered flouncings are used the hem is a fold of colored silk under the scallops of the flounce. Sometimes the hem is applied over the edge of the flounce either in a straight or scalloped upper edge. However it is put on, it adds to the charm of the frock in which it is used, and it is a sensible finish as well, for it is always stronger than the lace or lingerie with which it is combined.

Charming Neck Chains.

Silver and copper, often combined and sometimes used separately, are seen in the newest neck chains, lavallieres and rings. Semiprecious stones—lapis lazuli, beryl and turquoise—are used to ornament these. The uncut Ceylon sapphire is a fashionable stone, while rather large iris shaped pearls are used in the latest hatpin. Diamonds and pearls are combined in some of the latter. Admirable reproductions of jewelry of the Italian renaissance and slender enameled hoop bracelets daintily etched and colored are among the innovations.

Census Reports Take Time.

Each United States census report represents a compilation of statistics for the entire country, and much time is required to make an actual canvass and to publish the results. For example, in the census of manufacturers uniform reports must be secured from more than 270,000 establishments and in the census of agriculture from more than 6,000,000 farms. In collecting statistics from manufacturers, farmers, electric light and power plants, electric railways and other interests it is necessary to allow a sufficient time to fill out the schedule so as not to interfere with the conduct of private business.

WIGS, HOODS AND CAPS.

Shapes, Colors and Significance of Old Egyptian Headgear.

The reliefs and paintings on the walls of the tombs and temples of the Egyptians show that that race of people wore thick and elegant headdresses. Hats with brims were apparently unknown. Their headgear consisted of wigs, hoods and caps.

"The wigs were very likely made of hair or tow, for their great size could not have been made by dressing of a person's own hair; the caps were also very large and high and made of material which as to its kind can only be guessed at," says Charles E. Keater in a history and development of hats and headgear.

"The largest were cupola shaped, and their use was probably confined," he further says, "to those of royal blood. They were yellow, white and red. It is supposed that the yellow ones were made of brass and were a kind of helmet, that the white was the crown of upper Egypt and the red the crown of lower Egypt. The pschent, a combination of the white and red, was considered as the symbol of the rule over the land. Lower flat crowned caps were worn both alone and over a hood, and sometimes with a strap under the chin to hold the headpiece in place. The huge wigs were probably worn upon the shaven heads, as it is supposed that the clean shaven head was as prevalent in Egypt as it is now in tropical Asia."

A Reason For Tears.

An amusing story about Dr. Archibald Pitcairne, the physician, Jacobite and scholar, is told by Francis Watt in "The Book of Edinburgh Anecdote."

Dr. Pitcairne was not often a churchgoer, but on one occasion he took refuge in a church from a shower of rain The sermon was commonplace, but the preacher was emotional, and he wept copiously and, as it seemed to Pitcairne, irrelevantly. He turned to the only other occupant of the pew, a stolid countryman, and whispered, "What on earth gars the man greet (weep)?"

"You would maybe greet yourself," was the solemn answer, "if you was up there and had as little to say."

Points for Mothers

Pretty Pencil Cases.

A pencil case or end of some sort is a treasure in the childish mind. Little gifts of this sort make nice rewards for the child who is faithful to school work. One with a little colored stone in the end, cut with all the beauty of a jewel, is attractive. The jeweled end is removed to disclose an eraser, and when the pencil is not in use the pointed end is inserted in the case. The flat pencil case is dainty, but it accommodates only a special pencil, flat and short. The round cases are especially desirable because they make stubs of any pencils useful.

When Baby Has Thrush.

Thrush is usually brought on through sour milk, badly kept bottles, unwashed mouths or lack of fresh air. A delicate baby is more liable to thrush than a strong one. After feeding cleanse baby's mouth with a piece of soft rag dipped in a weak solution of boracic acid. Several times a day glycerin and borax should be rubbed on the white patches in the little mouth—a teaspoonful of borax to a tablespoonful of glycerin. Give baby bicarbonate of soda, castor oil and magnesia as recommended by the doctor.

Beads as Busy Work.

To keep your little folks' fingers busy have a box filled with colored beads. These never fail to interest them. The beads are strung on a stout string, with a knot in one end. Fix the box each evening for the next day's play. First the child may string all red, then all blue, beads. Now let it combine them rapidly, learning to choose and distinguish the different colors. It is progressing in this through its own efforts. When you give it a new color it will after a little experience assort and use them with intelligence.

Outstanding Ears.

The outstanding ear is most disfiguring. It is often caused through carelessness of the nurse or mother. The cartilage in the ear of a young child is soft and plastic and is often deformed by being folded over on the pillow while sleeping. Care should be taken that the ear lies flat to the head. If the outstanding is pronounced an ear cap made of narrow tape and elastic should be worn. This can be bought ready made at small cost.

"I'M glad you're buying sugar in these Original REDPATH Packages, dear! It is worth a lot to know that it is absolutely pure and clean."

Aeroplanes in War Time

"Nothing short of the collapse of his machine need cause the aviator now any worry—the stabilizer will take care of him automatically under all conditions of the air. His function now, will, indeed, be properly and wellnigh only that of a pilot as commonly understood." The author of these words is Elmer A. Sperry who was awarded a prize of $10,000 in France recently for his automatic aeroplane stabiliser. Sperry's invention is designed to prevent an aeroplane from turning sideways or upside down, or being overturned by a sudden gust of wind. An aeroplane equipped with one of these devices may drop straight to the ground, but it will never upset. Since most of the aeroplane disasters have been caused by the pilots losing control and being unable to keep their machines right side up, it is apparent that the Sperry stabilizer is a most important step toward the goal of making aeroplaning as safe as automobiling.

The aviator has not the time for making the observations that are important in military and scientific flights, and it was primarily for the purpose of enabling military airmen to make photographs and sketches and other observations without being always on the alert to maintain the equilibrium of the aeroplane that the Sperry stabilizer was made. Mr. Sperry is not the inventor of the gyroscope, which plays such an important part in the invention, but he has ingeniously adapted it to new uses. In his invention it is not the gyroscope that keeps the machine on an even keel. This is attained by a series of wires attached to the tips of the wings and to the rudder.

The Sperry gyroscopes are four in number, each about the size of a large apple, and each electrically-operated. These little spinning wheels are, as it were, sentinels of the air.

During the scores of flights in France, Lawrence Sperry subjected his automatically stabilized biplane to rigorous tests. While 600 feet up in the air he got out of his seat, leaving the steering wheel, and stood up. After taking this position his mechanic crawled out on the wings laterally to a distance of nearly seven feet, thus creating an upsetting force which would have meant sure death under ordinary circumstances. Nevertheless the hydro-aeroplane went smoothly on, controlling itself the while, the stabilizer shifting the ailerons at the wing tips so as to create a compensating pressure at the end of the planes furthest from the venturesome mechanic. Not content with this proof of lateral stability, Sperry shifted his own weight by getting out of his control seat and standing as before, thereby leaving the manœuvring of the machine to its own impulse. Next, the mechanic crept back toward the tail, but in spite of that shift of weight the hydro-aeroplane kept its poise undisturbed, the longitudinal stabilizing gyros manipulating the tail planes or elevators to the necessary degree.

ADVOCATE OF PEACE

Racial Hates Produce War, Says Author.

Mr. Norman Angell, author of "The Great Illusion"—an epoch-making book in the literature fo warfare—interviewed by a London newspaper man, made some interesting observations on the great European struggle. He said:

"I imagine that, at the outbreak of the Thirty Years' War, whatever corresponded to the modern warlike leader-writer, was congratulating the world that men were still to be found ready to fight for their religion, which means trying to destroy somebody else's religion.

"The racial hates," Mr. Angell continued, "that are producing these wars in Europe correspond to the religious hates that produced a century or two of war in Central Europe. These religious wars were produced by a false conception of what political power could and should do in the matter of imposing religious belief.

"These present wars arise out of a false conception as to what political power can and should do in the matter of imposing the domination of one race over another.

"In both cases it is a misconception of how political power should be used for the general welfare. If it is sordid to consider what the relations of States should be in order to secure the well-being of their respective citizens, then I am afraid these explosions of hate and bitterness and all the vileness that accompanies them will go on until men are sufficiently sordid to ask what the outcome of it will be."

ALSACE-LORRAINE IS A RICH PRIZE

That corner of Europe known as Alsace-Lorraine was annexed to the German Empire, when it was made the price of peace with France in 1870 by Bismarck. Its two millions of people have never been assimilated although a varying policy of military sternness has been alternated with kindness as means of uniting their sympathies to the German empire.

It covers about 5,000 square miles to the west of the Rhine and is one of the richest portions of Europe. Its capital, Strassburg, has 160,000 inhabitants. Its mines produce more iron by half than those of Prussia. It is rich in coal and its cities are the seats of many manufacturing industries. Muelhausen is the seat of cotton weaving.

Alsace, rich and fertile, produces more wines than the rest of Germany. Wheat, rye and barley are large products.

Its history has been turbulent and it has shifted from empire to empire as new maps of Europe were drawn in war.

Many of its people removed to France to escape the policy of Germany, which was to Teutonize it by enforced use of the German language. For the most part the military party has enforced its policy of a rule by force and this has kept alive rather than crushed the love for France.

The country is highly developed, is covered with a network of railroads and in addition there is a system of canals which provided cheap transportation.

KING ALBERT IS SMILING

Belgian Ruler Seems Confident Says Correspondent

LONDON, Aug. 15. — A despatch from Brussels states that the stories of the number of Germans killed in Thursday's fighting varied a great deal, the lowest estimate being 1,000, and the highest 4,000. "We returned to Louvain," wires one correspondent, "amid continued scenes of warlike enthusiasm, the soldiers and peasants surrounding our car and insisting on shaking hands. Here again the first question asked was: 'Where are the British."

"At Louvain we found the King in consultation with the general staff. His Majesty was dressed in a general's field uniform and looked smiling and confident.

"The roads leading into Brussels last night were crowded with a mournful procession of Red Cross wagons, bringing in the wounded, both Belgian and German. Walking by the sides of the carts comforting the sufferers were numerous priests and monks wearing the Red Cross badge. The scene was piteous and moved all beholders to tears. Soldiers returning to the front were greeted along the road by innumerable women and children, who handed them bottles of wine, bread and meat, and do not forget to be repaid with a kiss."

JAPANESE NAVY HAS SAILED

Will Co-operate With British Fleet Against Germans

PARIS, Aug. 15.—The Journal last night states it is absolutely certain that Japan will declare war against Germany.

LONDON, Aug. 16. — The Daily Telegraph says that the Japanese navy has put to sea and will co-operate with the British fleet in taking effective action against the enemy's ships in the Pacific.

Despatches have appeared from time to time declaring that part of the Japanese fleet, divided into several squadrons and including eight battleships and seven cruisers, was ready to join with the British fleet in an attack on German ships, or on Kiao-Chau, the German possession in China. A number of German and Austrian warships were last reported under the shelter of German fortifications in the harbor of Tsing-Tau.

German Humanity League Sends Startling Message to Britain.

LONDON, Aug. 15.—The British Humanity League had received a striking message of fraternal greeting from the Humanity League of Berlin. The message, which is dated Aug. 11, reads in part as follows:

"Nakedly revealing himself, we see the uncurbed tyrant surrounded by a group of parasites who are now directing the most desperate, most devilish, and most selfish campaign ever waged against humanity.

"We extend our hands in the heartiest friendship to every Belgian, British and French democrat. We know that the internal revolution now proceeding in our midst will depose the despot whose insatiable egotism is now drenching Europe with the blood of its workers and wage-earners."

WHEN FOOD TAXES YOUR STRENGTH

You Need the Tonic Treatment of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

When the food you take fails to nourish, when it causes you pain and often a feeling of extreme nausea, the cause is indigestion. Your stomach is too feeble to do its work and you will continue to suffer until you strengthen your digestive powers. Your digestion has failed because your stomach is not receiving the pure, red blood of health to give it strength for its work.

The tonic treatment of indigestion by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People succeeds by building up and enriching the blood supply, so that the feeble digestive organs are strengthened, appetite is restored, and tone given the whole system. Thousands have proved this by personal experience, as is shown by the following typical instance. Mrs. James Boyle, Dartmouth, N. S., says: "For years I was a sufferer from indigestion. I could not take food without feeling terrible distress afterwards, and in consequence I was badly run down. Sometimes after eating I would take spells of dizziness with a feeling of numbness throughout my body, and at other times my heart would palpitate so violently that I feared I would die. Naturally I was doctoring continually, but without getting better. Then my husband got me a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and before long I found they were helping me, and I continued to take them until I was restored to health. I was never in better health than I am now, and I owe it all to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

These Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or you can get them by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SUGGESTION MADE THAT LEGISLATORS GIVE THEIR INDEMNITIES TO FUND

Session at Ottawa is Expected to be Very Brief and Legislation is Being Rushed—Stamp Act Possible to Meet Heavy Expenditure—One Hundred Canadian Nurses Will Go to the Front.

OTTAWA, Aug. 15. — The special session of Parliament called for next Tuesday will not likely last more than a week or ten days. A few members are said to favor keeping open for a month at least, in which case the members of both the Commons and Senate would be entitled to the full sessional indemnity of $2,500.

There will not be much sympathy, however, with the idea of staying longer than necessary to vote the war funds and pass the legislation which the Government requires. Some of the members who have already arrived are even suggesting that they should all contribute their allowance of $20 per day, which is given for sessions of less than thirty days, to help the various funds for the relief of distress.

The war budget to be presented by Hon. W. T. White, Finance Minister, will be a fairly large sum, probably more than the thirty-five millions which were proposed as an emergency contribution, for the cost of the Canadian expeditionary force and of home defence will be heavy. The amount to be voted, however, will be a mere fraction of the enormous burden of over a billion dollars, just assumed by the people of the Mother Country.

The legislation may include an amendment to the Anti-Combines Act to prevent corners in food products, and it may also include some financial legislation. The custom receipts for the month of July showed a decline of $3,000,000 as compared with July of last year, and it is likely that these receipts will continue to decrease from month to month.

It will therefore be necessary to raise some revenue by direct taxation. This may take the form of stamp duties, such as were adopted by the United States at the time of the Spanish war, and be levied upon bank checks and commercial paper, deeds, mortgages and all legal transfers, railway tickets, bills of lading and telegraphic messages.

No intimation, however, has been given by the Finance Minister respecting the proposals which he will submitmit to Parliament. The Cabinet is sitting every afternoon and evening and sometimes late into the night, and it is hoped that all Government measures will be ready for introduction upon the assembling of Parliament.

It is rumored that the Government will ask for authority similar to that taken by the Imperial Government under the recent statute of moratorium. However that may be, it is certain that the financial situation is receiving the careful attention of the Government. No announcement of fiscal changes or financial legislation will be made before the meeting of Parliament.

The Horse Artillery from Kingston left Thursday night for the mobilisation camp at Valcartier. The Army Service Corps, 500 strong, gather there to-day and to-morrow to get the camp in readiness, build ovens, etc., and the infantry regiments are expected to begin to go down on Monday.

Telegraph and telephone lines are being built out to the camp, a splendid water supply will be available and every sanitary precaution is being taken.

The Field Artillery and the heavy artillery from Montreal will be the last to go to Valcartier, since they will completely equip and mobilize at the local headquarters first.

By mistake, orders went out that the minimum height for gunners was five feet seven inches, while it should have been five feet five inches, and many good men would have been excluded. No less than 50 were turned down at Hamilton. They can go yet, however.

Out of the hundreds of applications that have come in from trained nurses and young women all over the Dominion, 100 will be chosen to go to the war with Canada's first army division.

OFFICIAL BULLETINS.

War Office Announces Successes of Allied Troops.

LONDON, Aug. 15.—The official press bureau of the British War Office and Admiralty yesterday issued news of a French success in the Vosges Mountains, Alsace, in the following words:

"After a successful resistance lasting five days at the passes of Sainte Marie-Aux-Mines and Le Bonhomme, the French troops have occupied the region of the Saale Pass, which commands the valley of the Bruche, an affluent of the Rhine.

"At Saale numerous desertions of German troops are notified.

"The French have taken many prisoners and captured some machine guns.

"It is now confirmed that the Belgian troops were successful in their engagement on Aug. 12 with six regiments of cavalry, supported by 2,500 infantry with machine guns and artillery.

"The Germans were completely disorganized. The six cavalry regiments suffered great loss and the Belgian troops pursued the infantry, which gave way.

"This (Friday) morning towards Eghezee, ten miles north of Namur, a mixed detachment from the garrison surprised some cavalry regiments encamped, threw them into confusion and fought them towards the east after taking numerous prisoners and capturing cannon and machine guns.

"To the southward of the Meuse the German cavalry avoids contact with the French.

"News of the fighting in the vicinity of Haelen yesterday confirms that the Germans were driven to the east, and that there is now no German cavalry between Hasselt and Ramillies, in the province of Brabant.

"The Liege forts still hold out and have plenty of supplies.

"German cavalry patrols are now reported to the north of Montmedy, which lies on the Franco-Belgian border, in the department of the Meuse."

The communication of the official press bureau concludes:

"Belgian cyclists and cavalry from Namur yesterday surprised a force of German cavalry, accompanied by artillery and machine guns, and compelled them to retire. The Germans lost a field gun and several machine guns."

COLONIAL CORPS

Five Hundred Expert Riders and Shots Selected

LONDON, Aug. 15.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—Five hundred expert riders and shots who have been selected to form a "colonial corps," including Canadians, Australians, and New Zealanders, were inspected on the Horse Guards' parade yesterday by Gen. Bethune, who congratulated the corps on its splendid turnout and condition. Practically all of them have seen active service and wore their war medals. With one exception they were in everyday attire and several wore top hats. Many of them are in good business positions and will, if the War Office recognizes their corps, provide their own horses and equipment. One and all they are anxious to take part in active service.

Postmaster and Mayor Shot.

PARIS, Aug. 15.—It is officially announced that a number of German spies are operating among the French troops in Alsace. The postmaster and mayor of Thann, a town twelve miles northwest of Muhlhausen, were detected in the act of spying and shot.

The War Office states that in the operations at Liege the Belgians captured 2,000 prisoners, while the French on the frontier took more than 1,500 prisoners.

Two Austrian Prizes.

MONTREAL, Aug. 15.—The Austrian steamers Ida and Captain Martinolich, were taken over by the Marine Department at Quebec yesterday as war prizes. They arrived from Austrian ports Thursday evening.

SOCIETY WOMAN SHOT.

Swiss Lady Charged With Trying To Blow Up Tunnel.

GENEVA, Aug. 15.—Mme. Favre Schwarz, of Basle, a young and beautiful Swiss lady, married to one of the richest men in Alsace-Lorraine, was shot yesterday by the Germans after a court-martial. She was accused of attempting to blow up an important tunnel on the railway line near Leopoldsthall.

Mme. Schwarz made no secret of her intense French sympathies. Having been found guilty and sentenced to death she shouted "Vive la France." She died with this cry on her lips.

Police Chief's Warning.

MONTREAL, Aug. 15. — Chief Campeau of the Montreal police force said yesterday that everything would be done to see that natives of Germany or Austria were not molested so long as they remained quiet, but if they showed any evidence of creating trouble they would be promptly arrested and kept in detention until such time as the war is over.

ETHICS OF WAR

Russian troops were sent into Germany without any previous declaration of war; German troops were sent into France in like manner. A French aviator was denounced for dropping bombs from an aeroplane, and was accused of "a crime against the rights of man," because "there was no declaration of war." Russia went on with the mobilization of her army before war had been declared, and justified doing so by alleging that Germany was delaying the declaration in order to become more ready to act when the declaration should be published.

"Declarations of war" seem to be going out of fashion. If the old practice had nothing else to recommend it, there was at least an appearance of good faith maintained. To fight without a challenge has an appearance of sneakishness that is quite repugnant to ordinary chivalry.—Toronto Globe.

Nothing But Metal

The reason battleships, when stripping for action, cast overboard all moveable furniture, and pry loose doors, etc., is the fear that splinters from the woodwork might wound the members of the crew. A modern battleship stripped for fighting resembles nothing more than a coal stove.

Buying almost ceased at times on account of the bearish Liverpool cables because of discouragement regarding the lack of exports. Wheat closed 1 3-4c to 2c under last night. Corn finished 3-4c to 1 5-8c down, oats off 1-2c to 3-4c and provisions varying from 25c decline to a shade advance.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 14.—The first two cars of new wheat were inspected yesterday and graded No. 1 northern. They were shipped from Letellier and are four days earlier than last year. Oats of lower grade than No. 3 C. W. are now released by the government, these not being wanted. Trading was quiet and all grain prices generally were weaker. Hedging sales on the new crop have been going on for the last two days, indicating that elevator companies are now buying wheat in the west.

The cash demand for wheat of contract grades continued good, but offerings are few on the market; other grains are slow. Liverpool cash wheat was 1d to 3d lower and Americans were also easier.

Later at the close wheat and flax were decidedly weak. Wheat lost for the day 3 1-4c and flax 4 1-4c to 6 3-4c. Winnipeg wheat opened 3-4c to 1 7-8c lower and closed 3 1-4c down for all months. Minneapolis opened unchanged to 1-2c lower and closed 1 7-8c to 2 1-8c lower. Cash wheat closed 3c to 3 1-2c lower for contract grades; cash oats closed 1c lower to 1c higher. Cash barley closed unchanged; cash flax closed 7c down.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 14.—Altho prices in the Winnipeg option market for oats are steadily declining, it has no influence on the local situation, which is stronger than ever owing to the limited supplies available and the continued good demand. Prices scored another advance today of 1c per bushel with sales of round lots No. 2 Canadian western at 58c per bushel afloat.

Flour is firm and the market is active with a good demand. The trade in mill feed is good, and millers in some cases are oversold. Demand for hay is good and the market strong. The feeling in butter continues strong, and prices are steadily working upward with sales finest creamery at auction today at 27⅞c. Four Slightly Hurt In Wreck.

KINGSTON, Ont., Aug. 15. — A message from Tamworth states that the Canadian Northern train which passed at ten o'clock had been wrecked at Erinsville, four miles from that place. Four of the passengers, received slight injuries. Three or four other passengers also received a shaking up. Men in charge of the train were not hurt. The engineer and fireman received nothing more than a shock, as the locomotive remained on the rails. The baggage car and one of the passenger cars toppled off the rails and were thrown off at the side. It is supposed that the wreck was caused by the rails spreading.

HAVE PRETTY HAIR

Soft, Fluffy, Abundant—Use Parisian Sage. It Stops Falling Hair and Itching Scalp.

If your hair is not as soft and beautiful, or as fresh and full as that of some friend, do not despair—do as she does—give it daily attention. Beautiful hair is largely the matter of a little care. If it is too thin, make it grow. If it is too dry and brittle, soften it up—lubricate it. If you have dandruff, it is because the scalp is too dry and flakes off. Freshen up the scalp and dandruff will go.

Parisian Sage, sold in fifty cent bottles at drug and toilet counters, is just what you need—it softens the scalp, nourishes the hair roots, immediately removes dandruff, and makes the hair wavy, lustrous and abundant.

Parisian Sage quickly stops itching head; cleanses the hair of dust and excessive oil; takes away the dryness and brittleness, makes it seem twice as abundant, and beautifies it until it is soft and lustrous.

You cannot be disappointed in Parisian Sage. Always sold by The Warne Drug Co. on money back if not satisfied plan. Look for the trade mark—"The Girl with the Auburn Hair." It's on every package—accept nothing else.

TRIED TO FIRE STORES.

Sentry at London Baulks Attempts on Militia Buildings.

LONDON, Ont., Aug. 15. — Two more attempts were made to damage the militia department's buildings in this city this morning. At 1.30 a.m. two men were discovered by a vigilant guard plunging over a fence at the ordnance stores, where an unsuccessful attempt was made to burn the building yesterday morning. After challenging the men for a third time and receiving no reply the guard fired. The men quickly vanished in the darkness.

About 3 o'clock when two guards started to investigate suspicious noises at the rear of the armories on Dundas street they were met by an unidentified man who fired a revolver from the darkness without effect. The guard replied with two rifle shots and the man ran rapidly to King street, half a block away, where a waiting auto quickly whisked him out of sight. It is believed that it was the intention to set the armories on fire.

Austrian Steamer Blown Up.

LONDON, Aug. 15. — A despatch from Trieste is authority for the statement that about 150 of the passengers and crew of the Austrian Lloyd steamship, Baron Gautsch, were killed out right or drowned by the blowing up of the vessel by a mine off the Island Lusin, on the coast of Dalmatia.

The Baron Gautsch had about 300 passengers aboard, and carried a full crew. Apparently about half of those on board were rescued.

TRIED TO WRECK WIRELESS.

Unknown Person or Persons Almost Succeeded at Port Arthur.

PORT ARTHUR, Ont., Aug. 15.—A deliberate and almost successful attempt to put the Government wireless station at Port Arthur out of commission was made early yesterday morning, and as it was, the station has been out of operation for nine hours while repairs were being made. Operator O. G. Hughes, who was on duty alone during the night, noticed that communications had been cut and on investigation found that the aerials had fallen to the ground. He called the operator in charge, John Bartlett, from a nearby house where he was sleeping. Bartlett hurried out and saw two men who ran from him. As they ran they fired two shots and as Bartlett was unarmed he did not continue the pursuit. Further examination showed some cables supporting the big masts had been cut, but the masts were still upright.

ONTARIO WOMAN'S FORTUNE

Freed From That Weak, Languid, Always Tired Feeling, by Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.

Thessalon, Ont.—"I cannot speak too highly of your medicine. When my appetite is poor and I have that weak, languid, always tired feeling, I get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it builds me up, gives me strength, and restores me to perfect health again. It is truly a blessing to women, and I cannot speak highly enough of it. I take pleasure in recommending it to others."—Mrs. ANNIE CAMERON, Thessalon, Ont.

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

There are probably hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions of women in the United States who have been benefited by this famous old remedy, which was produced from roots and herbs over 30 years ago by a woman to relieve woman's suffering. If you are sick and need such a medicine, why don't you try it?

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Modern Fortifications

Canadian's View of Strongholds Along Franco-German Border.

Describing the French forts, stretching from the Swiss to the Belgiar frontiers, Mr. H. B. Ames, M.P., of Montreal, declared that they are not at all the huge piles of stone which people conjure up in mind when forts are mentioned. Visitors to the fortified cities see the big military stores and the soldiers but the forts themselves are hidden on hillsides, their guns commanding a wide range of country stripped of anything which could afford cover to an invader.

The forts, Mr. Ames said, are generally clustered together and in such a manner that each fort may be demolished by that immediately behind it. All guns are hidden and each fort is served by its own tram line for the transportation of men, machine guns and light artillery.

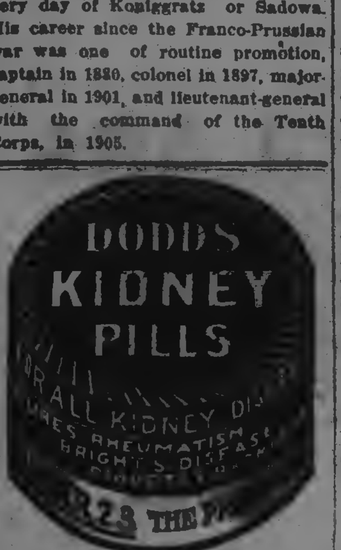
Servia's Royal Families

Rule in Servia has swung between the rival families of Karageorgevitch and Obrenovitch since the founder of the first-named then but a peasant in 1804, led a revolt against Turkish rule.

After Servia went back under Turkish rule in 1813, a peasant Milosh Obrenovitch led a revolt for autonomy in 1815. He abdicated to his son Their rivals regained power in 1842 but 16 years later the aged leader was recalled to the throne. His family ruled until the assassination of Alexander and Queen Draga when King Peter was recalled from exile in Switzerland and unwillingly came to restore the Karageorgevitch dynasty.

General Von Emmich

Lieut.-Gen. Otto von Emmich, commander of the German forces which were hurled against Belgium, saw service as lieutenant in the war of 1870-71, in which he won the Iron Cross of the second class for valor. He missed taking part in the war of 1866 against Austria by the narrowest of margins, having joined an infantry regiment as a subaltern on the very day of Koniggratz or Sadowa. His career since the Franco-Prussian war was one of routine promotion, captain in 1880, colonel in 1897, major-general in 1901, and lieutenant-general with the command of the Tenth Corps, in 1905.



Wireless in War Plays a Big Part

One of the most important considerations in modern warfare is the maintenance of regular telegraphic communication. To render such communication ineffective is among the early plans of a belligerent nation, and it fares badly with a country which is dependent only upon overhead telegraph lines or submarine cables, both of which lie at the mercy of the enemy. It will be interesting therefore to watch the effect of wireless telegraphy upon the course of operations. The station which will probably figure prominently in such a contingency is the French military station at the Eiffel Tower in Paris, which is known to almost every amateur wireless man in Europe.

Through the medium of the Eiffel Tower regular communication should be maintained with the wireless telegraph stations in England, Russia and Belgium, and the four allies should therefore be able to keep in continuous communication despite an interruption of the ordinary telegraph service. The danger of interference with the wireless service by station of the opposing nations is practical non-existent. To commence with each station would be too busily engaged in dealing with its own correspondence to attempt to prevent another station from working, and at best they could hope to overh a communications just as they migh attempt to tap messages passing ove land lines or cables.

In wireless telegraphy the adjustment of one circuit to another in such a way that the "time periods" are the same throughout the system so that electro-magnetic waves possessing a different time-period will produce little or no effect on the system, considerably reduces the danger of tapping messages, whilst the provision of secret codes and cyphers would make such fragments of messages as are overheard unintelligible to an outside party.

Eiffel Tower Station possesses the further advantage that interference is practically impossible owing to the peculiar sound of the signal emitted In Germany the principal station is at Norddeich, which has a range of about 800 miles by night and 160 by day. The Nanen station, near Berlin, might also be of considerable service.

An incident during the recent Balkan War illustrates the remarkable reliability of wireless telegraphy. During the siege of Adrianople all communications between the city and Constantinople was stopped. But shut up in the beleaguered city with the imprisoned garrison was a small Marconi wireless telegraph station of the portable type, and this fortunate circumstance alone enabled her to keep in touch with Constantinople where is installed another Marconi station.

At no time did the station fail, and during the time that the city was invested over 450,900 words were transmitted to headquarters without a hitch. This, too, in spite of the difficulties the Allies attempted to create by placing one of their stations to the westward of Adrianople and another to the eastward, so that they might come as nearly as possible in a direct line between the Adrianople and Constantinople stations. As soon as the lattor commenced calling up Adrianople, or vice versa, the Allies hammered away at their two stations in a vigorous but vain attempt to "jam" the Turkish signals. The efforts of the Turks were entirely successful, and the calls were transmitted and received without the slightest inconvenience.

Of the equipment of battleships with this apparatus sufficient is already known. But what is not so well known is that, thanks to Mr. Marconi's genius, portable wireless telegraphy is available for field use. An army divided by its enemy is able to keep in touch with all its units, and reconnoitring and flanking movements could be carried out with greater safety than hitherto possible. Thus does wireless telegraphy affect military strategy.

Portable military stations are designed to be carried in carts, automobiles, on pack-saddles and by hand, and they are adapted for use on aeroplanes and airships, the range of communication being between 12 and 350 miles or more, according to the type employed.

Real Dogs of War

Canines Have Assisted Men on Many Battlefields.

Dogs of war are now familiar terms, but their use in a literal sense gave a London writer occasion for telling about the use of dogs in the wars of the past.

"Dogs," says the London writer, "have gone to the wars from the very earliest time. They barked at the Siege of Troy. In those early days, however, they were used as sentinels and for purposes of defence. In the middle ages they attacked. The tracking mission of the Scottish bloodhound had been noted, but the dogs were also used to attack cavalry For this duty they were clothed in coats of mail studded with spikes and scythes to confuse the horses And when firebrands were also attached to the mail the opposing camp looked for fire extinguishers. That these dogs played no mean part in the field is proved by the fact that Henry VIII. offered the Spanish King Charles V., 40,000 auxiliaries and 4,000 war dogs to help him against Francis I."

HIDING THE JOKER NUGGET.

An Incident of the Early Australian Gold Diggings.

Among the rich finds in the Australian gold diggings the Joker nugget ranks among the chief. It turned the scale at thirty ounces and was sold for $600. In size and shape it resembled a man's hand, thick at the wrist part and tapering off toward the fingers.

The claim had been a good one from the first, and the owner did not have to work hard. One day he was reclining full length idly searching for nuggets when he caught sight of the Joker. He at once covered it with his hand and sat up, rather wondering how he would secure the treasure without being seen. If the find became known every man in the field would tramp to the spot and invade his claim and so prevent his working.

A man in an adjoining claim looked up. "Found anything?" he asked. "No. Seen the color; that's all. Pitch my coat over to me, will you? It's lying near there. I want a smoke." "Here you are, mate. But what's the matter? You look pale. Don't you feel right?" "I'm all right, only the sun is a bit hot."

He was struggling with an insane desire to laugh, but he got his coat over the nugget and seated himself on the top of it. Then laughter overpowered him, and he became hysterical. Those about him wondered, but thought the sun had affected him.

In a little while he gained his composure and decided to go to his tent. In lifting his coat he managed to take up the lump of gold, and no one knew that he had found anything. It was not until ten days had passed that the fact was noised abroad, and even then few knew the claim whence the Joker came.

EATING IN BERLIN.

A Humorist's View of the Natives' Wonderful Appetites.

The average Berliner has a double chin running all the way around and four rolls of fat on the back of his neck, all closely clipped and shaved, so as to bring out their full beauty and symmetry, and he has a figure that makes him look as though an earthquake had shaken loose everything on the top floor and it had all fallen through into his dining room.

Your true Berliner eats his regular daily meals, four in number and all large ones, and in between times he now and then gathers a bite. For instance, about 10 o'clock in the morning he knocks off for an hour and has a few cups of hard boiled coffee and some sweet, sticky pastry with whipped cream on it.

Then about 4 o'clock in the afternoon he browses a bit, just to keep up his appetite for dinner. This, though, is but a snack—say a school of Bismarck herring and a kraut pie, some more coffee and more cake and one thing and another—merely a preliminary to the real food, which will be comin along a little later on.

Between acts at the theater he excuses himself and goes out and prepares his stomach for supper, which will follow at 11 o'clock, by drinking two or three steins of thick Munich beer and nibbling on such small tidbits as a few links of German sausage or the upper half of a raw Westphalia ham.

There are forty-seven distinct and separate varieties of German sausage, and three of them are edible, but the Westphalia ham, in my judgment, is greatly overrated. It is pronounced Westfailure, with the accent on the last part, where it belongs.

In Germany, however, there is a pheasant agreeably smothered in young cabbage, which is delicious and in season plentiful. The only drawback to complete enjoyment of this dish is that the grasping and avaricious German restaurant keeper has the confounded nerve to charge you, in our money, 40 cents for a whole pheasant and half a peck of cabbage—say enough to furnish a full meal for two tolerably hungry adults and a child.—Irvin S. Cobb in Saturday Evening Post.

PETES TOOK DOUBLE BILL

(Special to The Review.)

Toronto, Aug. 15.—The Petes won both games of the matinee bill yesterday. Both were one run victories 5-4 and 2-1. The work of the pitchers was air tight in both struggles while in the opening encounter the Beavers showed numerous ragged fielding stunts. Graham pitched just as good as Tracey but the latter was given finer support. In the second game Schettler was opposed by Palermo and it was a duel from start to finish. The Petes bunched their three hits in the seventh, when the Cuban weakened, and shoved over two counters. The Beavers made a strong bid in their half but one was all they could secure off Schettler's delivery. The scores :

GEORGE STALLINGS AND HIS BRAVES IN SECOND PLACE

Boston Pilot's Double Record Equals Anything the Game Has Produced

Now that George Stallings has accomplished the remarkable feat of landing the Boston Braves in second place in the National League pennant race, his Boston career is an exact photograph of his New York American league achievement.

Grantland Rice recalls that Stallings went to the Yanks in 1909, when they had just finished last and were in a terrible state of decomposition. By the end of the year he had lifted them to fifth place; by the final stages of the year after he had taken them to second place—achieving one of the miracles of the trade before he was supplanted and turned adrift.

Out for Two Years.

For two seasons after that Stallings held no big league commission, but in 1913 he was again brought back under the big tent and awarded charge of another hopeless tailender. If anything, the Boston Braves of 1912 carried a greater cargo of cheese aboard than the Yanks of 1908. Yet Stallings again went to work on a hopeless task, and, without using dynamite or any other explosive, promptly lifted the Braves to fifth place—just as he had lifted the Yanks four years before.

When the 1914 campaign opened there were a few that believed that Stallings could hoist the Braves into the first division. A lesser number tipped him to finish third. But when, by the middle of June, his people were a bad last, staggering under a heavy burden of losses, the first division tip was exploded and no one figured he had a chance of even holding fifth place at the end of the year.

Another Miracle.

Then another miracle began to break. By July 1 he had begun closing in on Pittsburg and Brooklyn; by July 20 he had passed both clubs; by August 1 he had passed Philadelphia and Cincinnati — moving into the first division. And now, he has passed the Cardinals and Cubs, is in second place and within reach of the Giants.

Stallings' double record with the Yanks and the Braves equals anything the game has produced.

In 1907 Jennings took charge of the Tigers. They had finished seventh in 1906. Hughey then won three pennants in a row before he was headed. But Hughey had good material to start with. He had but little reorganization to accomplish.

In 1912 Clark Griffith assumed command of Washington, a hopeless seventh placer. He finished second and nosed out the Mackmen. Last season he still held his club in second place, showing that no fluke had been accomplished.

These were all great achievements. But we find no other record where one man has taken charge of two different tail-end clubs and within two years has lifted them both from the rut into spiking distance of the top.

System of Stallings.

Pitcher Russell Ford, formerly of the Yankees, and now of the Buffalo Feds, who worked under Stallings for several seasons, both in the minors and the majors, has this to say for him :

"Stallings has a wonderful system of working his men. He's a wild man on the bench—after his club every minute. The player who loafs or shirks his work is in for an awful panning. He doesn't care what he says — nor how he says it. But, with all that, he is always fair. And the minute the game's over he lets you know that he is with the club to the finish, and that what he said on the field doesn't go.

"Here's an example," continued Ford. "One day he went after an infielder who had tangled things up, and rode him all over the lot. From what he said to that player you might have thought that at the next sunrise this athlete would be backed up against the wall and shot. The player himself was wondering whether Stallings would shoot him or poison him after the game. He picked up the paper the next morning, expecting to see that he had been released or sent back to the bush. In place of that, he saw a half column interview, with Stallings praising him highly as a promising youngster, and excusing every error he had made the day before. From that day on he went out and worked his head off. He had found that Stallings had nothing against him, but was merely crazy to win every game that was played. His keenness to win soon had every player under him feeling the same way about it, and even after a long streak of bad luck you never see one of Stallings' club quitting or giving up."

Rumors of a trade which will send Heinie Zimmerman to the Giants are afloat but it seems from here as though they are actually uncensored rumors. O'Day wants either Fletcher or Burns for Zimmerman and it is safe betting that McGraw will not part with either. Zimmerman is a trouble maker from the ground. He fought with one of his club members, Bresnahan, on Tuesday, and was not even suspended. He has been chased from more games than any three players or managers of big league ball combined. Withal he is a great player but would be of greater service if he had a few inches of common sense knocked into his leather nut, which seems only to know the location of a ball and the swing of a bat.

"No, she's getting lukewarm. Been to sixteen meetings and hasn't won a bridge prize yet."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Domestic Hostilities.

"Sure; it was the only way the poor man could think of to get any peace and quiet."—Baltimore American.

THE LONDON BASEBALL TEAM

Doc Reisling's Tecumsehs are battling at Ottawa in the crucial series of the season, and have so far broken even with the Senators, having won on Thursday and lost yesterday.

Big Leagne Clubs After Frank Kelly

Several big league clubs are angling for Frank Kelly, the local backstop. The youngster is a great prospect. This is his first year in fast company. He is a graduate of the Erie City League, has a deadly arm, carloads of pep and is fast. He is weak on curve balls but could easily overcome that fault as he has a nice, natural swing. As high as $1,500 has been offered by some of the big tent people. "Shag" told the writer that Kelly was in the making a future star. "He can fling them down like a bullet and is good on the bases, and will easily become a good hitter," added "Shag." Umpires Lush and Miller were also Kelly boosters and as they have seen many good ones in service their word is worth something.

COMMENT As You Like It

While the eyes of the Canadian League are focused on the Ottawa-London series the baseball world at large is watching George Stallings and his Boston Braves. While Ottawa easily disposed of Reisling and his men yesterday, Boston again smothered New York and it is safe betting that McGraw lost many winks last evening. Rudolph the former Toronto slabman humbled the Giants on Thursday while James easily outclassed Jeff Tesreau and Cartoonist Demaree yesterday. The Evers, Maranville combination around second has proven itself just as good as Barry and Collins, if not better from a brainal viewpoint. Connelly in the outfield is a dangerous batter while Schmidt on first has proven a man of strength while the improvement in Deal at third is a credit to Chief Stallings.

But why talk of Boston, etc., etc., when the Petes won two games yesterday and owing to St. Thomas' reverse placed themselves in a line for fourth position. It was a victory worth while and from a "strategic" standpoint we rise to remark that General C. Blount has rushed his forces into a position which will easily have them in fifth if not fourth place when peace is arranged.

Joe Picard says that war is worse than what General Sherman said about it. He admits he was never at the front but last night he dreamed that General Joffre repulsed the Germans in the region of Hoff Brau, on the Rye near Kuntzville. Joe says that the two Peterboro triumphs of yesterday were no dream. He also announces that the atmosphere of the past few days has taken on a football odor.

New York.

New York is the most wonderful city in the western hemisphere. It has the tallest office buildings in the world; it has the greatest bridges on the North American continent; it has more hotels than any other city in the world; its Stock Exchange is the greatest in existence; it is the world's greatest seaport; it has the most magnificent railway stations in America; it is the greatest banking center in the country; more popular songs are published in New York than in all other cities combined; it has more Pittsburgh millionaires than Pittsburgh; it has a larger Irish population than Dublin, a larger Jewish population than Jerusalem had in its most glorious days, and, according to estimates made by some of our most able estimators, it has a larger number of native New Yorkers than Cohoes.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Isle of Man's Busy Governor.

For plurality in office the palm must go to the governor of the Isle of Man. According to Spencer Walpole's account of the "Island of Home Rule," the governor is chancellor, president of the common law courts, president of the council, president of the Tynwald court and, in addition, acts as his own prime minister, home secretary and head of the treasury.—London Chronicle.

A Case of Dropsy.

She—Do you know it is dangerous to use some words carelessly? Thus, if you were to drop the first letter in music it would make you sick. He—Yes, and if soldiers in battle were to drop the first letter in griddled they'd get riddled.—Buffalo Express.

On the Way.

"Why doesn't that dachshund come when I call him? The idea of sulking on me!"

"He's coming as fast as he can," said the man's wife. "He's got his front legs started."—Washington Herald.

Mutiny on Steamer.

RIO JANEIRO, Aug. 15.—A mutiny broke out among the crew of the German steamer Bluecher, which after sailing from this port for an unknown destination, returned a short time later. Lying in the port of Pernambuco are several German liners, with a total of 5,000 German steerage passengers on board. The captains of the vessels fear to proceed owing to the danger of capture by British warships.

Shareholders Warned.

LONDON, Aug. 15.—The British Board of Trade yesterday issued a warning to holders of shares in American railroad companies, and in the Canadian Pacific Railway Co., carefully to examine their certificates, and if the registered holder is German or an Austrian, or a German or an Austrian company, immediately to take steps to secure the registration of their own names.

Neither Wars Nor Rumors of Wars Affect the Canadian National Exhibition.

It was thought at one time that war and its troubles might in some way affect the Canadian National Exhibition; but as time wore on, and the rush of entries became heavier than ever before and the demand for space nearly doubled the supply, while every other department showed a big increase, it became evident that the Big Fair at Toronto keeps right on going and growing no matter what happens.

In so far as the attractions are concerned, the splendid bill announced earlier still stands, the only change being that the Grenadier Guards Band will necessarily be absent. However, its dates have been filled by the engagement of a number of the best American bands, and there will still be a dozen band concerts daily with the famous Creatore featuring the bill. The international Peace Tattoo, featuring the "100 years of peace between Canada and the United States," is the big patriotic number of a year that promises to run high in patriotism while the spectacle "Babylon," with its 1,000 performers and wonderful fireworks effects, should prove a favorite. Another feature of the big bill is the Water Carnival, with everything from Indian canoe races to flying ships.

The subject matter will be found in the epistle to the Galatians. This is a vital subject just now, and all are invited. If the weather is unfavorable, the address will be given in Gospel Hall at the 7 o'clock meeting.

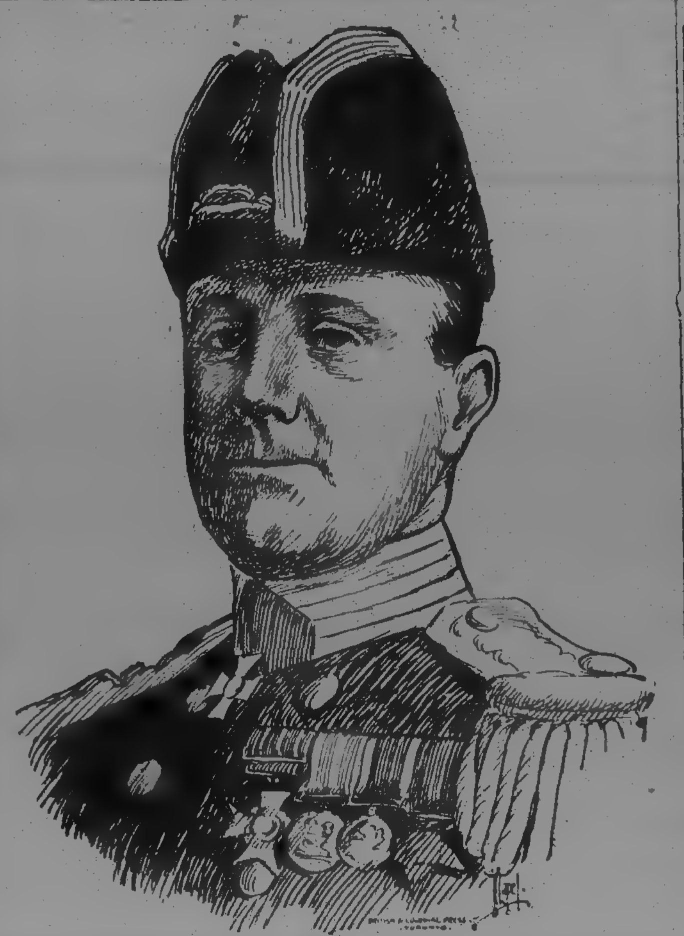
British Naval Might

From The Scotsman, Edinburgh.

Assembled in the narrow waters between the Isle of Wright and Portsmouth Harbour lay this week a mighty Armada, "seven miles in length by two miles in width," ready to pass in ordered procession under the eyes of the King, the Lord High Admiral of the Fleet. Never before in the annals of our country or of the world, has there been witnessed so powerful a concentration of naval strength, so impressive a manifestation of Britain's predominance in Sea Power. The purposes of the great mobilization are wholly pacific. The monster vessels—Dreadnoughts and Super-Dreadnoughts—that form the nucleus of the combined squadrons gathered together in Spithead are in weight and power the last word, for the time at least, in the engines of modern naval warfare. There are other ships, cruisers and scouts, that excel them in speed; while essential, although comparatively modest, constituents in the wonderful display are the swarms of destroyers, minelayers, and sub-marines, and the flights of seaplanes, which according to certain naval seers, are before long to chase the huge battleships from the face of the waters. That prophecy, after creating a slight sensation in naval and other circles, has passed into the limbo of forecasts that can neither be proved nor disproved. Sufficient for the itme are the heavy calls made upon us to keep pace with the progress of modern invention and the demands of national defence; and of the "fleet majestical" that assembled at Portsmouth it may be said, with pride and confidence, that there is not yet within view any rival force capable of challenging its supremacy.

Two hundred pennants were flying in the roadsted, and 90,000 officers and men were on board the warships which deployed in line before His Majesty. The effect of the spectacle in impressing the mind and imagination will not be limited by the wide bounds of the Empire. It should have a pacifying and steadying influence on the European situation, and on the business as well as on the political affairs of the whole world. The promenade of the combined Fleet of the realm, embracing 55 great battleships and close on five hundred ships of war of all classes is a spectacle which should spread a tranquillising influence over all the seas. It implied no threat; it had no sinster design. It was an operation directed to serve the ends of the service, and not dictated by any diplomatic or political object; and it was carried through in a business like manner, with the minimum of the pomp and ostentation of warlike display.



Rear Admiral Sir J. R. Jellicoe, in command of Britain's Home Fleets.

Admiral Sir John Jellicoe, who has just been appointed as commander-in-chief of the British navy, and on whom the whole British Empire is depending in this hour of trial, has been for the past year and a half second sea lord of the naval department at Whitehall. He is, barring midshipmates, the most diminutive officer of the senior service, differing in this respect from Admiral Prince Louis of Battenberg, whose place he is taking.

Yet, in spite of his brevity of stature, he won fame in his younger days as a football player, as an all-around athletes, and a boxer. He has seen plenty of fighting. As sub-lieutenant, he was present at the bombardment of Alexandria, and afterwards took part in the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, as a member of the naval brigade.

Jellicoe was ill, suffering from Malta fever, on board the Victoria, which was rammed by the Camperdown and sent to the bottom of the Mediterranean, carrying down with her Admiral Sir George Tyron, and more than 600 officers and men, but miraculously escaped.

Indeed, having entered the water when his temperature was 103, he was fished out at the normal, 98, cured of his illness, so that it was irreverently said that he was born to be hanged. He was badly wounded in the attempt to relieve the foreign legations at Pekin twelve years ago, while serving as chief of satff of admiral of the fleet, Sir Edward Seymour, receiving a Boxer bullet through his lungs, but managed to escape.

He is married to a very rich woman, namely, the daughter of Sir Charles Cayzer, head of the Clan line of steamers, and is regarded in the English and foreign navies as more responsible than any other officer for the marvellous progress in naval gunnery in the English fleet.

CANADIANS HAVE OFTEN FOUGHT IN EMPIRE WARS

Upper and Lower Canada Joined in Sending Soldiers to Aid the British and French Troops During the Crimea.

The presence of Canadians in the armies of the Empire did not begin with the South African War, says the Montreal Star. The people of Canada without distinction of race, have rallied to the support of the flag almost from the time of the establishment of British power in these territories.

Less than twenty years after the cession, Canada was saved to the Empire by the loyalty of the French Canadians; and in the war of 1812 Canadians, both in Lower and Upper Canada, as well as along the Maritime coast, did their full share in upholding the honour of British arms.

But these services to the Empire, though performed for the Empire as well as for Canada, were given on Canadian soil. The first Canadians who volunteered to fight for the Union Jack in foreign lands were those who offered themselves to go to the Crimea to join the allied armies of France and England.

It was in 1854 that these forerunners of a long line of Canadian volunteers offered their services to the British Government. This was thirteen years before Confederation and the two provinces of Lower and Upper Canada were at the time united under the Union Parliament.

The offer was not confined to individual Canadians, although that is as far as it went in the matter of sending troops. But although the Parliament did not send troops, it did vote money. An appropriation of 20,000 pounds sterling, nearly $100,000, was made by the Parliament "in favour of the widows and orphans of the allied armies of England and France."

Gift of French and English

It was the gift of the people of both French and English descent, and the Emperor of the French in acknowledging the gift, commented on the union of races it implied.

"In rememberance of their French descent," he said, speaking of the Lower Canadian element in Parliament, "the people of Canada were unwilling to separate in their congratulations and offerings those now so nobly connected by a community of dangers."

Since the time of that gift the international situation has enormously altered. England and France are again fighting side by side. But today they have as ally the country whose country they joined in 1854 to invade. For nearly a decade now Russia and France and Great Britain have been united in resisting the German designs in world politics.

The example of 1854 was soon again followed. The Indian Mutiny of 1857 again brought Canadian volunteers, and in the year following the "100th Prince of Wales Royal Canadian Regiment" was raised in Canada for service abroad. It did not go as far as India, but was on duty at Gibraltar and Malta.

In 1866, at the time of the Fenian Raids, it returned to Canada; but later went abroad again and became part of the regular forces under he name of the Leicester (Royal Canadian) Regiment, being recruited from the United Kingdom in the same way as the other imperial regiments.

By a curious coincidence it was located in garrison at Halifax when the South African War broke out, and it was the first "Royal Canadian Regiment" that was relieved for serdian troops who were raised to garrison Halifax.

The Balkans in 1877.

The first of the modern Balkan wars brought the next offer of Canadian troops. War threatened between England and Russia over the terms which the Czar had wrested from Turkey, the chief issue being whether what is now Bulgaria should be one or two states. Russia favored the creation of a single state, but England insisted, and eventually obtained, the division of the territory. While the negotiations which ended in the Treaty of Berlin were in progress there were grave fears of war, and Colonel Laurie in 1887 offered to raise a regt. for service in Turkey. The war cloud blew over and the British Government did not accept the offer. At this date it is curious to note that it was this Treaty of Berlin which Austria disregarded when she seized Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Colonel Laurie was not easily discouraged and when the British government sent an army to relieve Gordon at Kartoum, he again offered to raise a regiment of Canadians to go to the front. This was in 1884; and he renewed his offer a year later. At the same time Colonel Arthur Williams, M. P., placed himself at his regiment, the 46th East Durham Battalion, at the disposal of the British government. There were also a number of other individual offers. Canada had her own troubles on in the Northwest at the time and was struggling with the financial problem of completing the Canadian Pacific Railway; and although the government was willing to facilitate the departure of Canadian troops for Egypt, it did not feel free to pay the expenses. The upshot was that the only Canadians who went to the Soudan were a party of voyageurs, who did valiant service on the Nile. Other Colonies offered troops at the same time, but New South Wales alone was ready to pay the expenses of the contingent and this offer was the only one accepted by the British government.

The Khartoum campaign was the last occasion on which Canadian troops offered for service abroad until the South African war. From first to last in the offers there was the same spirit of loyalty to the British Crown.

Fit Restored Hearing.

A curious story of a deaf and dumb driver named Egan, who recovered his speech and hearing after ten years, comes from Ashford, Kent, England.

While performing conjuring feats in the Cattle Market, Egan had a fit, which is believed to have removed a clot of blood, and when he recovered he surprised his friends by speaking quite clearly. In an excited manner he returned to his lodgings at the New Inn, and asked for his dinner, amazing the landlord, who had hitherto received orders by gestures or writing on a slate.

Egan says that ten years ago, while diving near a wreck in American waters, he was attacked by a shark, which bit him on the leg. The shock caused him to become a deaf mute, and he had since eked out a living by traveling about, performing conjuring tricks.

ADVANCE OF FRENCH TROOPS CONTINUES

Press Bureau Says in Course of Rapid Advance, 1000 Prisoners Have Been Taken — Fleet Sweeps the Adriatic Sea and Sinks Austrian Cruiser — The Famous German Regiment Captured by Belgians

Canadian Press Despatch.

The censorship put into effect by British authorities over movements of the Empire's armed forces afloat and in Belgium is effective to a remarkable degree.

Not one word of news has come through for several days past concerning British military or naval activities. Censored despatches from Brussels and Paris have frequently referred to the presence of British troops arrayed against the forces of Germany but not one word has been allowed to come through from any source to indicate what the numerical strength of the British field army may be or where units may be located.

Equal secrecy shrouds the movements of the British warships believed to be holding the German fleet in check in the North Sea. Not one word has come through of the position of any British or German battleship cruiser or torpedo boat in these waters.

So far as the general public is concerned, naval activities in European waters are a sealed book. French official reports assert French armies continue their forward march in Alsace where many guns are said to have been captured from Germans as well as many prisoners and the standard of an Alsatian infantry regiment which is now on view at the French war office. St. Petersburg reports successes by Russian troops over Austrians on the frontier. A German dreadnought is reported by the Captain of a Dutch steamer as having been put out of action but no confirmation has been received in official quarters. The standard of the famous Deaths Head Hussars, the German Crown Prince's regiment is said to have been captured by Belgians. Despatches saying Greece had received information of the passag through Bulgarian territory of Turkish troops going toward Greece, are published in Copenhagen. It is said Greece has threatened to take similar measures. J. P. Morgan and Co. have abandoned the proposed loan to France owing to Washington's attitude on the subject. This is expected to affect other financial transactions which were under negotiations. The Pope is reported to have recovered somewhat from his indisposition said to have been induced by grief over the outbreak of war.

London, Aug. 17, 3.35 p.m.—The British official news bureau today says: "The French fleet in the Mediterranean has made a sweep up the Adriatic Sea as far as Cattaro. A small Austrian cruiser of the Aspern type of 2363 tons was fired on by the French and sunk.

London, Aug. 17.—The official press bureau of the war office statement saying French troops in the course of a rapid advance along the valley of Sciermock have taken one thousand prisoners.

The scene of fighting during the last few days, the official announcement continues, shows great destructive effect of the fire of the allied artillery.

Trenches abandoned by the enemy are filled with dead and wounded.

Paris, Aug. 17.—An official announcement today by the French war office says: "The advance of the French armies continues to develop. Our troops have taken the heights to the north of the Alsation frontier in German territory and a French line now passes through Abrechevillier, Lorquin, Azoudange and Marsal.

"In Dononor, Rougemont region we have occupied Sichiemeck, eight miles from Saales in Alsace and have captured twelve German field guns, three machine guns and twelve gun carriages with ammunition."

Our cavalry has penetrated as far as Lutzelhausen and Muhlbach or Rosheim. "Farther to the south we occupy Ville east of Durbeis on the road to Schlestadt and Saint Croix Aux Mines and some heavy field artillery has been captured by French troops. "In Alsace we have a strong supporting line from Thann through Cernay to Bannemarie."

Brussels, Aug. 17.—The famous German regiment the Deaths Hussars formerly commanded by Crown Prince Frederick William, was captured by Belgians at Haslem.

London, Aug. 17. — A despatch from Paris to the Havas Agency says, French troops have occupied the town of Schirmeck, twelve kilometers (seven and one half miles) beyond Saales in Alsace.

They took twelve field guns, twelve caissons and eight rapid fire guns. The French cavalry then pushed on to Mulbach and Lutzelhausen.

London, Aug. 17.—A despatch from Amsterdam to the Central News says the captain of the Dutch steamer Epsilon on his arrival at Ymuiden today reported seeing a German dreadnought in the harbor at Trondhjem which had been put out of action. Her funnels were smashed and on one side she was scarred with holes from shell fire. No confirmation of this has been received.

Paris, Aug. 17.—It is stated here that German cavalry after waiting two days for reinforcements renewed operations against the Belgian front, advancing in the direction of Wavre, fifteen miles south of Brussels. After a number of encounters with Belgium outposts, the German advance was checked.

Government Agent Alone Has Authority

J. H. Burnham, M. P., speaking of the purchase of horses gave out the following statement. "No one is in authority to purchase horses, for the Government, in Peterboro except the government agent who will arrive here from Ottawa on Tuesday.

"Any report circulated to the effect that horses will be cheaper is incorrect as the great slaughter will create a scarcity.

What the Other Cities Are Doing

The response throughout Ontario for funds for the maintenance of a hospital ship, for which the Peterboro ladies will campaign tomorrow, has been very gratifying. Some of the larger centres have not issued statements yet but the following contributing points have been heard from.

C.P.R.—A first-class ship.

Toronto	$30,000
Hamilton	11,200
Kingston	1,600
Port Hope	1,100
Amherstburg	600
Watford	100
Total	$44,600

The campaign of this week all over the province will easily swell the fund away above the amount asked, according to headquarters, Toronto.

Meeting Tonight

Citizens are again reminded of the meeting in the city council chamber tonight at 8 o'clock to consider what action will be taken to meet the situation, resulting from the war.

NISH REPORTS SEA BATTLE

French Squadron Attacked Austrian Warships

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 17.—6.40 a.m.—A despatch to Reuters Telegram Co., from Nish, Servia, under date of Sunday, says: "A naval battle between French and Austrian warships began off Budua, Austria, in the Adriatic, at nine o'clock this morning.

A French squadron coming from the southwest attacked Austrian warships. Two Austrian ironclads were sunk, one was set on fire and a fourth fled northwards towards Cattaro.

The fight lasted over an hour.

A SAD CHAPTER IN WORLD'S LIFE

Rev. R. G. Peever Speaks on the Sorrows of War

At George Street Methodist Church last evening the pastor, Rev. R. G. Peever, B.D., spoke on the sorrows of war referring to the great world situation of today as the crime and sorrow of the ages. Future history will mark off this age as a sad chapter in the world's life. Mr. Peever referred to the sorrow even in glory, the loss of manhood in the many thousand that shall be slain, the waste of millions that should go to the upbuilding of countries, the nations' future to be mortgaged, national friendship broken and apparently the Church of Christ falling.

This chapter ought not to have been written in the history because just as the Prodigal son had to return to repair the broken friendship neverthless he carried the deep wounds of a wasted inheritance and as it is with the individual character so it is with a nation in its life.

TRADE BETTER

Canadian Press Despatch.

Ottawa, Aug. 17. — The British Colonial Office informs the government that financial conditions have become much better. Credit has improved and trade shows prospects of returning to normal.

Ottawa, Aug. 17.—The Militia Department publishes a despatch from the British war office stating that King George graciously approves of pardons being granted soldiers who were in a state of desertion from forces on August 5th and who surrender themselves in the United Kingdom by September 4th, or at any station abroad where there are regular troops by October fourth.

CONFIRMATION OF NAVAL FIGHT

Rome, Aug. 17.—Confirmation of the naval fight in the Adriatic is given in a despatch from Cettinje to Corriered Italia today which says the Austrian battleship Zrinyi and three other ships whose names could not be ascertained were sunk by the French fleet.

A great number of French and English warships are said to be patrolling that coast.

Detachment of 24th Field Battery May Leave Tonight

Although the local military officials claim to have no official word as to the date of departure, there is a general feeling that Peterboro's contribution to the overseas contingent will entrain by Thursday at the latest. This afternoon all the infantry will be completely equipped for the trip to Val Cartier as they will have their kits inspected and any who are not fully equipped will be looked after. "We wwill be ready to leave at a moment's notice after 2 o'clock" was Lieut. Ackerman's only significant comment.

In all probability the detachment of the 24th Field Battery will be the first to leave this city and there is a chance the men will be ordered to Cobourg this evening. Twenty-five men without guns will form the local contingent. The original orders called for two guns but later orders from divisional headquarters calls for men only. The men were at the armouries this morning receiving equipment as per orders from Ottawa.

The other local unit likely to be called out the 3rd Dragoons which are ready to supply 25 men at short notice. Lieut. Johnston has charge of the recruiting for that corps.

Heaven's Artillery.

The 57th volunteers were put through a stiff drill on the lawn of Central Park and were in the middle of their manoeuvres when the cloudburst struck the city. They were marched into the armouries and to the clay of thunder and the vivid flashes of lightning they were drilled. The thunderous roars and the sharp electrical flashes gave the recruits an idea of what they might except in a small sized engagement so far as noise and flame are concerned.

Serum for Inoculating.

The 57th will leave 119 men strong and four officers, Col. Clegg, Majors Mills and Bennett and Lieut. Ackerman. The serum for inoculating the men against typhoid is expected to arrive this afternoon and Drs. Greer and Sutton will administer it.

Mayor Buller was on hand this morning to see the boys put through their drill and eager to hear of any news of departure.

First Pay Tuesday.

The volunteers will receive their pay to-morrow and the announcement caused a great deal of satisfaction. It will be the first pay issued from the department of militia during the present war.

When the local soldiers leave they will be equipped with the Olliver kit but on arriving at Val Cartier the Olliver equipment will be discarded for the Webb, which is more up to-date.

APPROACHING BATTLE WILL INVOLVE MILLIONS OF MEN

French War Office to Allay Popular Suspense Gives Official Statement of Conditions Under Which First Great Struggle of the War Will be Fought.

No Definite News For Eight Days or Longer.

PARIS, Aug. 17.—(C. A. P. Cable.) — The conditions under which the great battle between the Germans and the allied forces will probably be fought are made the subject of an official communication issued by the French Minister of War yesterday afternoon. By its development and the nature of the ground over which the battle will be waged, the communication says, this vast engagement will differ profoundly from the battles of other times.

"By reason of the abandonment of the attack which the Germans planned against Nancy," says the communication, "our concentration has been carried out with regularity and in its entirety, and thus the whole of the French army will battle with the whole of the German forces, with the exception of those German troops concentrated on the eastern frontier of the Empire.

"The violation of the neutrality of Belgium has extended the Belgian and French lines to the frontier of Holland. The next battle, therefore, will be from Basle to Maastricht, with several millions of men on each side.

"It is this enormous extension of effectives and of front, which will characterize the battle, and it will be profoundly different from all other battles.

"When the adversaries engage in battle along a front of from 20 to 30 kilometres (13 to 20 miles) the engagement is characterized by two features—it is rapid and immediately decisive. With a front extending over 400 kilometres (266 miles), it is not likely to be the same.

"It would appear impossible, from all the evidence, that one of the adversaries would be able to gain decisive advantage upon this front of 400 kilometres. The operations along so great a line would have varying fortunes. We will have an advantage at one or several points; the Germans will have an advantage at other points, and the line of battle will continue to be modified until one of the adversaries succeeds by co-ordination of movements and mass of effort to gain, at some point, the superiority which will dislodge the adverse front and mark the end of the first battle.

"These observations have for their object the preparation of the public for a battle in new form and without precedent in history."

The communication adds that news of definite results need not be expected for at least eight days, or longer.

Great Suspense In Belgium.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 17.—The great battle has not yet begun. An official announcement issued by the Belgian War Office says the general situation is unchanged. There are no large bodies of Germans on our front.. No part of our army is in direct contact with the enemy.

The impression produced by the reported cessation of hostilities is one of great suspense.

French aviators, it is reported here, flew over Metz, dropping bombs on the hangar sheltering Zeppelin airships. It is believed that several of the Zeppelins were destroyed.

Scene in Strassburg, a German stronghold in Alsace-Lorraine. Strassburg's famous Cathedral, 1,000 years old. In the war of 1870 Strassburg, with its garrison of 17,000 French soldiers surrendered to the Germans after a siege of seven weeks. It is now strongly garrisoned by Germany.

HOSPITAL SHIP AND WAR FUND

When interest in all that pertains to the war is at such fever heat it seems almost unnecessary to remind the citizens of Peterborough to the collection by means of an automobile parade and patrol tomorrow (Tuesday), of the smaller sums which people wish to contribute to the "Women's Hospital Ship and War Fund." Automobiles will be at the armouries at 9 o'clock sharp and be ready for the parade at 10.

A copper from a child will be as thankfully received as a larger sum from a parent on the subscription list at the banks. This is a much truer test of patriotism and a more efficacious means of inculcating the right sort than flag-waving and singing God Save the King, and The Maple Leaf Forever on Empire Day. The women of Peterboro expect a hearty response tomorrow and we are sure they will not be disappointed.

CO-OPERATE WITH GOVERNMENT TO KEEP PRICE DOWN

Bread and Cake Manufacturers Will See Finance Minister

Canadian Press Despatch.

Winnipeg, Aug. 17.—The annual convention of bread and cake manufacturers which recently met here, passed a resolution setting forth that the best means possible for them to show loyalty and devotion to their country during this deplorable but unavoidable war was by trying by co-operation with the government to keep the price of bread from advancing through an unjustifiable increase in the price of wheat.

An influential committee of bakers will interview the Minister of Finance.

GERMANY ADVISED TO GET OUT OF CHINA IN WEEK

Unless Kaiser Withdraws Warships From Kinochau by Aug. 23rd, Japan Will Take Action—Fort Must Also be Dismantled—United States Decides Not to Interfere in the Situation.

TOKIO, Aug. 17.—Japan has sent an ultimatum to Germany, demanding that she withdraw her warships and evacuate Kiaochau. Unless Germany unconditionally accept by Aug. 23, Japan will take action.

The news that Japan has sent an ultimatum to Germany is officially confirmed.

The newspaper Jiji Shimpo, which is usually well informed, in an extra, gives some additional details of the Japanese ultimatum to Germany. It was forwarded on Saturday night, according to The Jiji, and besides demanding the turning over of Kiaochau to Japan pending its return to China, asked that the German warships in far eastern waters be disarmed, and the forts in Kiaochau dismantled. Germany is also requested to withdraw all her warships from the China Sea.

In reply to a question propounded by a merchant, the Foreign Minister denied the reports that the United States had interfered in any way in the situation, and, he added, the United States was not likely to. Later, he said, the American Government would be fully informed as to the Japanese position.

China Notified.

PEKIN, Aug. 17.—Copies of the Japanese ultimatum to Germany were handed to the Chinese Government and the foreign legations yesterday.

As it is not considered likely that Germany will comply with the Japanese demands, preparations are proceeding for a campaign by force of arms. Three British regiments in China have received instructions to hold themselves in readiness for transportation.

United States Will Not Interfere.

WASHINGTON, D.C., Aug. 17.—Japan communicated to Secretary of State Bryan last night in writing the terms of her ultimatum to Germany, and, as cable communication with Berlin is interrupted, the United States undertook to send the ultimatum on to Berlin. It became known that the United States does not intend to be drawn into this controversy, regarding it as a matter purely between Germany and Japan. Japan agrees to respect the integrity of China. The United States will remain a passive observer.

PETERBOROUGH, MONDAY, AUGUST 17 1914

GERMANY IS A FEDERATION.

THE GERMAN EMPIRE is not in itself a unity, says Dr. Swanson, in the Montreal Journal of Commerce. It is a federation, a close political coalition for certain purposes, chief of which is that of defence. Bavaria, Saxony, Wuerttemberg, are independent kingdoms. Baden, Saxe-Coburg, Saxe-Weimar, Saxe-Altenburg, the Mecklenburgs are independent Grand-Duchies; the two Reusses are independent Principalities — with their own legislatures, their own constitutions, and in the case of Bavaria and Saxony, their own State railways; in the case of Bavaria alone her own coinage and postage stamps. They levy taxes independently of Prussia and the Emperor; they maintain diplomatic representatives at each other's Courts, and expect foreign countries to be represented at their Courts. But all these political units combine for purposes of national defence, and possess an army in common. They all submit to one imperial tariff-union, they contribute through their individual exchequers to an Imperial Treasury, and they recognize as head of the federation the German Kaiser, who is also King of Prussia.

The formation of the customs union was facilitated by the diversity of climate and by natural resources of the several states which now comprise the empire. The mineralized East needed the agricultural West; the little Duchies and States by the head-waters of the rivers needed unrestricted access to the sea along the rivers, and the developing industries of the West needed a protected market. But there was another reason why these small nations should have combined at that time. They had been for centuries the cock-pit of Europe, the victims of one conquering army after another, the prize of victories in which they had no share, and the goal of ambitions in which they had no interest. Pressure from within, in a word, compelled unity from within. The castles of Western Germany have for the most part been blown up or burned, not by the troops of opposing political factions, Roundhead or Cavilier, White Rose or Red, but by foreign aggressors, who ravaged Germany from the Rhine to the Vistula, from the Baltic to the Giant Mountains. That they might live in peace, might be free to develop their own resources, the States of modern Germany, led by iron-handed Prussia, founded in 1871 the modern empire.

To achieve this final result war was waged in 1867 between the States north of the Main and Austria, which had long dominated the South. The North German Confederation was established by a majority vote of the delegates of the northern States in 1867. The story of what had happened is best expressed in the words of the Treaty of Prague between Prussia and Austria: "His Majesty the Austrian Emperor, hereby recognizes the dissolution of the existing confederacy of German States, and will not oppose a new formation in which Austria shall have no part. Furthermore, the Emperor will recognize the closer federation which the King of Prussia shall establish north of the Main, and will permit the formation of a federation of the States south of the Main; the relations of the southern federation to the northern bund to be regulated later by mutual agreements between them."

There were three treaties made: first, an agreement between the northern federation and Baden and Hesse whereby a German confederation was formed and its constitution adopted. In the second treaty a similar agreement was made with Wuerttemberg; and in the third an agreement with Bavaria. Bavaria retained for herself a membership of special privilege. The treaties were in form entries of the various States into the northern federation on condition of certain alterations in the federal constitution. The new union, which was only an extension of the old northern confederation, was given a new title—the German Empire; and the president, who continued to be the King of Prussia, was also given a new title, namely German Emperor.

The Empire remains what it was, a federation of States, which guard, some of them with very great jealousy, the smallest remaining item of their independence. Besides the German parts of the Empire there are certain non-German elements—Prussian Poland, Schleswig-Holstein taken by force of arms from Denmark, and Alsace-Lorraine seized from France in 1870.

It is doubtful whether it has paid Germany to incorporate Alsace-Lorraine in the Empire. Granting that these were formerly German States, taken by force of arms by France, it yet remains true that they had been almost, if not quite, assimilated to France, and had absorbed French ideas and ideals. Their possession has made for standing armies and crushing military burdens; and finally has caused the breaking out of a war which will prove the most ruinous in the history of the world.

OUR EVENING CONTEMPORARY has evolved a pro-German already who kicks at the City of Peterborough making any provision for families of those going to the war. Imagine how convenient it would be for the Federal Government to look after families all over Canada! This fellow apparently has a thin-skin of loyalty, and if he does not want to help Britain he might fight for the Germans.

WEALTH OF THE UNITED STATES.

In the early part of the last century the United States depended on Europe, and especially on Great Britain, for most of the new capital needed for its development. Today the accumulations of the American people are greater than those of any other nation. It is true that additional amounts of foreign capital are invested in the United States, but the amount is insignificant in comparison with the country's own savings.

The wealth of the United States is growing at the rate of about $7,000,000,000 per annum, whereas the investments of Europe in the country rarely exceed $300,000,000 in a single year, and in some years are nothing at all on balance. The annual growth of banking deposits in the United States in normal years is about $1,000,000,000; the issues of new capital by subscription, so far as the amounts are ascertainable, about $3,000,000,000; and the sums spent on buildings in the leading cities of the country alone reach $1,000,000,000.

Allowing for a certain amount of duplication in these totals on the one hand, and on the other for the large sums spent in buildings in all the small cities and villages, upon farm improvements, new factories, mines, lumber propositions, additional stock and machinery, etc., the rapidity with which the wealth of the United States is growing will be evident.—San Francisco Journal of Commerce.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE EXAMINER parrots the Globe. It thinks the tin-pot navy could have sunk the German fleet, and weeps that the Niobe can't carry a million bags of flour to England. But the main point is this, that the British Dreadnought squadron restored the safety to shipping. To assist this effective weapon was Sir Robert Borden's policy.

INDIA now has a population of 315,156,396 (as against 294,361,056 ten years previously), of whom 217,586,892 were Hindus, 66,647,299 were Moslems, 10,721,453 were Buddhists, and 3,873,203 were Christians. The literates numbered only 18,529,578 persons and agriculture claimed the labor of 224,695,909 persons, as against 35,523,041 engaged in industry.

WE OBSERVE that our evening contemporary published on Friday a most illuminating map of the war zone. It shows portions of Alsace, Lorraine, and France, and is explained as showing how the Russians are invading Austria. Just the usual case of misrepresentation.

WE THOUGHT the Toronto Globe was the leader in expounding Liberalism in Ontario. In face of the emergency materializing which Mr. Borden pointed out, it has disgraced its party and principles by a low truckling to sordid party aims.

THE PROVINCE OF ALBERTA has offered half a million bags of oats to the British Government. That is a very sensible gift and shows that the new western province is hands and feet with the Empire.

LET US give three cheers for Lady Borden, wife of Canada's Premier. Presiding over a meeting in Ottawa, a proposal to hold a tag-day to raise Red Cross funds was turned down. This wholesale button-holing process has been bled white.

SIR WILLIAM VAN HORNE says the prices Canada will receive for coarse grains will more than recoup her for any outlay that may be made on behalf of the Empire

Thin Citizenship.

Boston Transcript.

It is estimated that in the event of a general European war, 1,000,000 men would leave the United States, indicating that the American citizenship of a considerable part of our population is a good deal less than skin deep.

An Explanation.

Montreal Journal of Commerce.

Considerable confusion exists in the minds of the people as to who and what the Uhlans are. The word is of Polish origin and means a Lancer. It has been adopted by the Germans as the name of their cavalry regiments. The Uhlan is a Lancer, armed with lance, saber, carbine and pistol, and in the Franco-Prussian War were used for raiding and scouting purposes. At the present time there are 26 regiments of Uhlans in the German Army amounting to a total of about 25,000 men.

What Did He Mean?

Harper's Magazine.

A gentleman, while at a club in Washington a short while ago, became engaged in a desultory conversation with a prominent financier and Representative from the South. The great man is of a most economical habit and it is difficult for him to talk for any great length of time without touching upon the subject of economy. Sure enough, he suddenly invited attention to the suit of clothes he was wearing.

"I have never believed," said he, opening his coat, the better to display the details of the suit, "in paying fancy prices for cut-to-measure garments. Now, here is a suit for which I paid eight dollars and ninety-eight cents. Appearances are very deceptive. If I told you I purchased it for thirty-five dollars, you'd undoubtedly believe that to be the truth."

His friend viewed the suit critically for a moment as he replied: "I would if you told me over the telephone."

Great Britain Kept Her Word.

Detroit News.

A little while ago a large number of Americans were sneering at our government because they thought it ought to keep faith with Great Britain in a little business matter concerning the Panama Canal. This was called truckling to England, bowing down to crowns and baubles. It was said that Great Britain would pretty soon throw the hooks into us if she got the chance, and that all this talk about "national honour" was bosh, anyway. Honour between nations? Pooh!

Well, just the other day a question of national honour was put up to Great Britain. It didn't concern a cent or two one way or the other on a ton of freight. It concerned the lives of men, the expenditure of fabulous sums of money — it meant the casting of the Empire into the seething pot of war as a precious stake. Great Britain had given her word — her promise — no more binding whatever than was our canal promise to her — that in the event of trouble she would stand by one of her neighbors. For a moment, cautious statesmen considered how to back out of that promise. But other statesmen cried: "Great Britain go back on her word! Every nation on the earth would forever distrust us if we did that." Then the people took up the cry: "England keeps her promises." And one night, under the waters of the Channel flashed the message to a distraught people: "England will keep her promise."

There is such a thing as national honour—and it is a good thing to keep bright and untarnished.

NO PROGRESS

By Walt Mason

I have a sort of notion that David Daniel Duke will never get promotion unless it's by a fluke. He's selling traps and cages at Jimpson's jimcrack store, and draws the same old wages he drew five years before. He's never known to study or read a helpful book, his mind is like a muddy and dark and turgid brook. The fellow who advances, who rises from the groove, will never sidestep chances his knowledge to improve; he'll burn the midnight candle, and to himself he'll say, "'Twould be a burning scandal to fool my time away." But David never ponders o'er books that brace the mind, but through the streets he wanders when's done the daily grind. A quiet game of poker now holds young David down; again, with crimson ochre he paints the sleeping town. An evening at the movies to David seems sublime; while other lads improve he's just blowing in his time. And often in the morning when he shows up for work, his head's a horrid warning, and in his mouth there lurk those tastes of pink and yellow, the consequences of cups, which tastes inform a fellow he's going to the pups. The waste of time is fateful, bad habits are a snare; the dump is dark and hateful, and David's headed there.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

The girl who doesn't know she is pretty isn't, and the man who doesn't know he is a fool is.

There are persons so thick skinned that no arrow aimed at their self conceit ever pierces their armor.

The individual who poses as the head of the family isn't always the one who keeps the works from going to smash.

The burden bearer of the family isn't always the profit sharer either.

There are people who would be more useful to the world if they were not in it.

Why is it that an ordinary level headed man can't resist making silly speeches when a girl in the legitimate discharge of her duties comes in his way?

The things that we are not doing are sometimes the things that give us the most annoyance.

Sometimes we realize that we are great, but what's the use when nobody else ever finds it out?

Two women can't be happy if neither is a good listener.

There is always the wise man about who improves the opportunity to explain the inexplicable.

The Helping Hand.

Scatter seeds of kindness.
You can never say
Where the man will be next week
Who is down today.
Though his coat is ragged
And his hair awry,
He may have a wealthy aunt
Just about to die.

Cannot judge a fellow
By his style of dress
Or on his appearance
Base a certain guess.
If when he is pleasant
You are rude and cross
Maybe he can later
Queer you with the boss.

Doesn't cost you money,
Effort isn't great,
And a little kindness
Scattered while you wait
May affect your prospects
And your fortunes boost
When the little chickens
Hurry home to roost.

And suppose it didn't
Pay in cents and dimes
And your fortunes double
Many, many times,
For the small investment
Of a pleasant smile
It will bring your friendships
Clearly worth the while.

Could Do Better.

Harold had received his first five dollar bill. He was told that it was to be deposited in the bank, and the details were explained to him. Harold accompanied his mother to the bank, and, when ready, the book was handed to him. He looked at it a moment and then, throwing the book across the room, exclaimed:

"Such a small book for $5! Why, I can get a bigger one than that for 5 cents!"

Stubborn.

A little girl was heard talking to her rabbit.

"Five times five," she said, "six times six, seven times seven." Between times she shook the rabbit violently.

"Dorothy," said her mother, "what are you doing to your rabbit?"

"Well, papa says," replied the child, "that rabbits multiply rapidly, and Bunny won't do it."

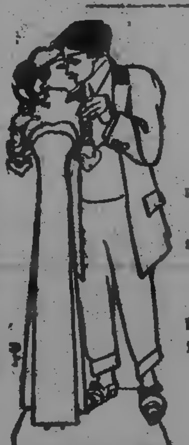
Mistaken For Lion.

There was somewhat of a panic in Dundurn Park, Hamilton, recently when a large St. Bernard dog, which had been clipped so as to resemble a lion, walked through the park in a rather peculiar manner. Many women and children noticed him coming and they naturally thought that Leo had escaped, but after several screams and screeches the big dog became more scared than the people and turned and ran home.

Did Lightning Kill Flies?

Stories come from the Muskoka district that the weather has joined in the swat-the-fly contest. The story goes that a vivid flash of lightning of a peculiar red tint was seen during the course of a couple weeks ago, and immediately afterwards there was not a fly in existence. This colored lightning is a phenomenon by no means unprecedented, although decidedly rare.

Mr. King, of King's Park, Muskoka, says that previous to the storm the flies and mosquitoes were thick, worse even than is usual in the month of June. Immediately after the lightning, not a fly or mosquito was to be found, and he attributes their disappearance to the lightning. This was entirely scouted by R. F. Stupart, director of Ontario's Meteorological Bureau, beyond the possibility that it was merely one of those strange coincidences that some times happen.



Not For the Serious.

"It is foolish not to be happy."

"I don't find it so."

"Why not?"

"I am not happy when I'm foolish."

No Doubt of It.

"He is certainly a good fellow who spends all he has."

"Yes, and another thing."

"What?"

"He is a wise follow who has all he spends."

Dislikes Solitude.

"There is always room at the top."

"There is just one thing against that."

"What is it?"

"The company is all at the bottom."

PLACID CHINESE WOMEN.

An Illustration of How Well Their Emotions Are Hidden.

"Chinese women are trained to show no emotion, to appear absolutely placid under all circumstances," says Elizabeth Cooper, author of "My Lady of the Chinese Courtyard." "I saw it illustrated at a reception given to the wife of one of the high Chinese officials. All the women of the foreign official colony were at my home, about forty in number, and the great lady was announced. Every one rose. The room was a very long one, about seventy-five feet, and had a very highly polished floor covered with Persian rugs.

"The Chinese lady came to the doorway, with a servant on each side of her to help her walk upon her tiny bound feet. At the entrance they left her, and she started to come to me; but, being almost helpless upon her 'golden lilies,' she stepped upon a rug, which slid upon the polished floor, and instead of swaying 'like the bamboo in the breeze' as she came to me she sat down suddenly and slid to my feet to the consternation and horror of the assembled guests.

"She was raised to her feet, and, although she must have been covered with confusion and embarrassment time to make her first entrance into a foreign home, she gave her hand to me without a trace of emotion visible in her face or manner, nor did she apologize. One would think by her appearance that it was the usual mode of entrance into a room."

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Lip Sores.

Lip sores are due to slight colds oftentimes, and they may be due to stomach trouble. The "festering" is due to the presence of pus germs in the skin. At the first appearance of the swelling if ice or very hot compresses are applied the sore may be absorbed. Also the application of camphor or pure menthol may check the process. After the sore has disappeared apply hot towels to the face for a few minutes to steam it, and then shampoo it thoroughly to remove all germs from the skin. If this is done once or twice a week for a time these sores may entirely cease to appear.

RULE OF THE GLOVE.

Queer Custom of Suspending the Law in an English Town.

By reason of a curious custom the people of the old town of Honiton, in Devonshire, England, are exempt from arrest from dawn to sunset of a certain day of the year. It is while the horse fair there is in progress that the law is thus suspended for awhile. The custom is a survival of a quaint and picturesque ceremonial dating from the days of King Henry III.

At the beginning of the fair the town crier, in the gorgeous dress of a beadle of the old days, appears upon the scene with a pole to the end of which is attached a large gilt glove decked with flowers. Having rung his handbell three times, the crier announces:

"Oyez, oyez, oyez! The fair is begun. The glove is up; no man may be arrested until the glove is down. God save the king!"

Each sentence is chorused by the children standing round, and at the conclusion they scramble for nuts. The glove is taken down at sunset.—St. Louis Republic.

Mme. Adam and the Crinoline.

Mme. Adam has been confiding to an interviewer that she owed her introduction to journalism to the fact that she did not wear a crinoline at the time when fashion decreed the garment. Alphonse Karr, who objected to the crinolines, had been denouncing them in his journal, but had concluded his denunciation with the sentence, "Still, there is not a pretty woman in France who does not wear one." Whereupon Mme. Adam, who was then Mlle Lambert, took up her pen and wrote: "Mr. Editor—One may be pretty—some people even say that I am beautiful—and yet one may abstain from crinolines." And she went on to develop the thesis. She developed it so wittily that Alphonse Karr printed it in Le Siecle and that was her first contribution to the periodical press of which she has since been one of the pillars.—Westminster Gazette.

Women and Tipping.

That women are close fisted when it comes to tipping is the consensus of opinion of all waiters. "I was on duty in the pen—the upstairs room where women are served—all last week," said a waitress in one of the popular priced restaurants, "and I hardly saw a nickel from one week's end to the other. They never give you anything, but I thought the limit was reached when I saw a well dressed woman deliberately pick up a dime which a young man, inveigled up there by his feminine companion, had left on the table for me. I wasn't bashful about telling her that it was mine, and she handed it over without a word—but it just shows you one of their lovely little ways."—New York Tribune.

A man never realizes that time is money more thoroughly than when he settles with a taxi chauffeur.

Points for Mothers

Removing Whiteheads.

There is only one way to remove milia, or whiteheads, as they are commonly called, and that is to open each little lump with a sterilized needle and press out the substance from which they are formed. The immediate application of peroxide of hydrogen is helpful, and remedies which will make the skin active will prove an aid in preventing the formation of the little lumps, but when they are once in evidence there is only the one way to get rid of them.

A Powder Sachet.

A satisfactory sachet for scenting powder or putting into little bags among your clothes or household linen is made for the most part of ordinary spices from the pantry shelf. It calls for equal quantities of ground mace, nutmeg, cloves, cinnamon and caraway seeds. All these spices should be freshly ground so that they will be full of spicy odor. Weigh the combined ingredients and add the same amount of orris root, ground.

For Thin People.

If you are too thin raw eggs and milk, if they agree with you, will probably prove good flesh making foods. If they do not agree with you they will quite likely prove unsatisfactory. It is not what you eat, but what your system digests and assimilates, that builds up the body. Try the diet. Judge whether or not it will be of benefit.

For Tender Feet.

A recipe for tender feet is to rub them well with methylated spirit and then dust with boracic powder before going to bed.

Then sleep with the foot of the bed raised by a bolster under the mattress.

Hangnails.

To prevent hangnails rub a little cold cream round the base of each nail before going to bed. This will soften the skin so that it can easily be pushed down.

WASHING BLANKETS.

Once a Year Is Often Enough if These Directions Are Followed.

Before putting them away for the summer blankets should be carefully washed.

The most abused articles in very many houses are the blankets. Some housewives do not know how to protect these, and, as washing too often ruins them, blankets which become soiled remain so much too long in consequence.

The all wool blanket gives the most comfort; but, as it shrinks so much and requires more careful washing than most laundresses are willing to give it, many housekeepers content themselves with the mixed cotton and wool kinds.

If precautions are taken these blankets need be washed but once a year. To prevent them from getting soiled simple covers of cheesecloth could be made to fold over the top of the blanket edge. Take a piece as long as the blanket and about a foot wide. Sew both ends and one side. Slip over the edge of the blanket and baste on. These protectors can be daintily made if there are colors in the blanket. The cover could be featherstitched in corresponding shades. Very fine linen protectors, with a large monogram, are very artistic if used in the guest room. They can be changed weekly or every other week.

SOLAR ENERGY.

Its Constant Radiation Is Lessening the Mass of Our Sun.

The work of Einstein on the principle of relativity shows that a body which radiates energy loses a portion of its mass depending on the energy radiated. It follows that the sun, which continually radiates energy, is constantly losing mass. M. J. Bosler has calculated that the sun loses a mass equal to that of our earth in 30,000,000 years.

If it be assumed that the mass thus lost is gravitational mass it follows that the length of the year increases by six seconds in 1,000,000 years and that in the same time the mean longitude of the earth is affected in such a way as to produce a variation of one-tenth of a year—that is, a retardation of thirty-six days in the seasons.

Such variations are too minute to be observable. In stellar systems possessing a higher temperature the effect would be much more marked, for the energy radiated by a body varies as the fourth power of its absolute temperature.

If, as M. Nordmann believes, there exist stars having a temperature six or seven times that of our sun their radiation is one or two thousand times as intense. Thus, if the temperature of Algol is 13,800 degrees, it is calculated that at the end of 2,000 years the eclipses of Algol suffer a retardation of about twelve minutes.—Boston Herald.

The National Association For the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis was assured by eminent authorities that the Friedmann vaccine had "neither curative nor preventive powers." Then there is not enough of it left to talk about.

MOISTURE AND HEAT.

Why a Person May Feel Cold In a Room That Is Well Heated.

It often happens in winter that a person living in a steam heated apartment feels cold even when the thermometer shows the necessary degree of warmth in the room. Of course there is a reason for this and also a very simple remedy. The reason is that the air in the room is too dry—it does not contain enough moisture—and the remedy is, of course, to keep some water in the room all the time, so that it can evaporate into the air.

Our bodies, you see, are at all times exuding moisture in the form of perspiration. Now, this perspiration, even in winter, amounts to a great deal more than one would think, being measured in the pints. To evaporate water heat has to be used up, and, as the body is warmer than the air, the heat to evaporate this perspiration is taken from the body. Of course then the body feels cold.

Here is still another illustration of this fact: It has been shown by actual experiment that a man can stay in an oven heated to the boiling temperature of water and not get uncomfortably hot—that is, painfully hot. The heat makes him perspire, and the heat taken up by evaporation from the body keeps the body from getting hot. But suppose that the oven already contained in its atmosphere all the water vapor that it could hold. Then, as none could evaporate from the body, the drops on the body would soon get near the boiling point. So in the room referred to above, if it contains a good bit of moisture the evaporation from the body will not be so fast, and consequently the body will not feel cold.—New York American.

TURKEY IN FOR WAR

Russia Demands Passage Through Dardanelles

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 17.—Russia has demanded that the Turkish Government shall grant free passage to the Russian fleet through the Dardanelles.

And Greece, Too.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—A Reuter despatch from Rome says that the Paris correspondent of The Tribuna hears that Greece has decided to demand explanations from Constantinople regarding the concentration of Turkish troops on the frontier. Unless the reply is satisfactory, Greece will mobilise forthwith.

Outrage Says Turkish Envoy.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17. — The Ambassador to the United States from Turkey yesterday intimated that his Government yet may become involved in the struggle in Europe between the entente and alliance. The intimation was made when the Turkish Ambassador said that if Great Britain insists on Turkey yielding the two German cruisers, Goeben and Breslau, which have taken refuge in the Dardanelles, Turkey might forcibly resist.

The Ambassador said Great Britain "has outraged, not only Turkish sentiment, but that of the whole Islamic world," by her seizure of two Turkish dreadnoughts in English shipyards, and thereby has forfeited any appeal to international law in the matter of the German warships.

"There is every reason to believe that Turkish dreadnoughts, the Sultan Osman and the Rechaide, in construction for Turkey in British shipyards, have been seized," said the Ambassador. "If this is true, then Great Britain and her allies will have lost the right to make representations to Turkey."

SENTRY IS MISSING

ST. CATHARINES, Aug. 17.—When the corporal of the guard went to relieve Private Keis, B. Company, 19th Regiment, the sentry on duty at lock 8 of the Welland Canal, at two o'clock yesterday morning, he could not be found. Later his cap was found floating in the water, but although the level and waste basin was dragged all day his body could not be found. Keis, whose home is in Niagara Falls, Ont., was to have been married soon. His relatives have no knowledge of the man's whereabouts.

Villa's Revolution Begins.

NOGALES, Ariz., Aug. 17.—In a battle which took place Saturday night at Llano, State of Sonora, Mexico, between factions of Gen. Villa and Gen. Carranza, "first chief" of the Constitutionalist party, Villa's troops were victorious. They are now rapidly approaching the United States border.

On this side of the line Saturday night's fight is regarded as the commencement of the long-talked-of revolution which Villa has intended starting against Carranza.

U. S. Gunboat Saluted.

ST. CATHARINES, Aug. 17. — A striking incident occurred on Saturday afternoon, when the U. S. gunboat Dubuque was passing the headquarters of the 19th Regiment, doing guard duty on the Welland Canal. The guard of that division was drawn up facing the American craft and saluted it by presenting arms, while the marines aboard the gunboat stood at attention on the forward deck.

German Wounded Reach Moscow.

LONDON, Aug. 17. — German wounded are beginning to arrive at Moscow, says a Reuter despatch from St. Petersburg, and they are being well cared for.

Several members of the Tolstoi family, including Tolstoi's widow, have offered their services to the Government for Red Cross or other work.

A CRIPPLED CABINET.

John Sandfield Macdonald Joked About Colleagues' Disabilities.

Within recent years it has become the practice in politics for papers of leanings to either one of the parties to deny vigorously any rumor that one of its leaders is ill, while it will allege the most trifling illness of a prominent politician on the other side to be so grave that the patient's friends fear for his life.

Time was when party adherents were less sensitive regarding the health of their chiefs.

John Sandfield Macdonald, once Premier of Ontario, as all know, was tall, spare of frame, but alert. His favorite attire included tweed trousers, colored vest, and frilled shirt front. He had the misfortune to have weak lungs, but with care he reached a good span of life and sat in Parliament more than thirty years. In the raw-meat, red blood fashion of his time he enjoyed a witticism though it might sometimes savor of broad humor. He was fond of joking at the peculiarities of himself and his colleagues, among these being Edmund Burke Wood and Matthew Crooks Cameron. The former had only one arm, and hailed from Brantford near which, of course, lies the Indian Reserve, and his big voice gained for him from his aboriginal neighbors the famous soubriquet of "Big Thunder." "Little Thunder," by the way, was the late Hon. A. S. Hardy, who betimes emerged from the same district to a distinguished public life. E. B. Wood afterwards went west as the Second Chief Justice of Manitoba. That Matthew Crooks Cameron lost his leg in a shooting accident will readily occur to the minds of old-timers, he became Chief of the Ontario Common Pleas Division, and was subsequently knighted.

It was at a period when Sandfield Macdonald found himself an object of more than ordinary solicitude amongst his Cabinet that he administered his famous witty rejoinder to his colleagues: "What a curious lot we are, a sort of one-horse concern," he burst forth, "here is Wood with but one arm, Cameron with one foot, and I with one lung!"

On another occasion, Col. John Prince—an ultra-loyal, English-born member of the Legislature — took umbrage at the entrance to the Parliamentary library of Wm. Lyon Mackenzie, who had been for some years in exile after the unpleasantness of the Rebellion, but had now returned to Canada. Col. Prince demanded to see the ticket of the member by whom he had been admitted, and threatened to put the celebrated reformer out. John Sandfield Macdonald, however, hearing of this, called on Mackenzie and formally introduced the latter to the sacred precincts. The fire-eating Col. Prince afterwards explained his rudeness, saying he "had acted on the impulse of the moment." The peace-maker had forgotten to reckon with the hosts of his Highlanders of Glengarry, of whom he was a born leader. At his next visit to his constituents they complained of his civilities to a late rebel. "Do you think," interjected John Sandfield, "I would see an Englishman kick a Scotchman and not interfere?" Capt. Wm. Prince—son of this Col. Prince—was for several years Chief Constable of Toronto, and later Warden of the Central Prison.

A Lake of Life.

Mr. P. A. Talbot and his party were the first white men who ever visited the shrine of Ita Brinyan, in Nigeria, where innumerable skulls of victims sacrificed are piled up. In the midst of this region there is the so-called "Lake of Life," discovered by Mr. Eakin and Mr. Talbot's party. In the deep water of this strange pool live sacred fish wherein dwell the souls of the ancestors of the race.

Until a short time ago the birth of twins amongst this tribe was followed by the death not only of the children, but also of the mother. Now the practice of putting them to death has almost ceased. In fact, many hideous customs are disappearing.

CANADA MAY HAVE AN ACT TO POSTPONE CERTAIN PAYMENTS

Hon. W. T. White Announces the Receipt of Half a Million Dollars From J. K. L. Ross, of Montreal, For General Military and Naval Purposes Including Pensions.

OTTAWA, Aug. 17.—It is regarded as probable that legislation will be enacted at the approaching session of Parliament authorizing the Government to declare a moratorium at this time while a state of war prevails.

The effect of a moratorium proclamation is to postpone the payment of indebtedness. It may be general, or limited, and for such time and subject to such terms and conditions as the Government may determine. So far there has been no necessity whatever for issuing such a proclamation in Canada, nor is it expected that such necessity is at all likely to arise in the future. It may, however, be considered advisable to enact a general moratorium act to be brought into effect in whole or in part by proclamation should emergency arise. Both Great Britain and France have recently declared moratoriums for limited periods.

Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, announces that he has received from J. K. L. Ross, of Montreal, a contribution of five hundred thousand dollars to be used for the general military and naval purposes of the Government including provision for pensions to invalided soldiers, their widows and children.

The Minister, in accepting the contribution, has expressed to Mr. Ross the thanks of the Government for the splendid gift, and congratulating the donor upon his patriotic loyalty to Canada and the Empire.

It is reported that the Government has under consideration the levying of a federal income tax. While direct official confirmation is lacking, it seems to be generally understood that the tax will be applied to all incomes in excess of $2,500 a year.

Col. Sam Hughes, who arrived from Valcartier last night, stated that the water supply would not be ready before to-morrow or Wednesday, and the troops would not begin to go down until Wednesday. The Duke of Connaught also went down to the scene of the mobilization camp Saturday night to inspect the preparations and returned here last night. When the troops are all there he will go down and remain there until the contingent sails.

The Minister states that there will be a weeding-out process when the troops go down to mobilization camp that will cause keenest competition among the men, and officers who want to go with the contingent. No permanent appointments will be made till the troops get to camp.

Col. Hughes said that there would be no politics in selection of officers, but they would all be severely tested and have to secure appointment on their merits. They would have men march, shoot and show they knew how to handle their men. The names of 29,000 volunteers have come in, but only 25,000 will go to camp and, the 20,000 will be taken from them. The question of the formation of a foreign legion will be taken up in a few days, said the Minister.

A royal proclamation, published in The Canada Gazette, declares that it will be an act of treason, punishable with the utmost rigor of the law, for any British subject to contribute to a loan raised for the German Emperor, or to enter into any contract with the German Government.

GERMANS ARE DRIVEN OFF

Attack on Dinant Repulsed With Heavy Loss

PARIS, Aug. 17.—The following official statement was issued last night:

"A forward movement developed to-day all along the front from Rechicort (Rixingen), in Lorraine, eleven miles southwest of Saarsbourg to Sainte Marie Aux Mines. We carried the latter and advanced into the region of Saint Blaise.

"The French troops, who accepted Donan Saturday, continued to advance, their progress being especially rapid in the Schirmeck Valley. We have taken 1,000 prisoners in addition to the 500 on Friday. Large quantities of equipment were abandoned by the Germans; we have also captured this. We pushed as far as Lorquinheight, capturing a convoy belonging to a cavalry division consisting of 19 automobiles and lorries.

"The Germans attacked Dinant, Their forces consisted of a guard division and the first cavalry division, supported by several battalions of infantry and machine gun companies. When these forces appeared on the left bank, the French attacked with great vigor and dash. The Germans soon gave way and re-crossed the Meuse in great disorder. Many who failed to reach the bridge slipped down the steep bank and fell into the swiftly-flowing river and were drowned.

"Profiting by the disorder, a French light cavalry regiment followed over the river and pursued the Germans for many miles. This regiment put to flight and drove before it greatly superior forces of German cavalry.

"The Russian mobilisation has been carried out with remarkable rapidity. The army is now ready to assume the offensive, which soon will make itself felt. Already in Galicia Russian cavalry has crossed the frontier, driving back the Austrians."

Another Man is Shot at London

LONDON, Ont., Aug. 17. — London's fourth shooting affray in two days since guards were posted here occurred Saturday night. Hardy Johnson, a civilian guard at the local waterworks plant at Springbank Park is laid up with a wound in the leg, which he claims was inflicted by a rifle or revolver in the hands of an intruder.

Johnson says he fired at the man twice upon the latter not replying to his challenge, and that the intruder in return fired his weapon at him. Johnson's story is being investigated.

British Cruiser Hurries To Sea.

HALIFAX, N.S., Aug. 17. — The British cruiser Good Hope, which was coaling at the dock yard Saturday, stopped coaling rather quickly at night and put out to sea right away under sealed orders, it is stated. Yesterday afternoon the British battleship Glory, 12,950 tons, arrived and steamed up to the dock yard, where she is coaling.

"I saw young Suburbo running a new machine this morning."

MANY SPIES SHOT

Germans Tried to Pass as English Officers

LONDON, Aug. 17. — The Daily Telegraph's Rotterdam corespondent says that many German spies were executed in and about Liege before that city fell into the hands of the Germans. He states that the representative of a local newspaper, who has just returned from the scene of the fighting, relates the following:

"The day before the Germans took the city it was reported that a party of English officers, was arriving, whereat there was great rejoicing. But soon the cries of joy were turned into execrations for the nine men who were walking about the city in British uniforms spoke English with a pronounced German accent. Their identity was proved, and all paid the customary penalty of spies. That same evening four ladies who were seen walking about excited the suspicion of the police on account of the unusual size of their hands and the breadth of their shoulders. Enquiry showed that they were German spies, whereupon they were shot.

SHOWERING DOWN NEWS.

Aviators With Pamphlets Revive Hopes of Deceived Alsatians.

PARIS, Aug. 17. — French aeroplanes flying across Alsace are spreading the news of French successes and German reverses in Belgium. Leaflets specially translated into the local patois by an Alsatian deputy, who is now a volunteer in the French army, are distributed in thousands over every town and village, the inhabitants receiving the glad tidings literally from the heavens.

Owing to the dissemination of false news by the Germans this is the first intimation received by the Alsatians that instead of the Germans being everywhere victorious, Paris blazing with revolution, and President Poincare assassinated, the truth is that the Kaiser's armies have been checked and his fleet blockaded.

First Tourists at Quebec.

QUEBEC, Aug. 17.—About 2,500 passengers, the first to come through from England since the war, arrived here yesterday afternoon, on the Virginian, Tunisian, and Tuetonia. The majority of them were Canadians and Americans whose summer vacations in Europe were cut short by the declaration of hostilities and all were glad to be near their homes once more. Some of the passengers on the Virginian, including Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, said that there appeared to be little excitement in England over the war, and apart from the movement of troops by rail from one point to another, one would hardly think that the country was about to engage in a war of probably gigantic proportions.

Bandits Dynamited.

BLUEFIELD, W. Va., Aug. 17.—The posse which has been in pursuit of the band of highwaymen who murdered Paymaster D. T. Johnson of the Glen Alum Fuel Co. and his two guards last Friday afternoon, securing $15,000 booty, has killed five of the outlaws near War Eagle, in the mountain fastnesses, by blowing up with dynamite the cave in which they were hidden. The money has been recovered.

Hopeful Influence.

"So you favor your wife's membership in political societies?"

"Yes, sir," replied Mr. Meekton. "I'm hoping that sooner or later Henrietta and I will be able to reduce our little domestic controversies to a basis of parliamentary procedure."—Washington Star.

BRITAIN IS CALM

Confidence of Outcome of War Shown in Trade Conditions

LONDON, Aug. 17. — The whole country, as well as the business community, is quietly confident. This attitude is largely due to the maintenance of the ocean trade routes. Food prices have not been raised. The Bank of England's gold supply is rapidly increasing, considerable additions being made to it through the deposit of gold at Ottawa for the bank's account. The shilling notes were put out yesterday. The new paper currency is being accepted without hesitation.

The Government's guarantee has caused the discounting at the Bank of England, in enormous amount, of bills accepted prior to Aug. 4. This has led to a great abundance of funds.

The Government is taking advantage of Treasury bills in anticipation of the war loan. The banks are showing great timidity in re-employing liquid funds but some fresh business is being transacted. The discount rate is 5 1-2 per cent., and the rate for loans 4 per cent.

The re-opening of the Stock Exchange for general business is not yet being discussed, but public opinion begins to favor a limited re-opening of the Exchange for cash transactions. Profiting by the opportunity which the moratorium affords, operators in the silver market have raised the price against the Government to 27 pence.

Pope Pius Is Ill.

ROME, Aug. 17.—Pope Pius was yesterday ordered for a complete rest by his physician, Dr. Marchiafava. He is suffering from gouty catarrh, and the intense heat which prevails is contributing to weaken him.

His holiness has not been well for several days, and the warfare in Europe has tended especially to depress him. Yesterday his condition was worse.

Dr. Marchiafava ordered that all audiences by the Pope be suspended.

Explosion Kills One; Five Dying.

M'CONNELLSVILLE, Ohio, Aug. 17.—One man was killed, four or five are reported dying and five others were injured in a gasoline explosion which occurred in a garage here yesterday.

Only the front wall of the garage was left standing. Three other buildings caught fire and were partially consumed.

Rubbing It In.

"What did your wife say when you came in at 1 the other morning?"

"Nothing. Just sat down at the piano and played 'Tell Me the Old, Old Story.'"—Philadelphia Ledger.

An Idle Boast.

"I can read your thoughts," he said with a smile.

"And yet you don't say good night and go," she replied.—Yonkers Statesman.

Feeling is excited to such a point in Paris that thousands of Parisians for several hours early yesterday morning mistook violent peals of thunder accompanying a storm for the booming of artillery.

A Reuter despatch from Brussels says artillerymen of the civil guard from Verviers relate that during the entry of the Germans into Verviers a shot killed a German soldier, and that the entire street in which they were was razed.

Alsatians Executed.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—The Morning Post's Baden correspondent wrote Saturday: It appears certain that German losses have been rather heavy, three thousand wounded having been brought to Colmaur. Stories by Swiss people who have returned to Switzerland from Alsace all agree concerning the fury of the Prussians against the civil population of Alsace who are at the mercy of the balls and bayonets of the Germans.

It is certain that during the battle at Muhlhausen Baden troops suffered the most. Bavarian troops actually are at Muhlhausen.

A Severe Loss.

As a nation the United States has suffered a severe loss in recent years. It has lost the phrase, "I cannot afford." When the housewife today finds an article she needs too expensive for her to purchase she does not say so. She hems and hedges, but does not come out with the frank and convincing statement, "I cannot afford." She thinks she cannot afford nowadays not to afford.—Chicago Tribune.

Life's Lengthening Span.

A Chicago doctor prophesies that children born in 1950 will have an average length of life of 100 years. The prophecy is based on a study of statistics, which show that the average length of life has been steadily increasing for fifty years, and he thinks that the rate will be maintained.

A committee of legislature was appointed consisting of the President and Secretary, and Messrs. C. A. Munson, M. P., Geo. Greer, H. McCullough, J. D. Hayden, Dr. Purdy. It was voted to limit membership in the league to the territory included in the town of Cobourg and the townships of Hamilton, Haldimand, and Alnwick.

A Religious Farm.

The Rev. Philip Blakeway, chaplain of the Eighth Hussars of England, who arrived in New York by the White Star liner Oceanic, is bound for his 640 acres farm near Edmonton, central Alberta, says a United States journal.

He is accompanied by Major H. C. Brodie, formerly of the Eighth Hussars. The chaplain says he acquired the military spirit by heredity, so he calls himself a "soldier born." Before he became chaplain he was a lieutenant in a Middlesex regiment and had seen service in India.

"I intend," the chaplain said, "to put on my farm fifteen or twenty God-fearing Englishmen, who while operating the land and sharing the proceeds of their toil will establish a lay church community there. After they have acquired a competence they will settle in other places in Alberta, each preaching to his neighbors the gospel of Christ and of work. I hope that at the end of five years on the farm they will be ready to become lay missionaries."

The chaplain hopes that a sort of endless chain of missionaries may be started in Alberta by his plan.

Was Dr. Johnson Bashful?

On the eve of leaving London for Canada Mrs. Brooke, who wrote "The History of Emily Montague," the first novel written in Canada, gave a farewell party, Hannah More, Johnson and Boswell being of the company. Dr. Johnson was obliged to leave early and apparently departed after wishing his hostess health and happiness. Shortly after a servant whispered to Mrs. Brooke that a gentleman was waiting below to speak to her. Running downstairs, the fair novelist found the venerable lexicographer. "Madam," said he ponderously, "I sent for you downstairs that I might kiss you, which I did not choose to do before so much company."

This Hold-up Youth Read Dime Novels

Hubert Powell, the Pontypool youth who was committed for trial by Magistrate Horsey, of Bowmanville on a charge of entering the shop of Henry Jakeman, of Burkton, and holding him up at the point of a revolver, was tried and found guilty. In his statement to the Judge he blamed his downfall to the reading of dime novels. Powell was allowed his liberty on suspended sentence, his father giving a bond for his good behaviour for two years.

ARNOLD BENNETT

While this writer is probably best known to America by his novels, it is in the field of practical essays that he has most endeared himself to thinking men and women. In one of these essays he takes up the proposition of brain education and classifies the usual rather hazy impression of the individual concerning the possibilities inherent in well-directed personal effort along this line. The mechanic trains his fingers, the runner his legs, the operator of a machine endeavors to run it to the best of his ability. Why not train one's brain so that it will operate to the best of its ability?

It is true that much school effort is expended along this line. For instance, the boy and the girl are taught to work out problems which they will never use in ordinary business life, simply to accustom their brains to logical reasoning and sensible deductions. But many of us neglect this variety of mental gymnastics as we grow old. We should not. We should not allow ourselves to run along in the net of our daily labors or amusements, no matter how engrossing they seem. It is by continually taking up new things and working out all matter of deductions in our minds that we keep in mental trim and advance steadily onward. Such an opportunity is offered in our Summer Pastime. Of course, regular fans will need no special encouragement but to others, who are not baseball enthusiasts, we would say: "Don't neglect this chance for some novel brain work that will prove both beneficial and enjoyable to you. No knowledge of sports is essential; any man, woman or child who is able to read and write, can enter."

THE APPROACHING BATTLE WILL INVOLVE MILLIONS OF MEN

French aviators generally, it is reported, are striking terror to the hearts of the Germans.

As the result of an order issued by the War Office, newspapers are hereafter to appear only once a day, and on not more than six evenings each week, and then only after all matter intended for publication has been submitted to the censor.

The news of the history-making events which are occurring here hourly will, therefore, be more greatly restricted than ever.

Austrians Invade Servia.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—(C. A. P. Cable)—A Vienna despatch to Reuter's Telegram Company says it is semi-officially announced that the Austrian troops have invaded Servia at several points.

French Successes In the South.

PARIS, Aug. 17.—The French offensive movements are of great force along the line from Sarrebourg, on the Franco-German frontier, to Luneville, in the Department of Muerthe-et-Moselle. The progress continued throughoutout Saturday night, with full force, and yesterday morning a German standard was captured.

Blamont, 17 miles east of Luneville; Circy, still further east; and Avricourt, occupied by a Bavarian army corps, were stormed by French troops. The Germans are in full retreat, having left many dead, wounded and prisoners. The French continue to advance through the valleys of the Upper Vosges, the Germans giving way before them. In Upper Alsace we have retaken Thann.

Prisoners affirm that Gen. Von Deimling, commanding the 17th Infantry Corps at Thann, was wounded. At St. Blaise, in the valley of Bruche, a German flag was taken.

The troops near the Saale pass are now entirely occupied by French troops, which Saturday took the neighboring plateau. The French artillery attacked the Germans' rear and its fire greatly helped our infantry, which had a few wounded but none killed. We found heaps of abandoned field kits and other equipment, showing that the flight of the Germans was precipitate.

Russians Interned?

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 17. — (Via London.) — According to a special message from Berlin, twenty-three Russian generals and admirals, including the former commander-in-chief of the Baltic Sea fleet, have been interned by the German authorities.

HOUSEKEEPERS ARE ASKED TO EXERCISE ALL POSSIBLE ECONOMY

The following message from the Executive Committee of the Household League, Ottawa, has been sent through the press to the members of the League, and the women of the city.

"It is certain that there must be some rise in the price of food stuffs, owing to the war. Some of this rise is inevitable, and some will be unjust and due to the endeavour of individuals to make money at a time of general scarcity.

"It is to be hoped that the latter will be few in number and that loyalty and patriotism will restrain men from making the public misfortune their private good.

"Members of the League can help themselves by exercising all possible economy in food, and by purchasing no luxuries, for if they individually are not affected by the war there will be a terrible amount of destitution to relieve this winter.

"The situation is such that many ordinarily in comfortable circumstances may be deprived of their incomes.

"If large quantities of supplies are bought prices are sure to rise. There is a local supply of vegetables and fruits, and each housekeeper can preserve these to a larger amount than usual. Simple one-course meals should be substituted for more elaborate ones.

"It is well to consider that an immediate reduction of the number of employees may lead to greater hardship, and each mistress might put the matter carefully before her staff, for a home and food may be of more value and less easy to obtain than usual."

A resolution was carried at the meeting of the Executive this morning to approach the Department of Trade and Commerce with the view of preventing undue inflation of prices without cause. This also proposed to request that the Labor Department issue to the press a weekly statement giving a fair retail price of the principal commodities.

The Executive of the Household League appeal for a small sum to start a series of cookery demonstrations for the preparation of very inexpensive food, to show how to prepare to have the maximum of nutritive value for the minimum of expense.

Subscriptions can be sent to Mrs. R. H. Coats, Manor Road, Rockliffe; Mrs. Attwood, 419 Charlotte Street, or Mrs. J. A. Wilson, 178 Rideau Terrace.

AN APPEAL TO MEMBERS OF THE COUNCIL OF WOMEN

Editor of Review:—

Sirs:—May I, through your colums, address the members of the "Local Council of Women" of Peterboro'. Scattered as we are in this holiday season, it is for us to think what is our duty to our country at this time of stress, and see what we can do, in co-operation, to carry it out.

We are already taking steps in regard to the Hospital Ship, which each individual will, of course, support. There is another matter, too, which demands our united attention. We are confronted by the possibility of serious conditions, owing to the lack of employment, and a rise in the price of foodstuffs, which may cause widespread suffering. The eyes of our Legislators are already directed toward the situation, and we have assurance that the power of the law will be exerted when necessary and possible.

But we feel that merchants and producers generally, can be appealed to from a sense of patriotism, to serve their country, by keeping down prices to a reasonable standard.

As housekeepers, we too have important national responsibilities resting upon us at this juncture.

We ought to restrain ourselves from all hysterical buying up of quantities of provisions, thus helping forward the advance in prices which we desire to keep down. Again it is our duty to exercise strict economy and avoid extravagances. We must be ready, through religious and patriotic channels, to help those who are likely to be the greatest sufferers.

There are other steps which we should take, about which we can consult later on.

Embracing nearly 40 societies, the local Council in Peterboro represents a very large body of women, and by united action, a great deal may be accomplished for the public good.

I therefore appeal to every member to hold herself in readiness to act on the above lines, and in such other ways as shall be called for. Yours,

F. M. DAVIDSON
President Local Council of Women

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

TO HELP WAR FUND.

Editor Review,

Dear Sir,—In the laudable effort to raise a war fund locally, I think the indirect as well as direct appeal, to the public could be successfully adopted. I have in mind such affairs as garden parties, lawn socials, dances, boat trips, etc. In the hands of a representative committee, these affairs could be made great successes, and the particulars would have the added pleasure of knowing they were contributing to a patriotic and deserving cause. To any responsible party or committee who decide to organize any of these affairs, the Grand Opera House Orchestra would willingly donate their services. It would be a fine act if the Trades and Labor Council could be persuaded to use their Annual Field Day on the 7th of September for the purpose of boosting the fund.

Yours truly,
G. HOWARTH.
Leader, Opera House Orchestra.

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, August 15.—Disappointment that no immediate relief for ocean shippers could be obtained thru the Washington conference about exports had a seriously unsettling effect today on the wheat trade.

Despite a somewhat improved feeling at the close of business prices were 2 1-8c to 2 3-8c under last night's level. The outcome in corn was a net decline of 1-4c to 1c, and for oats a loss of 3-8c to ½c. Provisions finished irregular, varying from 15c off to a rise of 2½c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 15.—Another substantial drop was brought about in wheat prices by lower Liverpool cables and extremely weak United States markets. No definite arrangement regarding export and stocks accumulating in the south, with an early movement of spring wheat on both sides of the line, were also depressing factors. Trading was quiet. Only a light volume of business was transacted. There was a reaction before closing, caused by shorts covering.

Wheat opened 1c to 1⅝c lower, and closed 1 c to 1⅞c lower.

The cash demand for contract grades of wheat continues good, with fewer offerings each day, old wheat being almost cleaned up. The buyers were houses with eastern connections.

Oats, barley and flax are at a comparative standstill.

Cash wheat closed 1¼c to 1⅝c lower. Cash oats closed unchanged. Cash flax closed 1c higher. Cash barley unchanged.

INDIA IS LOYAL.

All Races and Creeds United In Support of Britain.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—A despatch to The Morning Post from Calcutta, dated Saturday, says: Immense gatherings, representative of every class in the community and attended by prominent citizens of all races and faiths, assembled Saturday at Bombay and yesterday at Calcutta, to express the Indian solidarity, in view of the crisis by which the Empire finds itself faced. Sir Herozosha Meta presiding at the Bombay meeting, said: "At this juncture of especial gravity we meet together here to-day, men of different races and religions, Hindu, Mussulman, and proclaim with one heart, one soul, and one mind that these differences distinguish but do not divide us, and that, in the presence of this solemn situation, we are merged in one general universal denomination—the proud denomination of loyal, devoted subjects of the British crown."

The Calcutta meeting last night was characterised by similar expressions of absolute solidarity from speakers representing every rank and faith.

Food Price Probe Effective.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—Countrywide probing into the advance in food prices brought a sudden stop to the soaring of prices in many commodities to-day. The effect of the Federal and state investigators, and was felt within a few hours after word went out that incriminations would follow if evidence of conspiracy could be found.

About the only conspicuous exception was sugar, which continued to go up in price, the retailers charging ten cents a pound.

EVERYBODY RAGS.

Everybody's started ragging
They rag at every ball.
They do the hesitation,
The tango dip and all.
Mother's got the habit,
And so has sister Ann.
Everybody rags at our house,
Even our old man.

Now, Brother Bill went ragging
And stayed away from school
Until professor told him
It was against the rule.
But now professor's got it,
And so has teacher too.
Everybody's going crazy.
What shall we do?

Some scientist may tell us
A microbe it must be.
'Tis easy to believe him,
For a learned man is he,
Until you start to thinking
That perhaps he's ragging too
And keeps his feet a-traveling
Just like me and you.

Now, if you keep on ragging
From morn till close of day
"You'll rag into the hospital,"
The good old doc will say.
But every Thursday evening,
Just as regular as a clock,
You'll find him at some rag dance,
The dear old doc!

Everybody rags for breakfast,
For lunch and dinner too.
They go to work a-ragging
And rag the whole day through.
They go to bed a-ragging.
They drive a rag machine—
I can't go any further,
For I'm out of gasoline.

The Better the Deed.

He was a colonel of the old school, a veritable Lord Chesterfield. Though suffering from chronic financial embarrassment, he could always find the proverbial friend in need.

Meeting an old comrade one day, he asked the loan of $5. "I shall need it for a short time only; a tradesman has grown rather insistent," he said. His friend had not $5 in change, but glady pressed a ten dollar bill upon him.

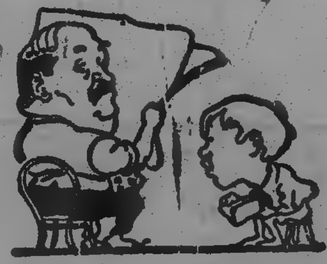
The colonel expressed his thanks; then asked, "And, how is your charming wife today?"

"Not at all well, I am sorry to say," was the answer.

"And no appetite, I'll venture. Perhaps some of these hothouse grapes may tempt her."

Whereupon he stopped at a nearby stand, purchased a basket of rare fruit, paid $5 the dealer asked out of his newly acquired $10 and walked jauntily to the gate of his friend's home, carrying the basket.—New York Post.

Teacher's Interest.



"The schoolteacher is interested in you, dad."

"How's that?"

"Why, today, after she'd told me six times to sit down and behave myself, she said she wondered what kind of a father I had."—Philadelphia Ledger.

No Chance to Agree.

"Why do you reject me?"

"I am sure that we can never be happy. We should spend our entire married life quarreling. It is better that you should suffer the pain of parting now than to endure a lifetime of misery."

"But what makes you think we should quarrel? I will do everything in my power to please you."

"I know that, but I am sure that we could never get along."

"Why not?"

"We learned the hesitation waltz from different dancing teachers."—Detroit Free Press.

Merely Coy.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

The amount of egotism that some people manage to flourish with is a matter of constant astonishment to most modest mortals.

Some misinformation has such a convincing sound that it is so hard to resist it.

Why worry since we have forgotten what we wanted last year and don't know what we may want next?

There are two sides to anything, but what of it? You can't be in two places at the same time.

In order to make a fool of himself all a man has to do is to let his conceit have a half chance and it will do the rest.

There is this about the cocksure man—he has all the benefit of knowing that he is right, even after he is proved wrong.

It would be nice to be able to do anything if it were not for the fact that in that case people would expect you to do something.

Easy of Access.

The path that leads to trouble
Is not so hard to find,
And one may stumble on it
If he is so inclined.
Just let him own an auto,
And I have got a hunch
Most any road he travels
He'll find it in a bunch.

But that is quite expensive.
There are some cheaper ways
If he will go about it
To find where trouble strays.
If in a family racket
He tries to smooth things o'er
He'll get enough, I'm thinking,
To stock a good sized store.

Or he might slyly venture
To kick a neighbor's cat
If he would in a hurry
See trouble come to bat.
He might when some one warbles
Upon the patient air
Express his true opinion
And get it then and there.

He need not run a circus,
He need not own a goat,
Alone he need not venture
To price a lady's coat,
He need not buy an airship
And flutter in the air,
He need not lift a finger—
There's trouble everywhere.

Not Many of Them.

"I always try to be affable to my inferiors."

"Indeed!"

"Yes, invariably."

"At that you aren't called on to exercise your affability a great deal, are you?"

Got Another Guess.

"I've learned something new."

"What is it?"

"How to get something for nothing."

"There is nothing new about that."

"No?"

"No. It is old as the first fool."

Her Record.

The hen was old and stiff and gray,
But she was far too proud to beg;
She had been faithful in her day
And never laid a storage egg.

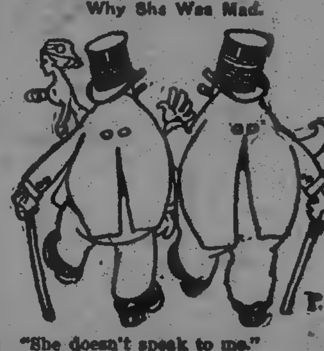
How It Happened.

"Take it from me"—

"No, I won't take a single thing from you!"

Here a lively scrap ensued.

Why She Was Mad.



"She doesn't speak to me."

"Why?"

"Because when she asked me what I thought of her complexion I told her it was very fair, but I could tell her a better brand."

For They Can.

"You can't always tell."

"Then there is one thing certain."

"What is it?"

"That you aren't a woman."

Substantial.

The joy of ready money,
The cinch of cash in hand,
Is something that the dullest
Can always understand.
There may be other pleasures
And other forms of bliss,
But there is none, I venture,
So sure enough as this.

In looking at the posies,
In going for a walk,
In taking in a lecture
To hear a fellow talk
And all such simple doings
Some pleasures may attend,
But there is no enjoyment
Like having cash to spend.

In love and its allurements
The one of youthful mind
Some feelings highfalutin
May very often find,
But when he pays the preacher
And starts to buy the hash
Things run on more serenely
If he can scatter cash.

Then here's to ready money,
The useful friend of man!
It gets him into places
No other booster can.
It gets him into places
And gets him out again
If he has ever handy
The twenty or the ten.

Brides with sour dispositions are apt to spoil honeymoons.

The War

THE shutting off of imports from Continental Europe into Canada, due to the War, gives many home industries an unexampled opportunity for immediate development.

"I have come to ask for the hand of your daughter," announced the young man.

"Have a chair," said her father kindly. "I presume you have made an estimate of what it will cost to keep my daughter in the style to which she has been accustomed?"

"I have, sir."

"And your figures?"

"Ten thousand dollars a year."

THE KORAN IN TURKISH.

How the Sacred Tradition of Centuries Has Been Broken.

Nine out of ten foreigners usually think of the Koran as being written in the Turkish language, while, as a matter of fact, it is written in Arabic and in Arabic characters. The Turkish language, strange as it may seem, has no characters of its own, and Turkish books are usually printed with Arabic or Greek characters; hence the excitement in religious circles in Turkey on the appearance of the Koran for the first time in the Turkish vernacular.

The translation has been done by Ibrahim Bey Hilmy, a learned oriental, who by giving Turks an opportunity of expressing their religious sentiments in their own mother tongue will doubtless be suitably rewarded by both church and state.

The sheik ul Islam at Constantinople heretofore prohibited the publication of the Koran in the vernacular on the plea that since no translator could strictly conform to the original he would be sure to make mistakes and those mistakes would be sacrilege. In this the sheik has usually been supported by the prime minister and the Young Turks, who, in spite of the liberal ideas on religion that some of them are known to entertain, cannot go against popular feeling on so important a matter. But it seems that Ibrahim Bey Hilmy, who is master of both Arabic and Turkish, to say nothing of Persian, Hebrew and Greek, has produced a translation which the leaders of Islam by a majority applaud. Thus is it that the sacred tradition of centuries is broken.—Constantinople Cor. New York Times.

Gunpowder For the Soil.

Brown gunpowder, manufactured for the purpose of destruction, is being turned into food. An experimenter has found that it makes an excellent fertilizer for garden vegetables, as it contains about 80 per cent of potassium nitrate. Large quantities of the powder made for navy use have been displaced by the newer smokeless powder, and the government authorities sought a way of utilizing the discarded explosive. In its new employment of adding to the country's food supply it is thoroughly wet and worked into the soil.—New York Tribune.

BEAVERS HIT EXTRA BASES PASSES AND ERRORS HURT PETES COUNTED BUT ONCE

Toronto, Aug. 17.—Against Kirley's good pitching, the Blountmen from Peterboro never had a chance to win Saturday's bill. The Petes secured but four safe swats off Kirley's offerings, while the Beavers secured extra base clouts off Sterling which with the visiting hurler's passes and Fox's errors made five circuits. Sterling's single, Blount's sacrifice and Dolan's double gave the Petes their single tally in the third.

First Innings.

Peterboro—Blount flied to right. Welsh grounded to short. Dolan walked, only to go out stealing. No runs. No hits. No errors.

Toronto — Hunt flied to right. Fox booted Ort's grounder. Trout raised to King. Ort stole second, but was left when Fox took Sullivan's fly. No runs. No hits. One error.

Second Innings.

Peterboro — Rooney walked, but was forced at second on Byrne's bunt to the pitcher. Killilea made a great stop of King's hit back of second and forced Byrne. Fox walked. Kelly hit to Isaacs, forcing King at third. No runs. No hits. No errors.

Toronto — Killilea flew to left. Isaacs grounded out, third to first. Snell drew a base on balls. Snell out trying to steal. No runs. No hits. No errors.

Third Innings.

Peterboro — Sterling dropped a Texas Leaguer over second base. Blount sacrificed. Welsh foul-flied to Harkins. Dolan doubled over second, scoring Sterling. Rooney struck out. One run. Two hits. No errors.

Toronto—Harkins singled to centre. Kirley forced Harkins, second to short. Hunt's grounder was too hot for Dolan and the runner reached second, with Kirley on third. Ort out, pitcher to first. Trout singled nicely over second, scoring Kirley and Hunt. Trout was out trying to steal, catcher to second. Two runs. Three hits. No errors.

Fourth Innings.

Peterboro—Byrne out, Isaacs to Snell. King whiffed. Fox out, Ort to Snell. No runs. No hits. No errors.

Toronto—Sullivan walked and was safe at second on a very close decision. Killilea fanned. Isaacs out, short to first. Snell out same way. No runs. No hits. No errors.

Fifth Innings.

Peterboro—Kelly skied to Isaacs. Sterling out, Ort to Snell. Blount placed one in left for a bag. Blount stole second. Welsh hit to Isaacs and was safe when Isaacs threw high to first. Blount attempted to steal home but was caught, Snell to Harkins. No runs. One hit. One error.

Toronto—Harkins out, third to first. Kirley walked. Hunt also drew transportation. Ort out, second to first. Trout was also passed, filling the stations. Sullivan walked, forcing in Kirley. Killilea rolled to Sterling, who threw out Hunt at the plate. No runs. No hits. No errors.

Sixth Innings.

Peterboro—Dolan raised one to Trout. Rooney's liner to left put him on first and he stole second easily. Byrne fanned. King out, short to first. No runs. One hit. No errors.

Toronto—Isaac's liner was too hot for Fox. Snell out, pitcher to first. Dolan dropped Harkin's high foul. Kirley raised to third. Hunt's high infield fly was stabbed by Fox in sensational style. No runs. One hit. One error.

Seventh Inning.

Peterboro— Fox out, second to first. Kelly was hit by the pitcher. Snell booted Sterling's grounder, but he was retired when Ort threw the pill quickly to first. Blount out, short to first. No runs. No hits. No errors.

Toronto—Hunt out on his bunt, third to first. Ort singled to centre, Trout hit into a double play, Fox to Dolan. No runs. One hit. No errors.

Eighth Innings.

Peterboro—Welsh raised one to Killilea. Dolan flew to left. Ort fumbled Rooney's grounder and the batter reached first. Byrne's high one went to Killilea. No runs. No hits. One error.

Toronto—Sullivan was hit by pitcher. Killilea sacrificed. Isaacs hit to Byrne, who ran down Sullivan between second and third. Fox fumbled Snell's grounder and Isaacs reached third. Harkins drove to right, scoring two. Kirley out, first to pitcher. Two runs. Two hits. One error.

Ninth Innings.

Peterboro — King out, short to first. Fox out, first to pitcher. Kelly skied to Trout. No runs. No hits. No errors.

COMMENT

As You Like It

A nasty feeling seems to prevail among the majority of local fans regarding the outcome of the recent Ottawa-Peterboro series of nine games, of which the Petes won two. It has even been charged that the games were not on the level. Such a charge is a very serious one and the only reason for its origin is that the Petes failed to display the usual snap they had shown recently. The local pitching in the series was undoubtedly weak, but their work against Hamilton in the last series here was wobbly also and probably the club was in the throes of a bad period.

The Mail and Empire admits that the Petes won the first of Friday's double bill because of the Beavers' errors but places the second loss to the credit of Umpire Miller. The Mail and Empire goes on to say that Peterboro started the last innings by walking Byrne and King and Kelly to cap the rally beat out a bunt. King was out at the plate and on a steal by Kelly it is claimed that Fox was out at third. Harkins then muffed a foul and Schettler singled, scoring Kelly and Fox. Two bases on balls, two hits and an error as well as a stolen base are usually good enough for two runs.

The Boston Braves made it three straight from New York on Saturday. The clean sweep places the Braves just three games behind the Giants and at their present gait will surely beat the Giants unless McGraw gets his men whipped in shape for the stretch drive. St. Louis and Chicago are about twenty points behind Boston and they all look as good as New York with St. Louis fancied as the club to possibly oust Boston.

Action againsa the Ottawa and London ball clubs for playing Sunday games at Dupuis Park, Hull, has been dropped..

Kingston is sending two of its very best hockey players to the war, in the person of Capt. George T. Richardson and Pte. Allan Davidson. If the Germans think they can play the Canadian winter game, they will be accommodated, if a brief truce is declared.

He Miscalculated Slightly.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 15.—(Via London.) — The Belgians are repeating with great gusto a story to the effect that when a member of the diplomatic corps of Brussels expressed surprise that the German Minister had not left the Belgian capital promply after the declaration of war, the Minister replied:

"It isn't worth while. To-morrow the Germans will be here."

The Belgians point out that ten days have elapsed since the alleged conversation took place.

DE LAVAL AND BANKERS WON IN MERCANTILE LEAGUE

Plenty of Good Baseball in Double Bill — Red Caps Tried a New Pitcher With Disastrous Result

Some two hundred fans responded to the call of help from the Mercantile League on Saturday afternoon and witnessed two real live games at Riverside Park. The four leading teams were doing battle and as a result the De Laval and Bankers are now a tie for first place while the Red Caps and Drafting Room are tied for third.

In the days of the Pop Anson it was often the case that a battery won a game, but of late the other seven men generally figure in victory. It was back to the dear old days of yore, however, in the De Laval-Drafting Room fixture. Take Carson, Taylor and Callahan from the south end factory nine and the rest of the team would be rated at ten cents if pepper sold for $1,000,000 an ounce. "Cars" was going like a veteran and his catcher not only performed his backstopping duties without a fault but also came through with three hits out of four times up. It is only proper to mention that "Geshle" Callahan, the short fielder for the Carsonites was also in the limelight on several occasions, having five putouts and three assists without a miscue.

Pat Gorman was on the mound for last year's champions but wasn't going quite as well as he has done. In the first frame Fallon, who leads off, smashed out a triple and Crough who follows sent him home with a single. Two more hits and a couple of pilfered bases resulted in two more runs and that lead proved too big to overcome. The final figures were 5-4. One of the brightest features of the game was a perfect throw from deep centre by Hagerman which caught a runner from third out by a city block.

Red Caps Lost.

When Jack Pilling trotted his team to the field one dark haired individual bearing the appropriate name Wing mounted the rubber and inside of five minutes soared away to regions known only by Count De Lesseps. Smyth, the first Banker to face him was walked, while Minorgan went safe on Hayes' error. Huycke filled the bases on four wide heaves and then Cavanah contributed a long single. Suffice to say when the smoke cleared Jack Pilling had pulled out nearly all his hair and the score board read Bankers 3

Huycke pitched for the Bankers and as usual struck out 13 men. He had little difficulty in retaining the early lead and when his team mates made the total nine in the first half of the seventh he eased a bit with the result that the Red Caps secured three in their half. The final score was 9-6

W. Andrews umpired both games and gave satisfaction, particularly in the second game when he tore off a Jacke Halligan and went behind the catcher.

Winning in the Morning the Game of the Afternoon.

In the American Magazine Eddie Collins, second baseman for the Philadelphia Athletics, writes a baseball article, entitled "Connie Mack and His Mackmen," in which he describes intimately the wonderful Philadelphia baseball manager. Collins is the man whom Johnny McGraw of the New York Giants calls the greatest baseball player in the world. Following is an extract from the article:

"Every morning at 10 we gather in the clubhouse. If the team is on the road we meet in Connie's room in the hotel. We are never in session less than ten minutes or rarely more than half an hour. But in that time the game to be played that afternoon is sometimes won.

"Every point of the defensive and offensive strength of the opposing team is discussed. Mack will mention the pitcher that our opponents will probably use and instantly a scheme of attack is devised. This attack varies as we meet different pitchers. Always in those morning meetings Mack goes over the entire situation—plans the battle."

The Devil's Knell.

Among the famous bells of Dewsbury, Yorkshire, England, is one known as "Black Tom of Soothill," which was presented to the church in expiation of a murder. "Black Tom" is always rung on Christmas eve. Its solemn tolling as it strikes the first tap at exactly midnight is known all over Yorkshire as the "devil's knell," it being the notion that when Christ was born the devil died.—London Standard.

Bishop O'Brien Appeals to Parishioners

At St. Peter's Cathedral yesterday morning His Lordship Bishop O'Brien, D.D., as a prelude to a sermon on the Feast of the Assumption urged the parishioners to pray for peace. Bishop O'Brien stated that if war must be, then everyone should pray and assist, for the success of the British Army. He referred to Canada as the finest country in the world and this is made so by the just laws of Britain. It is therefore the duty of every Canadian, every one living on Canadian soil, to cast aside all prejudice be it national or otherwise and do all they can to help the British. He urged the Catholics of the city to attend the meeting in the Council Chamber tonight.

At the Church of Our Lady of Mercy, Port Hope. Rev. Father O'Sullivan referred to the meeting of the ladies of the town for the purpose of forming a local Chapter of the Daughters of the Empire. He exhorted the ladies of the congregation to attend, adding that "we who enjoy much greater blessings and liberties should not lag behind our co-religionists at home in givng proof of our practical loyalty." No reference was made to the war beyond asking the prayers of the people for the soldiers engaged that they may face death prepared to meet their God.

The recent pictures, depicting warfare, shown at the theatre were very good.

ELECTRIC BOLT STRUCK HOUSE

One Blaze During the Heavy Storm This Morning

The electric storm which passed over the city this morning all but resulted in one family being homeless.

A bolt of lightning struck the home of Albert Paquett, Edison Avenue, and instantly the roof was ablaze. A telephone call was sent to the Fire Hall and when Chief Howard learned that the blaze was outside the city limits, and being conscious of the fact that a call might be expected any moment from some part of the city, he ordered Assistant Chief Solsby to take the ladder company and chemicals.

After a short fight the flames were subdued by means of the chemicals and the house was saved. The damage was very slight. The inmates were not injured.

INVESTIGATE FAMILY STATUS OF VOLUNTEERS

Dependents Must not be Left Without Support

By an official announcement from headquarters the local recruiting officers have been instructed to make a rigid investigation into the family status of all volunteers. This has been done in Peterboro and only those whose homes will not be affected by their absence have been accepted. There are a few married men in the contingent but permission has been received from their wives. One man who volunteered has failed to show up at the armouries since the first evening he reported. It is possible he is ill but if he is not heard from very soon he will be struck off the list. A list of those who volunteered was sent to Ottawa a week ago and by request of the department another list with fuller details has been sent to the Minister of Militia. It is the policy of the government to refuse any who cannot show that their dependents will not suffer by their absence.

There is some talk of the city giving the boys a send off or a testimonial of some sort but Mayor Buller states that nothing definite has been arranged.

KILLED BY LIGHTNING

Body of William Weir Burned in Barn

William Weir, of Harvey, was instantly killed this morning when he was struck by a bolt of lightning while standing at the door of his barn. The bolt set fire to the building, which was a mass of flames before neighbors could get the body out. only the trunk could be found. Mr. Weir was about 65 years of age and leaves a widow and family.

Orders Expected Any Moment

Up until press time nothing official had been received from Ottawa regarding the movement of the local troops although an officer of the battery stated that the corps expected orders before 5 o'clock which would order the detachment to depart. From the officers' statement it may be taken that a hint to the expected orders has been recived.

During the afternoon parade of the 57th recruits three of the volunteers were taken from the ranks to company room and given a severe lecture. The charge against them was breach of discipline.

SOCIALISTS AND CAPITALISTS

In Germany They Control a Third of the Money

Socialism and capitalism were once aligned as antagonistic ideas. It required the acquisitive mind of the German to unite the two.

It is in Germany, the hotbed of Socialism, that the new Socialistic capitalism is obtaining vogue. It came about this wise:

A representative of the Socialistic bank clerks' organization went to his directors and requested an increase in wages for himself and his fellows. He was discharged. Under threat of removing their united deposits from the Deutsche Bank, the great money bank of all Europe, the Socialist party demanded the clerk's reinstatement. The bank has refused again.

The General Commission of Social Democratic Labor Unions of Germany has now convoked a meeting to determine whether the unions of the country shall withdraw their deposits from the national bank and start a bank of their own.

The very threat to do this caused almost a panic in the money market of Europe. For the first time it caused capitalistic Europe to realize that the balance of power, capitalistic as well as political, had been transferred to the Socialists. This is an alarming thing for the old order. It means that in the future there will be few, if any, Morgans and Rothschilds, that the money power will be exerted by the people at large.

In Germany, specifically, Socialism now claims one-third of the country's population and at least one-third of its accumulated capital of $4,450,000,000 in the banks of the country. The doctrines of Socialism have attracted rich men to its ranks. Many millionaires have found in Socialism what they could not find in capitalism, a place to become influential. In the old regime a newly rich capitalist had little chance to exert a nation-wide influence. He finds, if he affiliates with the Socialist party that he becomes at once a power in finance, dictating the policy of a great and rich organization.

In Germany Socialists are abandoning the idea that all capitalism is wrong, and substituting therefore the idea that capitalism is right if it is Socialistic capitalism. To destroy capitalism as an evil, it is contended the first need is capital.

Already Socialistic capital has financed numerous loans, being obtainable at a lower rate than private capital. It is collective saving, collective bargaining, collective loaning and collective profit sharing. The large accumulations of members of the Socialistic party in Germany are due to the natural thrift of the nation and to the good business management. The Socialistic ranks in Germany are not conspicuous now for the unwashed and unkempt. Adherents of the doctrines of Herr Bebel are as well dressed and prosperous as members of the aristocratic National-Liberal party of avowed capitalism.

The entry of Socialism into capitalism means the elimination of the individual capitalist and the substitution of the collective capitalist; it means a cessation of accumulation of a few vast individual fortunes and a multiplication of the number of smaller, but more widely distributed fortunes. It is the latest Utopian idea of an intelligent proletariat.

FRIEND OF CHILDREN

William Louis Scott Active in Behalf of Neglected Little Ones

Mr. William Louis Scott, who during the recent session of the Dominion Parliament produced somewhat of a sensation in society circles by drawing the attention of a select parliamentary committee to the growing practice of cigarette smoking by society women and girls, is one of the foremost workers in the direction of social and moral reform in Ottawa at least, and probably in Canada. He is a son of the late Sir Richard Scott, so long a conspicuous figure in the public life of Canada, who died last year. It will be remembered that Sir Richard Scott was himself a most pronounced teetotaler, father of the Scott Act in fact, and held the opinion that the use not only of liquor, but of tobacco was injurious to the human race. Mr. Scott is and has been for many years president of the Ottawa Children's Aid Society and has done effective work in that capacity. He has acted as a delegate from the organization in question to the International Convention of Charities, the Council of Women, etc. He has recommended and actually carried out many reforms in connection with the work of the society and has been a voluminous contributor to the legal and religious press on charitable and sociological problems. He was one of those mainly instrumental in securing the establishment of Juvenile Courts in Canada and he is now interested in the effort to secure the complete separation of the Juvenile Court from the Police Court in Ottawa.

At present the forms used in the Juvenile Court are those in use in the Police Court, though Mr. Scott maintains that these are unsuitable for the Juvenile Court. The procedure in court is the same as that followed in the case of adults. The child is "arraigned" and must "plead" in formal language, which Mr. Scott maintains is quite unintelligible to the ordinary child. In a proper Juvenile Court, as Mr. Scott would have it, this formal procedure would be dispensed with, and instead the child would be treated as a child and the facts got at much as a father would get them from his own son. Mr. Scott is one of the best known members of the Ottawa Bar and has been in the profession many years. He has been local master and deputy registrar of the Supreme Court of Judicature for Ontario, and local master of titles under the Torrens Act for the City of Ottawa. He is the legal counsel of the Canadian Pacific Railway at the capital, having succeeded his brother, Mr. D'Arcy Scott, appointed to the Dominion Railway Board. Mr. Scott is identified with numerous institutions at the capital. Mr. Scott was born at Ottawa, and educated at Ottawa University and Toronto University. Mrs. Scott was the second daughter of Hon. W. W. Sullivan, chief justice of Prince Edward Island.—Chesterfield in Family Herald and Weekly Star.

KEEPING UP STANDARDS

How the Canadian Government Protects the Consumer of Foods

As the Canadian Government needs the co-operation of the house-keepers in building up the nation, so it offers to them a variety of aids in the performance of their duties. Of course, the consumer must be the ultimate judge of the value of the food; but the state takes measures to see that the consumer shall get what she pays for, and what the dealer agrees to give her.

Take, for example, the common commodity of butter. There is butter and butter; and in some degree there will probably always be butter and butter. But the variety of the article that is sold under that name is not so wide now as it once was, and it may conceivably be more strictly limited in future. At one time in this country, and still in a number of other lands, oleomargarine might be sold as butter. To-day its sale is absolutely prohibited. Again the amount of water which is allowed to be left in butter has been carefully limited. The present limit is sixteen per cent.; and it is probable that this limit may be reduced. Thirdly, a law was passed only last session to prohibit the sale of "process" butter. This was old butter which had been re-worked and freshened up by pumping water into it. In some instances it had been found to contain forty per cent. of water; but by a flaw in the Act the guilty parties escaped. Of course, nobody wants to pay thirty cents a pound for water.

Before butter could be defined and its variety limited it was necessary that there should be a large number of chemical tests of samples made. Then these tests were carefully compared, and from them a standard was picked out. In a similar way, standards have been set for a number of other foods. These include flour, meats, meat extracts, lard, milk, and cream, and ice cream, maple products, fresh and fermented fruit juices, and olive and other salad oils. It is now an offence against the law to sell these articles unless they come up to the standard; and the Government has inspectors on the watch for violations of the law. It is also possible for private parties to start prosecutions, but for this purpose it is better to consult with the inspectors.

By its laws and by its inspectors the Government seeks to ensure that the public shall get what it buys, not only in regard to weight, but in regard to quality and nourishing power. Fundamental to the protection of the public against false balances is the inspection of weights and measures by the Inland Revenue Department. Every scale sold must bear the stamp of the Government inspector, and all scales used in shops are also subject to re-inspection. The protection as to quality and nourishment comes through the food standards. Both these points are taken into consideration in arriving at the standards.

BRITISH EXPEDITIONARY FORCES MOVE ON FRENCH SOIL

ENTHUSIASTIC CROWD GAVE BATTERY MEN FINE SEND OFF

People Tried to Make up for Absence of Music by Their Lusty Cheers

CANON DAVIDSON GAVE PARTING WORD

War may have all the earmarks of Hades, but the departure of a volunteer for the front is a picture of pathos. Last evening 22 of Peterboro's sons who volunteered to rally to the colors left here as members of the 24th Field Battery, for Cobourg from where they expect to depart on Friday for Quebec. At least two thousand highly excited people were at the station to see them away but the send off given to these gallant men was not a credit to the military officials of this city. Their only escort was a handful of the 3rd Dragoons. They had no band to send them on the journey which may lead "to the valley of death and the jaws of hell," as Tennyson pictures The Charge of the Light Brigade. Their mothers, wives and sweethearts were on hand though, and numerous well wishing citizens.

A striking contrast and one which has created unusual adverse comment was the midnight send off given to three reservists. A portion of the 57th band escorted them to the C. P. R. where patriotic airs were played. Cheers were given but it would have been much more satisfactory if this handful of musicians would have turned out to bid farewell to the men who volunteered and also the trio who were forced to go because they were reservists of the British Army.

Behind the Scenes.

The scene at the G. T. R. station will remain a picture of good will, mingled with tears, in the minds of the thousands who were there. A Review reporter happened to be behind the scenes of the shouting and roaring on the station platform. The real struggle or the first struggle of the war was fought out at the door of the ladies waiting room. It was there that mothers, wives and sweethearts assembled. One incident which struck the reporter as being very pitiful was a mother and her son. All through the crush and rush, this son and mother stood with their hands locked. The woman was weeping and there were big large chunks in the throat of the volunteer. His eyes commenced to bulge under the strain of holding back the tears which were inevitable and finally when the train pulled in he gave away to his emotions. "God bless you, my boy, I know you will do your best." said the mother.

"I will and God bless you" was Jack Canuck's reply and after an embrace which might be the last, but we hope not, the son pushed his way through the crowd and mounted the steps of the coach.

Numerous such scenes were to be witnessed and one other in the waiting room was very touching. It brought home the heart pains and ravages of war. She was a mother also. The sweethearts took it bad enough and so did the few wives, but the real implicit faith, love and genuine God bless you, came from the mothers.

There was the amusing side also. One woman should have been silenced with a good British wallop and only the fact that she was a female saved her. After one wife had forced her way to the coach steps, this woman who stood behind assumed that familiar "nosy" attitude, which is noticeable in all scandal mongers.

"She'll be glad to get rid of him, one of her sons should have been in the boy's home two years ago," was her first shot.

One of the more timid and reserved members of the feminine class asked. "Will they get to the front."

"No, they'll all be killed by the Germans before they get there," was the reply.

"I 'ardly think so. I 'ope not and I know the fellows won't run," chipped in a little English woman.

"My brother-in-law has been in the war and he says that all this stuff we hear in the papers is no good. It all comes over the wire," said the other woman.

It was at this juncture that the train commenced to pull out and the reporter was able to have a laugh.

"It all comes over the wires." For the benefit of this poor woman, we might mention that the day of news transmission by mail has long since been passed.

During the crush three women were either overcome by excitement or grief and fainted. They were cared for by friends in the waiting room. "Water, water" shouted one young fellow who should have known better as he shoved his chum up against the man who was carrying one woman. "It's brains you want," replied the gentleman.

The battery squad was in charge of Sergt.-Major Guerin, who is a fine type of Canadian gunner and who was one of the men selected to go to the Coronation.

The others members of the party were: Quarter Master Sergeant Guyall Sig.-Sgt. Downie, Gunner Hay, Rush, Gauthier, Parkinson, McDonald, McDougall, Boone, Gauthier, Levell, Gray, Fry, Hanton, King, Anderson, Coolse, Claridge, Baker, Patterson, Reynold,' Lindsay and Cooper.

Just before the train pulled out Canon Davidson who had wished the boys bon voyage and success called for cheers from the crowd and the response was magnificent.

Four Reservists Leave.

Four reservists who left via C. P. R. last night were Jas. Playford Police Constables Downs and Reid and George White, a member of the 57th band.

FEAR GOD, HONOR THE KING

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 18.—Every man of British expeditionary force which has landed in France carries in his napsack a little phamplet signed by Earl Kitchener, containing two hundred words of sound soldiery advice. The Field Marshall tells them to fear God and honor the King and country, to remember that they will be fighting on the soil of a friendly nation, to abstain from liquor and looting and to be courteous to women. Nothing further is allowed to be made public in regard to the force since it has disappeared into the country on the other side of Boulogne. The official news bureau announces that General Sir Horace Smith Dorrien has been appointed in command of one of the army corps of the expeditionary force in succession to Lieut. General Sir James Grierson, who died yesterday.

EXCITEMENT ADDED TO RETURN TRIP

Local Lady Made Trip on Virginian, Convoyed by British Cruiser

After a very trying and exciting trip or race across the Atlantic aboard the Virginian of the Allan Line, Mrs. Alfred Hartshorn arrived at her home, 200 Antrim Street, yesterday afternoon. The Virginian docked at Quebec Sunday morning along with the Teutonia and Laconia. All three giants of the sea were escorted by the British cruiser, the name of which was not divulged to the passengers. Mrs. Hartshorn could not say whether there was more than one of the British fleet's giants. She knows that the passenger boats steamed ahead at full speed all one night and possibly they were running the gauntlet of some foreign battleship.

All Lights Out.

During the journey across all lights were out on the deck except those used in the wheel house by the captain and his staff and the wheel house was protected by cloths and boards so that there was not the slightest glare.

DID NOT KNOW BATTERY BOYS WERE LEAVING

Part of the Explanation Why Band Did not Turn Out

The laxity of the officers of the 57th in practically ignoring the volunteers who left last night to join the other battery men at Cobourg has created strong feeling. The boys were allowed to go away with only an escort of 21 men from the 3rd Dragoons who have volunteered to go as infantry.

Col. Clegg when asked about the matter said that he did not think it was necessary to order out the band. 'I did not know the battery were going away. I heard they were, but was not notified. It might have been suggested that the bandsmen could turn out but I cannot say it was necessary," were the commanding officer's remarks when interviewed.

He also stated that the band turned out of its own accord to give the reservists a send off. It was not a full strength band.

The statement made by Lieut. Glidden, when seen today was that he was absent from the city.

PUBLIC MEETING ASKS FOR ACTION TO STOP INCREASE IN PRICES

After the business had been completed at last night's citizens' meeting Mrs. James Kendry spoke at some length on the manner in which the prices of various foodstuffs have advanced since the outbreak. She thought that as there were clergymen, representatives of the Trades and Labor Council and members of City Council at the meeting, some steps vance in prices cease.

Amid great enthusiasm the meeting unanimously passed the following resolution: That this meeting of Peterboro citizens dedesire to draw the attention of the Dominion member of Parliament, Mr. J. H. Burnham, to the great increase in prices which has taken place in our city since the present European war began, caused largely by the wealthy buying in advance of their present needs, and that Mr. Burnham be asked to request the Dominion Government to pass such legislation as will, as far as possible, remedy this serious menace to the poor of our city.

MORE RECRUITS WANTED FOR 24th FIELD BATTERY

Recruiting Will Continue To-night and To-morrow at the Armouries

MEN LEAVE COBOURG FOR QUEBEC FRIDAY

57th Volunteers Were Inoculated and Are Resting up

Twenty-five more recruits are needed for the 24th Field Battery. Sgt.-Major Guerin who left last night for Cobourg returned this morning after a message had been received from Ottawa that additional artillerymen were needed. Sgt.-Major Guerin speaks very highly of the Government's arrangements at Cobourg. All the artillery assembled there are quartered in the armouries. Splendid sleeping arrangements and good wholesome food is being supplied. All along the line to Cobourg the men who left last night were given a rousing cheer and although it was nearly mid-night when the detachment arrived in Cobourg they were accorded a good reception.

Recruiting will go on between 7 and 8 to-night and all day to-morrow. It is expected that the men now at Cobourg will be sent to Quebec on Friday and the men who are recruiting here to-night and to-morrow will go along with the Cobourg squad.

The 57th volunteers will have all this afternoon and evening to rest. They were inoculated this morning by Drs. Greer and Sutton and for that reason are receiving a rest. No word has been received as to the date of departure. It is generally felt that departure will be made Thursday afternoon.

A SOLEMN IMPRESSIVENESS FELT BY ALL AT THE OPENING OF PARLIAMENT

DUKE OF CONNAUGHT.

THE SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

King's Representative Expresses His Thanks and Admiration for Splendid Spirit of Patriotism and Generosity Displayed Throughout the Dominion

Canadian Press Despatch.

Ottawa, Aug 18.—Both Conservative and Liberal members of Parliament seem to be confident that barring the unexpected, the session which opens at three o'clock this afternoon will be short.

The "unexpected" seems to be an outbreak of partisan feeling on past naval policies which, of course, will not be initiated by the leaders of the two parties who are understood to have arrived at an understanding, to facilitate the passage of such measures as are hinted at in the Governor-General's message.

While the opening proceedings shorn as they were of much that attracted crowds in past years were planned to be brief, the solemn impressiveness of the occasion lent a new atmosphere to the opening of Parliament which was felt by everybody inside and outside the buildings. After attending the Senate to hear the address, the members of the Commons returned to their chamber to hear an account of what the Government has done up to the present in relation to Canada's share in war. All documents except confidential memoranda from the British Government were ready for the inspection of members.

Speech From Throne.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Gentlemen of the House of Commons. "Very grave events vitally affecting the interests of all His Majesty's dominions have transpired since prorogation. The unfortunate outbreak of war made it immediately imperative for my ministers to take extraordinary measures for the defence of Canada and for the maintenance of the honour and integrity of our empire.

"With respect to such of these measures as may require sanction and approval of Parliament, necessary legislative proposals will be submitted for your consideration. Other bills authorizing additional measures which are essential for public safety will also be presented to you without delay."

"Estimates will be laid before you to provide for an expenditure which has been or may be caused by the outbreak of hostilities.

"Hon gentlemen of the Senate, gentlemen of the House of Commons, the critical period into which we have entered has aroused to the full patriotism and loyalty which have always actuated Canadian people. From every province and indeed from every community the response to the call of duty has been all that could be desired. The spirit which thus animates Canada, inspires also the Majesty's dominions throughout the world and we may be assured that united action to repel common danger will not fail to strengthen the ties that bind together vast dominions in the possession and enjoyment of the blessings of British liberty.

"As the representative of His Majesty, the King, I must add my expression of thanks and admiration for the splendid spirit of patriotism and generosity that has been displayed throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion."

FRENCH WELCOME BRITISH GENERAL

Crowds Sing National Anthems as Genenal French Steps From Train

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 18.—The official war information bureau announces that the British expeditionary forces have landed safely on the French shore.

Through the official press bureau Earl Kitchener expresses his obligation and that of the country to British newspapers for their action by which all references to movements of the British expeditionary forces and their landing on the continent, have been suppressed. The official communication goes on to say that Sir John French arrived in Paris shortly after midnight Saturday to convey the salutations of the British nation to France. He was welcomed by several distinguished French officers and cabinet ministers. As he stepped from the train in his khaki uniform, a roar of cheering for England and France rose from the assembled crowds which sang the national anthems of both countries.

On the way to the British Embassy, the English General's motor was the centre of a human whirlpool. Even the police were excited and wholly unable to restrain the crowd which surged around the car shouting clamorously "Hurrah for General French, hurrah for England, hurrah for France."

On Sunday Sir John French had a long interview with President Poincaire.

Everybody in England has known for two weeks that a large army was crossing the channel. One of the largest contingents embarked at Dublin, others sailed from Liverpool, Eastbourne, Southampton and other ports. The transport of troops lasted several days but not a mention of the expedition was permitted in the newspapers. Even now, the strength of the expedition, the names of regiments and ports where they landed are not a matter of public knowledge but it is known that a large proportion of the best troops of the regular army are on continental soil.

LIGHTNING STRUCK BARN CAUSING LOSS OF BUILDING AND THE SEASON'S CROPS

One of the finest barns in the county, and one that was the admiration of the farmers of Otonabee was totally destroyed by fire during the electrical storm of yesterday morning. The season's crops, with the exception of forty stooks of oats were also lost and as a result Alexander Wood, of Villiers, faces a heavy loss.

Mr. Wood was insured in the Farmers' Insurance Co. with $1,000 on his barn and $700 on the contents. These amounts represent about one half the loss. The size of the building was 120 feet by 45 feet. Lightning struck the barn about eleven o'clock. Thos Rhuebottom, a farm helper was in the building at the time and he did everything possible to save the horses and cattle. He was soon reinforced by nearby farmers and after hard work all the horses and cattle were saved. One colt dashed back into the flames on two occasions.

The smaller adjoining structures were also saved by the splendid efforts of the volunteers.

Edward Foley's barn at Foley's Bay was also fired but little or no damage was done. This building was protected by lightning rods, but the bolt found its mark near the bottom of the barn. The farm home of John Graham, north of Villiers, was also struck by lightning.

PRINCE ALEXANDER OF TECK TO LEAVE FOR FOREIGN SERVICE

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 18.—Prince Alexander of Teck is going on foreign service.

Shanghai, Aug. 18.—Two German cruisers have been disabled and brought into Hong Kong. Confirmation of this fact was received here today.

Nish, Aug. 18.—Austrians have been completely defeated near Sabac, twenty-seven miles west of Belgrade. According to Government sources they fled towards Lesnitza and Lostnitza, pursued by Servians who cut up three regiments and captured fourteen guns.

Paris, Aug. 18.—A despatch to Figaro from Brussels says that the battle in the north is turning to the advantage of the Belgians.

According to the Belgian Minister [illegible] of War their forces have blocked the pivoting move southward undertaken by three corps of the German army at Liege.

London, Aug. 18.—A despatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Brussels says that is has been officially announced that very important measures have been taken to assure the defense of Brussels and safeguard it against any surprise attack.

London, Aug. 18. — The Servian Legation has received the following telegram from the Servian Premier, N. P. Pachitch, "Austrians were completely routed in Mountains near Sabac and fifteen thousand were annihilated.

Fourteen guns were captured and the Austrians are fleeing in great disorded to recross the river Save and Drina, hotly pursued by our troops."

Paris, Aug. 18.—An official announcement here says the rumor is persistent at the Hague that the German Crown Prince has been seriously wounded and is lying at Aix la Chapelle whither Emperor William has hastened to his side.

London, Aug. 18.—A Central News despatch says the Austran torpedo boat No. 19 struck a submarine mine at the entrance to Pola harbor and sank with all on board but one man.

London, Aug. 18, 3.12 p.m.—The German incursion in the direction of Brussels seems definitely stopped according to an official communication issued by the war office at Brussels at noon today, which adds. "The situation remains excellent for our army."

FINANCING CANADA IN TIME OF WAR.

THE QUESTION of financing the debt, necessitated by the expense of Canada's assistance to the Empire, will be one of the important problems for the forthcoming special session of the House of Comons. It is stated on good authority that the Canadian Parliament will be asked to vote a preliminary war creait of $50,000,000. Further credits will depend on the fortunes of the British arms in the present war. This first credit of $50,000,000 is estimated to cover present preparations, such as the equipping and maintenance of the first army division of 21,000 men, the cost of the destroyers purchased from Chili, the cost of getting the Rainbow and Niobe in shape and maintaining them, the purchase of machine and defence guns, and other war expenses. The Laurier Administration sent, roughly, 8,000 men to South Africa, for which $3,000,000 were appropriated, and, in view of the cost of these, the estimate of $50,000,000 seems to represent fairly the cost of proposed assistance to Great Britain, especially in view of the fact that further army divisions may be sent to war.

All the men sent to the front will receive regular army pay. They will be fed, clothed, equipped and transported at the expense of Canada. In addition, the Government proposes to insure each man, so that if any are killed, the families bereaved will not suffer total loss. The pay is $1.10 per day, Sundays included.

Canada has undertaken a big task in carrying through her proposals to assist the Empire. The danger to commerce on the high seas has caused an almost total cessation of trans-Atlantic trade. As the revenue of the Dominion Government is largely raised from duties and customs on goods imported into, or exported from, Canada, the stoppage of trans-Atlantic trade will mean a big falling-off in revenue. It will not be so large, however, as some people fear, for of Canada's total trade for the year ending March 31st, 1913, $622,432,927 were with the United States. The following figures give Canada's trade returns for that year:

Imports from British Empire:

	Dutiable	Free
	$119,847,428	$43,525,457

Imports from foreign countries:

	Dutiable	Free
	$336,238,759	$192,410,748

Exports to British Empire and foreign countries respectively.
$198,386,680,
$194,847,467 of which $194,494,811 were to United States.

Total imports	$692,032,392
Total exports	$393,232,057
Total trade	$1,085,264,449

These figures are interesting in estimating the effect of the war on Canada and the means of providing for the Canadian war credit. Of Canada's billion-dollar trade, two-thirds is with a country, that under normal conditions, would not be greatly affected by war. Our exports to foreign countries, other than the United States, are almost negligible, while our imports from foreign countries, excepting the United States, amount to only seventy-three odd millions. Canada's trade with the British Empire is, therefore, a place where Canada is deeply concerned, amounting, as it does, to 361 millions. Of this amount duties were collectable on 119 millions. Canada will likely not buy largely in foreign countries outside the United States while the war is in progress, so that the Canadian Government will lose the duties collectable on a large proportion of seventy-three millions of foreign trade. If the British navy can maintain safety to British trade on the high seas, Canada's trade with the Empire ought not to decrease very much, so that the revenue on the 119 millions of that trade ought to be fairly maintained.

Thus, our relations with the United States are the most important at this juncture. The war has tremendously affected that country in its foreign trade, for, while the foreign trade of the United States is only a drop in the bucket compared with its internal trade, it is sufficient to cause hard times in that country. Britain and France cannot take all the exportable raw cotton, and a cessation of cotton trade with Germany, now almost inevitable, means a fall in cotton prices and hard times in the Southern States. This will indirectly affect the rest of the country. Then the closing of European markets will cause depletion of trade of other parts of the United States, so that its buying power will be reduced. Canada sold to the United States last year two hundred million dollars' worth of goods, and the war will likely cause this to be reduced. However, Canada is in the same position, for she will not likely buy so largely from the United States as she did last year, the amount being 455 millions. But the reduction should not be serious, and the duties collectable on these goods should not be greatly reduced.

Thus, the revenue of Canada will undoubtedly be less than last year. There will be slight reductions in trade with the United States and the Empire, but it is not likely that there will be a total loss of the seventy-three millions of foreign trade mentioned. In view of these facts, the Canadian Government should not be greatly hampered, financially, by the war. It has obligations to meet, it is true, but Canadian banks are in good condition, and Canada's credit is also unimpaired in the British market. Thus, considering all the facts, there does not seem to be any necessity to levy a direct tax for financing the fifty-million-dollar war credit that Sir Robert Borden will likely need. The Cannington Gleanor advocates a direct tax of one or two cents on bank cheques to cover the expense. We think this is unsound finance, for, as long as the Canadian Parliament can meet its obligations in the usual way of indirect taxation it should do so. When the Canadian Government finds its revenues have been so greatly depleted by the war that they cannot provide for their obligations, then it will be the proper time to devise a direct tax on the Canadian people.

Canada must not be too reckless in meeting the conditions of war. Every available resource that can be spared will be at the disposal of the Empire, but this war may last longer than anticipated, it may be more costly and disastrous than we think, and the financial burdens arising out of this war should not be placed too heavily or too suddenly on the shoulders of the people. The aim should be to spread out the expense as much as possible, so that it will not be felt any more than is necessary and will interfere as little as possible with the resources of the nation. The fortune of war may necessitate a direct tax upon the Canadian people, and such a tax should be withheld as long as possible, so that if the occasion required such a sacrifice, Canada would be able to meet it cheerfully and well.

So far as trade conditions generally are concerned, there is no need for the people to be alarmed. Blue ruin is not coming at a gallop. The real financial effect of this war will not likely be felt until it is over or for a couple of years, if it lasts that long. In the meantime, the shrinkage will largely be that caused by conservatism in buying all over the world. Canada, from her remote position from the war and her large resources of grain and food products, is due to feel the burden of the war more lightly than any other country in the world.

GERMANY'S MISTAKE.

A PERUSAL of the English newspapers before war was declared between Germany and England shows that they were overwhelmingly against war. If the newspapers of a country are any guage of public sentiment, England was opposed to war. Not until Germany violated her treaties of Belgian neutrality was the feeling in favour of war.

A point that should be noted is that in 1870 Bismarck asked Belgium for permission to transport some wounded soldiers back to Germany through Belgium. The request was refused, and Bismarck found another way to get his wounded back to Germany. The complications that have arisen would seem to indicate that Germany has made a mistake in violating Belgium neutrality. The stubborn resistance met at Liege seems not to have been anticipated by Germany, and to show that the feat of 1870 will not be repeated, and may even be reversed.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The REVIEW has received a copy of the first edition of the Imperial Year Book. Further editions will no doubt be fruitful of many improvements, but for a first edition it is a valuable book of information about Canada and the Empire, especially at the present time, when the Empire is at war. Details of the Empire's fighting strength are a feature that is interesting and important. To express the Imperial Year Book in a sentence one would class it as an encyclopedic review and gazetteer of the British Empire compiled for Canadians. Two months after its publication no man can plead ignorance of any subject under the British sun. It will be in "Southall's," and the price is low enough to tempt the poorest of us.

IN SPITE of the fact that the International Yacht Club races have not been cancelled, interest still centres in the European war.

Disgusted.

Passing through a forlorn little town in Florida, the name of the station was noticed as Eden. A little daughter, not yet five, was called. "Come here, Dolly. This is Eden; perhaps we shall see Adam and Eve." Much disgusted by such ignorance, she retorted: "Why, no, daddy! They had to move out!"

One Good Result of the War.

Orillia Packet.

One result of the war for which Canada can be thankful is that it will cut off for a time the flow of immigration from Central Europe. We have been getting more people from that quarter than we can readily digest.

War's Victims and War Makers.

London Citizen.

Millions of workers who have never seen each other, who have no possible quarrel with each other, who are bound to each other by known and unknown ties, are to be flung murderously against each other, and their rulers have no justification to offer except this: "We did not want this dreadful thing, either; we tried to stop it; we were powerless; Kismet." These irresolute counsellors, who follow each other like sheep, each going into war because somebody else goes into war, are the unsafe and unfit custodians of their countries' interests, and should be bundled unceremoniously out of doors, feeling lucky to have escaped heavier indictment and chastisement.

Jean Jaures' Last Speech.

At Brussels, July 29, 1914.

Our rulers are hesitating. Let us profit by this in order to organize ourselves. We French Socialists have a simple task. We have no need to impose a pacific policy upon our government. It practices that policy all the same. For my part, I, who have never hesitated to invoke upon my head the hatred of our Chauvinists by my obstinate desire, which will never fail, for a French-German approximation, I have the right to say that at the present moment the French Government wants peace. The French Government is the best ally for peace of that admirable British Government which has taken the initiative in the matter of conciliation, and which is giving Russia counsels of prudence and of patience. As for us, our duty is to insist that the government should speak in strong accents to Russia, so that the latter may keep back. If Russia should unfortunately take no notice of us, then our duty is to declare: We only know one treaty—the treaty which binds us to humanity.

ROAST BEEF

By Walt Mason

How pleasing is the juicy roast—old England's bulwark and her boast, on which her sons grew strong!—well done or rare, as you may choose, it builds up bones and strengthens thews—I praise it all day long. A chicken now and then is good, although when old it tastes like wood, and wooden grub is bad; but when too oft this bird is sprung — e'en though it's succulent and young, it makes the eater mad. The turkey, at Thanksgiving dished, is that for which we long have wished, and pictured in our dreams; but when at four successive meals it has been dished, fellow feels like uttering some screams. And thus it is with geese and fish and nearly every other dish that's of the fleshy kind; served now and then they're simply great, but, served too oft, they agitate the patient's soul and mind. But good roast beef is always fine; I place it in this frame of mine, and hate to pause or stop; and when I've chewed a juicy slice I sound my war whoop once or twice and go and whip a cop.

EUROPEAN POLICEMEN.

Clever In London, "Sloppy" In Paris and Polite In Berlin.

In humor, in urbanity, as in perfect control of his district, the London policeman is the nearest approach to perfection, writes Percival Pollard, who in "Vagabond Journeys" has a word to say of the various policemen of the world. He adds that in looks only our American policemen equal those of London.

To the stranger the policeman seems the politest of all Londoners. Chiefly, however, it is in his control of traffic, awheel and afoot, that he is unrivaled. When you consider the narrowness of the streets you constantly marvel at the easy skill with which he solves his problem.

The Paris policeman never looks anything but "sloppy," and his notion of controlling traffic at crowded street crossings is enough to make the observer shout with laughter. No one minds him, and his attempts to regulate the speed of the Parisian cabby only result in a slanging match. Observation of Parisian street traffic is all that is really necessary to impress you with the belief that in case of need the Paris policeman would always, with much noise and melodrama, arrest the wrong person.

The police of Berlin are vastly better than those of Paris. They do not look as well, according to our notions, as the English "constables," but they are fairly smart. The men are polite, control traffic inexorably and see to it that Berlin is one of the cleanest and most orderly of cities. But as reasoning individuals the Berlin policemen are hardly to be counted at all. When anything happens to you more serious than crossing a congested street or losing your way you are fairly certain of running hard against a city ordinance, mechanically enforced by the man on the beat.

No argument or persuasion prevails. There is the regulation, and here the instrument to enforce it. The human element is entirely absent. Both Italy and France are as to their police more human.

THE GOLD TEST.

Its Use In Diagnosing Diseases of the Brain and Nerves.

Like the weird remedies and tests of medicine in the middle ages are some of the latest means science has devised to detect and classify forms of insanity and brain affections. Salts of gold in solution, drops of spinal fluid, bits of the tissue from the covering of a normal person's brain and various other similar materials are the means employed.

The gold test, for instance, is used to prove definitely the existence of paresis, meningitis and several other forms of nervous diseases, though in practice it is used mostly as corroborative proof rather than the only proof. Solutions of salt of gold of carefully graduated strength are put into test tubes, with the weakest solutions at one end of the row grading up to the strongest at the other end.

Fluid from the spinal column of the person who is being examined is then dropped into the tubes. The presence of certain kinds of brain or nervous trouble is then indicated by the colors produced in some of the tubes. The particular color produced and the strength of the solution that shows the color strongest give the clew to the kind of disease.

Another peculiar test for certain other kinds of brain trouble is to take a drop of blood from the person examined and place in it a prepared solution from a tiny particle of brain covering of a normal person. Epilepsy causes an easily detected reaction on the combined solution, while other brain disturbances are detected by a similar process, using other materials in the same way.—Saturday Evening Post.

Being Lucid.

If you wish to achieve a reputation for originality and distinction try being lucid. There is nothing quite like it: "Permit me to thank you for your lucid exposition of" — it matters not what the subject.

What is it to be lucid? It is to write something which the men who compliments you because you have been lucid about it agrees with. No one who disagrees with you ever called you lucid. No woman ever referred to her husband as a lucid husband. No man ever called his wife a lucid wife.—Life.

FLAVOR OF FOOD.

It Is an Important Factor in Digestion and Good Health.

If it were not for flavor we should not digest our food properly. Epicureanism in eating is the handmaid of good health. Flavor has been called the soul of food. The viands that are most agreeable to our sense of taste, those we enjoy most, are those we are most likely to digest well and from which we are most likely to derive the maximum of nourishment.

A book was devoted to this subject by Henry T. Finck of New York. He called it "Food and Flavor." In a review of it the Scientific American says: "The psychic factor of desire must precede ingestion or results will be unpropitious. To each cent spent for nutriment we add five more for flavor. Flavor, in short, has an appetizing value, a health value, a commercial value.

"The evolution of a discriminating appetite and the education of the cook must go hand in hand. But your glutton is never an epicure. Rational mastication must accompany the highest enjoyment of food, and in this enjoyment lie perfect assimilation and health. It is flavor that stimulates the flow of the digestive juices; it is the digestive juices that prepare the food for the extraction of nutriment."

The Professor Was Wrong.

Several decades ago a learned professor delivered a course of lectures, in one of which he proved to his own satisfaction that the Atlantic ocean could never be crossed by steam. Steam power had been discovered and applied on land, but he was confident it could never be applied to the ocean. Under the peculiar conditions of the heaving tides, the danger of storms, the rolling of the tide, and so forth you could never apply steam to navigation across the Atlantic. The book in which that lecture was published was on the first steamer that crossed the Atlantic. The captain took it along as a sort of curiosity. That book did not have a very large sale, but there has been quite a run of steamers ever since, and the professor ceased to argue that steam could not be utilized on the ocean.—Christian Herald.

Salting One's Smoke.

The strangest way of taking his salt was probably Dr. Parr's. Telfourd records that he used to fill his pipe half with the finest tobacco and half with salt. After that it is not very surprising to learn that he smoked "with a philosophical calmness." On one occasion when the two met Charles Lamb's furious smoking of the strongest tobacco filled Dr. Parr with astonishment. Gently laying down his pipe, he inquired how Lamb had arrived at his power of smoking at such a rate. "I toiled after it, sir, as some men toil after virtue," was Lamb's reply.—London Graphic.

Strychnine.

Strychnine is one of the most powerful vegetable poisons known, but it has very odd effects. Up to about one thirty-second of a grain it is often used in medicine as a stimulant. Very little more is required to bring on that peculiar state known as "tetanus," in which the muscles lock themselves up into such hard masses that they are as rigid as bone. An overdose, however, has been known in at least one instance to cure itself.—Exchange.

How He Felt.

"You act as though you thought yourself superior to the government."

"Well," replied the genial egotist, "I do feel slightly superior. As a taxpayer when I owe the government anything I pay. When the government owes me anything it does as it likes about the matter."—Washington Star.

Never say die. Expire sounds more classy.

DOFFING THE HAT

It Was Once a Sign of Abject Subservience to a Superior

We consider a man a gentleman who takes off his hat to a lady. At least the act is thought to be gentlemanly polite. The origin of this custom, like so many other customs common among so-called civilized peoples, go back to primitive times.

When a person was made captive his conqueror stripped him of his weapons and clothing and left him without anything he could call his own. The captive was thus made a slave, his lack of clothing being evidence of his subjugation. We need only to look at the sculptures of the Assyrians to see the truth of this fact. And in Isaiah xx. 2-4, we find the following statement: "And the Lord said, like as my servant Isaiah hath walked naked and barefoot three years for a sign, so shall the King of Assyria lead away the Egyptians prisoners and the Ethiopians captives, young and old, naked and barefoot."

The first step then, in tracing the origin of taking off the hat, is the surrender of the clothing among primitive and ancient peoples as a mark of submission. The next step is the uncovering of the body as a mark of reverence. There are all degrees of uncovering, though often only the most valuable parts of the clothing are taken off in the presence of superiors.

Captain Cook tells us that during his stay at Tahiti two men came on board, and, as a sign of respect, took off the greater part of their clothing and put it on Cook and his friend. In Abyssinia, Spencer tells us, it was the custom for inferiors to bare their bodies down to the girdle before superiors. But in the presence of equals only a corner of the tunic was removed so as to bare the shoulder. This baring of the shoulder, especially throughout the Gold Coast, is a custom as common as taking off the hat with us. Uncloaking in Spain is similar in origin. In Africa the men bare their shoulders and doff their caps to superiors, thus joining two customs in one.

It must be remembered that this act of uncovering the body was ceremonial in nature and used to show reverence to a superior. Then came the use of the ceremonial to propitiate the dead. We can see a remnant of this most any time. At funerals and in our graveyards men take off their hats on entering churches and before images of Christ and the Madonna.

In times of chivalry men raised their hats to ladies to show reverence. But this was only superficial in meaning. A knight would ride down a poor peasant woman carrying a large burden and never think of helping her—least of all would he think of taking off his hat to her. However, if he heard of some beautiful damsel of his own class in the slightest danger, imaginary or real, he would go to her and, hat in hand, kneel and dedicate himself to her service.

To-day much the same thing occurs. Ordinarily a gay youth forgets to take off his hat to his mother, yet he shows this deference to his "best girl." After all it is only form, and politeness should go deeper than this. However, the form persists, and it is of some historical interest to remember that it is a remnant of the primitive stripping of a captive by which process was expressed the fact that he yielded up all he had. Taking off the hat to a wealthy girl means occasionally not only the yielding up of all you have, but the getting of all she has. Ceremony is often nothing but a hard calculation in regard to personal results, especially where self-aggrandizement is the ultimate aim of the polished individual.

The Rich Turkish Beggar.

Beggars are never suppressed in Turkey. The story is told (and they say it is true) about a lady who by mistake gave a beggar of Constantinople a gold piece. The man had left his post when she returned, but one of his colleagues told her where he "resided." It was a fine house, and at the door was a servant, who politely informed the lady that "my master is dressing. He will be down soon." And then the well groomed beggar, dressed for dinner, appeared and gladly returned the gold piece, exclaiming in the meanwhile that such mistakes were highly embarrassing.

KIDNEY TROUBLE AFFECTED HIS SPINE

Suffered For Forty Years Until He Used "Fruit-a-tives"

BRONTE, ONT., OCT. 31st. 1913.

"For about forty years, I was troubled with Lame Back brought on by Kidney and Bladder Trouble. I was never confined to my bed with the trouble, but it affected my spine and I had to rest for a time. I took advertised remedies which never did me any good. Then I saw "Fruit-a-tives" advertised and decided to try them. They did me more good than any other remedy.

My son suffered from the same trouble and frequently had to leave off working, but "Fruit-a-tives" remedied it for him. I would strongly advise anyone suffering from Kidney and Bladder Trouble to use "Fruit-a-tives".

The Whole Business.

A very young housekeeper went to market to purchase a spring chicken. After selecting one and inquiring the price she said:

"Isn't three shillings rather high? The poulterer in our road only charged me 2s. 9d. the other day."

"With the feet on?" asked the salesman.

"No, I believe, now you mention it, the feet were cut off," she replied, with some hesitation.

"I thought so," said the man at the stall. "When we sell a fowl here, ma'am, we sell it feet and all."—London Telegraph.

French Indo-China.

French Indo-China consists of the colony of Cochin China, a French possession, the five protectorates of Tonkin, Anam, Cambodia, Loas and Luang Probang, the territory around Battambang, which was ceded by Siam in 1907 and which is administered by the Indo-China Government as a quasi protectorate, and the territory of Quantcheouan, which is leased from China.

Reincarnated.

The school as a civic center having become overcrowded, it occurred to some bright mind to advocate the use of the home as a civic center.

"The home is vacant so large a part of the day that it would seem that the highest efficiency would put it to some use other than as a possible place to sleep in after midnight."

This was immediately done, and the home began to come back. Thereupon the leading sociological writer wrote an article in which he proved again to the satisfaction of all that everything has a use.—Life.

His Thirst.

Husband—May, just send up some filtered water. Wife—Which was it last night, "Detained at the office" or "A friend at the club?" Husband—Why? Wife—Because I didn't know whether you wanted a tumbler or a pailful.—London Opinion.

Improving Slowly.

"How is your cousin getting on, Jane?"

"Nicely, thank you, ma'am, but he had an awful time. They performed three autopsies on him at the hospital before he began to get better."—Baltimore American.

Didn't Agree With Him.

IN DAYS AGONE

Dr. Robins Recalls His Early Years in the Teaching Profession

Dr. L. S. Robins, ex-principal of McGill Normal School, Montreal, is one of the veteran educationists of Canada, being now well over eighty years of age. In addressing the graduating class of the Macdonald School for Teachers at Ste. Anne de Bellevue, he spoke of the marked advances made in education in both Quebec and Ontario since he first entered educational work over sixty years ago.

"I wish I could be starting in with you in the work which lies before you in the Province of Quebec," he said to the graduates; "for I know your lines will be cast in much more pleasant places than were mine when I entered the teaching profession in what were then the backwoods of Ontario. Let me tell you about the examination which I passed for my first teachers' diploma, back in 1848. I will report it literally, accurately and entirely. The examiner was a county school superintendent.

"'Do you know any arithmetic?' was the first question.

"'Yes, a little,' I answered.

"'What do you know of it?' he continued.

"'Pretty much all of it,' I replied confidently. The superintendent did not seem anxious to pursue that line further, for his next query was:

"'Know any grammar?'

"Again my answer was: 'Yes, a little.'

"'Then parse "Will you go?"' was his command. I parsed 'Will you go?'

"'Have you got a school?' was the last question.

"'I have,' I answered; 'on the fourth concession of the Township of Dummer.'

"Thereupon my inquisitor wrote me my diploma on a sheet of notepaper. I think I have it yet somewhere. Passing that examination was easy compared to some of my subsequent experiences, for inside of six months I was obliged to lick one of my pupils who was older, taller and heavier than I was. But I licked him all right, and after that I was boss of my school."

Dr. Robins, in paying a tribute to the pioneers of education in Canada, now gathered to their rest, said: "There have been great and strong men engaged in the work which you are entering upon. One of my own pupils—dead now and almost forgotten—actually walked across Canada to devote himself to the service of education on the Pacific coast, in the days when there were no railways, and the only means of getting from Winnipeg to British Columbia was to hit the long trail across the prairies."—Toronto Saturday Night.

FRENCH FORCES HAVE PASSED SARRE VALLEY

Following Upon the Occupation of the Pass of Saale and the Battle of Blamont Operations Are Now Developing at Angle of Alsace and Lorraine Boundaries—Troops Near Scarburg.

PARIS, Aug. 18.—The most important news to-day comes from the east. It is a sequence of the occupation of the Pass of Saale, which has been known for several days, and of the fighting at Blamont, which was announced Sunday. Operations are now developing at the angle of the frontier where Alsace and Lorraine join.

Saale is at the entrance of the valley of the Bruche, which runs toward Strassburg, and in which there is a railway. From this point on Friday the French troops gained the heights of Mount Donon, which dominates the valley and also commands the valley of the Sarre. The following day, Saturday, the French forced an entrance into the valley of the Sarre and occupied the heights on the other side.

The French are already at Schirmeck. Below Mount Donon, in the valley of the Sarre, their front is about five kilometers from the important city of Saarburg. Farther west they are at Marsal, near Dieus.

They are also descending the high valleys of Alsace, between the Bruche and the Sarre.

At the further end of the Donon Mountains the French have before them the fort of Mutzig, the first covering fortification of Strassburg. At the left is a non-fortified passage, twenty kilometers wide, between Donon and the Des Roillieses Canal. This is one of the two gates of Lorraine, the other lying between a marshy region farther west and the defences of Metz.

At the other end of the line, in Belgium, the French have triumphed likewise in a less considerable but no less brilliant, combat. It took place about the city of Dinant, on the Meuse where ten thousand German cavalrymen were in action.

The interruption of operations to the north of Namur coincident with this attack by Germans to the south indicates, perhaps, a change of objective on the part of the enemy. In that case the great turning movement to the north would be replaced by a less extended movement in closer connection with the army that is occupying Luxemburg.

British troops are now operating with the French in the invasion of Alsace, according to despatches.

As a cure for love the lack of faith beats the faith cure.

BELGIAN GOVERNMENT IS LEAVING FOR ANTWERP

Steady Advance of Germans is Making Capital Untenable For Government Officials—Correspondent Who Made His Way Into German Lines Brings Back Interesting Information.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 18—The Belgian Government is leaving at once for Antwerp, the German advance having rendered Brussels untenable as the seat of Government.

The fact that the authorities have decided to quit this city shows that the Germans have advanced somewhat at least. Brussels may soon be occupied by the invaders.

For the past two days the Germans have been menacing the left of the allies with the plan of driving it back from the defence of Brussels. They apparently have succeeded.

One of the last despatches out of Brussels admitted that a German cavalry force had advanced as far as Wavre, 13 miles from the Belgian capital, but had been repulsed after a skirmish which was declared to have been unimportant. The Belgian War Office declared that Brussels had not been in danger, but this apparently was not true.

Midway between Brussels and Antwerp, Belgium's important port, is the city of Mechlin. To the west of Brussels is Louvain, the reported location of the Belgian army headquarters. A German advance midway between Brussels and Louvain northward, in the direction of Antwerp, would not be a surprising development in view of the news that the Belgian Government is quitting Brussels.

It is expected that the Legations will follow the Government to Antwerp, but the French Minister will remain here, sending the Counsellor to Antwerp to keep in touch with the Belgian Government.

The Soir says that according to news which arrived Monday afternoon, which is confirmed by the War Office, the Belgian infantry, in conjunction with the French cavalry, have brilliantly repulsed a German attack. The location of the engagement is not mentioned.

A special correspondent, who for several days has been in the German lines in Belgium, and whose identity, for obvious reasons is not revealed, says that the Germans are bringing up from Luxemburg to the most northern limits of Belgium an incomprehensible number of men, artillery, horses and supplies.

The spirit of the men, however, may be expressed in the words of a German cavalry private, as follows:

"Our officers have told us that we must march until the whistle tells us to stop. They have told us to take a thousand shots to kill one man; so we are not afraid. We can afford to lose a million where the enemy lose thousands. We must make the enemy halt, or, at least, hesitate."

The Germans are the only Europeans who have been vigorously applying the caste system of government. They are able properly to drill enormous masses. Every German is prepared, and is on the march until victorious, killed, or ordered to halt. The Germans' officers and men do not seem to be men who practice barbarities, as already charged, but one cannot tell what they might do when blood runs red after a battle.

In reviewing he situation so far a German officer said:

"We took Liege in a week, when we thought it would take three months, without bringing our heavy siege artillery into action. We have invaded Belgium until we are within yards of the capital itself. We have exposed outside the town hall of Strassburg, in Alsace, guns which we have captured from the much-vaunted artillery of France. The masses of German troops are intelligently directed by those who represent the military and imperial spirit of the German Empire, and they are bound to overcome the badly united and mixed peoples who compose the troops of those called the allies."

Germany undoubtedly is counting on the slowness of Russia in making her war preparations, and believes that Russia will only be in a position to menace the fatherland when the latter has crushed the enemies in the west.

CORRESPONDENTS NOT ALLOWED TO ACCOMPANY ARMY

LONDON, Aug. 18.—The British Army Council has decided not to allow any war correspondents to accompany the expeditionary force for the present. Some passes had been issued, but these were revoked.

In a letter announcing its decision, the council says that the French army officials have also decided not to allow any correspondents to accompany their forces.

It is understood that correspondents will be asked to leave Belgium. Some are already returning.

VICTORIES ARE CLAIMED BY RUSSIA

War Office Announces Successful Engagements With Austrians

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 18.—The Russian War Office yesterday issued an official communication giving information as to the recent military movements on the frontier between Austrian Galicia and Russian Poland. It says:—

"The defensive operations and the movements of reconnoitering detachments of the Russian army on the frontier of Galicia between Aug. 13 and 17 led to a series of attacks by cavalry supported by infantry and artillery.

"In the Provinces of Piotrkoff and Kielce the Austrian cavalry occupied a front of over fifty miles in length, extending along a line from Tchenstockova through Andrejew to Sandomir. The cavalry was supported by the infantry and the artillery.

"On Aug. 14 Austrian advance guards penetrated a short distance into Russian territory. It is reported that this offensive movement was checked by the Russian troops.

"An Austrian attempt to advance from Andrejew toward Kielce failed on Aug. 15, when the Russian troops, by a series of brilliant cavalry attacks, succeeded in dislodging the enemy from Kielce, and also occupied a town in the Tomaschoff district.

"The Russian cavalry cut up the Austrian advance guard and invaded the frontiers of Austrian Galicia, penetrating a distance of eighty-sewen miles.

"Near Tomaschoff Russian cavalry inflicted serious losses on the 11th Austrian Dragoon Regiment in a brilliant sabre engagement.

"Russian cavalry is in close contact with the enemy everywhere."

GERMAN POLES RISING.

Report In Rome Says Revolution Is In Prospect.

ROME, Aug. 18.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of the newspaper Messaggero, which usually is a well-informed organ, telegraphs that there are symptoms of a general insurrection in Prussian Poland.

The Poles, as shown in the news from St. Petersburg, Paris and London, are manifesting unbounded joy over the promise of the Czar of Russia to establish a new Poland on condition that the Poles, for their part, support Russia loyally in the present war. The Russian Emperor undertakes to confer complete autonomy on this new Poland. There will be freedom of language and religion.

The Russian appeal has gone forth to the Poles of Austria and Germany, and the information received by The Messaggero from St. Petersburg shows that they have grasped the opportunity so greatly fraught with hope for the future.

PRIESTS PRECEDE RUSSIAN FORCES

LONDON, Aug. 18.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Daily Standard says that the Russian authorities are using two mighty forces to stimulate the zeal for war among the people—religious fervor and racial solidarity.

The marching Russian troops are preceded by a bearded and robed priest of the orthodox church, carrying the cross. Bands play alternately religious music and barbaric airs.

"It is not merely war," adds the correspondent, "it is a holy crusade, and also a crusade in accordance with the pan-Slavonic ideal."

Honey Crop Report

Bee-keepers' Association Decide on Prices for Season's Output.

The Crop Report Committee of the Ontario Beekeepers' Association met on Friday, July 31st. Five hundred and fifteen members reported from all parts of Ontario, showing an average of 16 pounds per colony. As the average in 1913 was nearly 100 pounds per colony, it will be seen that the honey crop this year is almost a total failure except in a few of the counties. There is, however, in the hands of beekeepers and dealers quite a quantity of last year's honey, which, if it has been properly cared for, should be in good condition for this year's use.

The prices recommended by the committee are as follows:—

No. 1—Light extracted, wholesale, 11c to 12c per pound.

No. 1—Light extracted, retail, 14c to 15c a pound.

No. 1—Comb, wholesale, $2.25 to $3.00 per dozen.

No. 2—Comb, wholesale, $1.50 to $2.00 per dozen.

These prices are f.o.b. in 60-pound 10-pound and 5-pound tins, the former being net weight, with the tin thrown in, the two latter being gross weight. The difference in time and trouble of filling the small tins about equalizes the price. In selling to the wholesale merchant the lowest wholesale price should be asked; while the retail grocer should pay the highest wholesale price. The retail price to the consumer might vary according to the quantity he takes in any one purchase and whether he supplies his own package.

Honey should always be kept in sealed packages in a dry room, preferably warm. Where storage conditions have not been perfect, the best of honey will often have a sour odor on opening the can after several months storing. This and the slightly acid taste which often accompanies it may be removed by placing the can in a vessel of water which is kept hot but not allowed to boil, for about twelve hours. Old honey which has been thoroughly heated and liquefied in this way should be practically good as new, provided it is never allowed to reach a temperature too hat to bear the ham.—Morley Pettit, Sec.-Treas., O.B.K.A., Guelph.

COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO FORMULATE PLAN OF GENERAL ASSISTANCE

Mayor Intimates That City Council Will Look Into Matter of Insuring the Volunteers—Largely Attended Public Meeting, Expresses Appreciation of the Work Being Accomplished by the Women

The Council Chamber proved far to small to afford accommodation for the citizens of Peterboro who were willing to take an active part in assisting the British Empire in her present struggles and as a result a great number who were on hand at the meeting called last night had to stand in the door way and halls. It is seldom that such a patriotic gathering is found and as nearly every speaker stated, it was delightful to hear almost every sentence uttered, marked with loyalty to England.

The meeting, as had been previously stated was called for the purpose of arriving at some scheme by which the city might assist the British Empire. His Worship, Mayor Buller, who presided, opened with a few introductory remarks referred to the grand motive behind the movement and as the ladies of the city had gone ahead with some plan, he wished their representatives would enlightened the meeting as to what aim they had in view.

Mrs Kendry informed the meeting that the women of Peterboro, assisted by the Women's Council, Daughters of the Empire and other organizations are endeavoring to raise a fund which will go toward the hospital ship and an emergency fund. They hoped to realize $1,000 for the ship so that the women of Peterboro would do their part in expressing the loyalty of the Women of Canada. Miss Peck and Miss A. Weir, the other ladies present, also spoke a few word along the same line.

Dependents Need Aid.

Dr. Cameron spoke on the necessity of looking after the dependents of the volunteers and thought that if a fund were raised, a portion of it would be left for that purpose and another portion go to the general poor of the city who were made so by the war. The Mayor expressed himself as being highly in sympathy with the idea of havinga fund to assist the general poor of the city and also intimated that it was the intention of the city council to look into the matter of insuring the lives of the volunteers.

Very Rev. Dean McColl was requested to express his views and stated that he was in sympathy with having a general fund for the poor of the city, for it will be needed according to general outlook which is exceedingly dark. He claimed he would like to see such a fund in the hands of a committee and was firmly convinced that if the citizens were asked to contribute all would do their best, according to their means.

After considerable discussion during which G. A. Gillespie, M.L.A., V. Eastwood, R. J. Soden, Rev. R. G. Peever, Mr. Worth, Rev. Canon Davidson, Colonel Clegg, H. Navey and A. E. Austin addressed the meeting, D. O'Connell moved that a committee be appointed who will hold a meeting and decide upon some definite plan and then report back to another meeting of citizens. In case of emergencies springing up at once, this committee should deal with them. G. A. Gillespie seconded this motion and it carried unanimously. The following composed the committee: all the Clergymen in the city, the Warden of the County, Adjutant McElhiney, Judge Huycke, Mayor Buller and members of the Council, Messrs. J. H. Burnham, M.P., G. A. Gillespie, M.L.A., D. O'Connell, T. F. Matthews, R. J. Soden, and H. Navey and Mrs. Kendry, Miss Weir and Miss Peck.

Acting on the advice of Canon Davidson, Alderman Stratton brought up the following motion which would tend to assist the ladies, "That this meeting of the citizens of Peterboro endorse the work being done by the women of Peterboro, ably assisted by the Women's Council, Daughters of the Empire and other organizations, in raising funds for the dependents of those going to the war and for the hospital ship, and trust the amount received will far exceed the expected one thousand dollars." This motion was seconded by A. E. Austin and carried amid great enthusiasm.

The meeting then adjourned while the committee held a short meeting in the Board Room. On motion of Mr. D. O'Connell and G. A. Gillespie it was decided to call a meeting of the committee for Wednesday evening at eight o'clock int he Council Chamber and that the Women's Council and Daughters of the Empire have two representatives and the Trades and Labor Council three representatives.

PARLIAMENT OPENED EMERGENCY SESSION

All Formalities Are Dispensed With—Government Will Ask For Wide Powers.

OTTAWA, Aug. 18.—The fourth session of the present Parliament will be opened this afternoon by H. R. H. the Governor-General. Their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Connaught and the Princess Patricia will occupy seats near the throne but the floor of the Senate will not be surrendered as usual to the wives and daughters of Senators and members. The Senators will occupy their seats and the desks will not be removed for the opening ceremonial as it is intended to proceed at once with the work of the session. On this account a number of social functions which usually accompany the opening of Parliament, including the drawing room and state dinner, will be dispensed with.

The House of Commons, however, will not get down to business as quickly as had been anticipated. It was stated at the Prime Minister's office yesterday afternoon that the debate upon the address in reply to the speech from the throne would not be proceeded with until to-morrow. When the Commons return from hearing the speech from the throne this afternoon, Sir Robert Borden will lay upon the table of the House, copies of all orders in council and other documents respecting the war, including the correspondence with the Imperial Government and then move that the vice-regal speech be taken into consideration on the following day.

How long the debate on the address may continue will depend to some extent upon how much of the Government's legislative program is forecast in the Premier's speech. Should his statement to the House be a general one, not anticipating the specific proposals of the Government, the debate is not likely to be prolonged.

Some discussion, however, may be expected when the financial proposals of the Government come before the House for discussion. The Government, it is understood, will ask for wide powers on many subjects, including authority to regulate the prices of all food products and some of the Liberal members are contending that Parliament should be kept pretty constantly in session during the war, instead of being asked to delegate extraordinary powers to the Government. The best of good feeling seems to prevail among the members now here, party lines being for the time obliterated.

Col. Sam Hughes issued a statement last night expressing the hope "that the public would recognize the urgent importance of thoroughly guarding and protecting at the present time all stores of arms, ammunition and other munitions of war and the necessity of placing a sufficient guard for that purpose at all points where attack might be apprehended."

The horse dealers combine has been broken. Several carloads of horses for artillery purposes arrived in Ottawa yesterday and prices dropped at once to $140. The best prices given were $165.

The Militia Department found itself up against a combine on the part of many farmers and dealers, and the prices demanded for horses ranged all the way to $450. Toronto was the worst centre of the combine.

The Department is now in a position to control the situation, and will not pay over a certain figure, but the action of the Ontario farmers and horse dealers has delayed mobilization of the artillery and rendered the work more difficult. The difficulties, however, are now over.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

WHERE WAS THE BAND?

Editor Review,

In view of the fact that the 24th Field Battery's gallant overseas' contingent was allowed to march to the depot last night without music, I would ask in the name of common decency, supposing feelings of loyalty to the Empire and to comrades in another branch of the service were absent, why the 57th Regiment Band did not lead the parade? The writer would certainly be averse to believing that any of the members of this organization were pro-German, but in times of trouble such as the present the public are apt to be, possibly, super-critical. In any event, it is up to the 57th Band to see that they are not again side-tracked and put in the unenviable position they occupied last night. It may be claimed that the Band was not ordered on parade. This excuse will not suit the public in its present mood. In the absence of orders, the impulsive patriotism that caused this same organization to turn out night after night during the Boer war, in snow storms and all kinds of rough weather, must prevail, or the public will demand an organization that will fill the bil—and what is more, they will get one.

Yours truly,
EX-NON-COM.

HOW TO TELL THE AGE OF HENS AND PIGEONS

There has been a great development in late years in the Canadian poultry industry. This development has been brought about by many factors, chief among which are the untiring and highly successful efforts of breeders, the experimental work carried on at the various poultry plants of the Dominion and Provincial Experimental Farms and Agricultural Colleges; the information given out by these institutions; the poultry exhibits, in which the people of Canada are now taking a great interest, and, last, but not least, the profits of the industry, little thought of in the past, but now well recognized and appreciated. Production is increasing at an extraordinary rate, while the quality of the product shows wonderful improvement. The value of the flock depends upon the production of the birds selected, but the productiveness of any bird decreases after a certain age is reached.

It is very important, therefore, that the breeder be able to tell with some degree of certainty the age of the fowls which he desires to retain or purchase for breeding purposes, otherwise he will be exposed to the risk of having individuals that are past their prime and that do not pay for their keep.

Record books have been established for horses, cattle and many other animals, where information pertaining to pedigree, age, etc., are kept for reference, but it has remained for Victor Fortier, Assistant Dominion Poultry Husbandman, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, after much personal observation and study, to publish a method whereby the age of hens can be accurately estimated. This information, which is meant especially for the breeder and the judges, has been published under the direction of the Hon. Martin Burrell, in a profusely illustrated bulletin, which is No 16, Second Series of the Central Experimental Farm. Copies will be mailed to those who apply for them to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

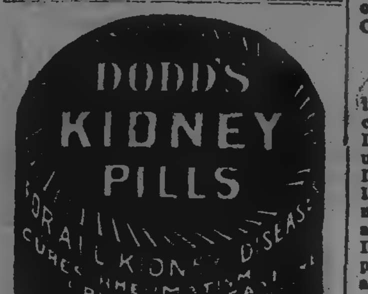
STORY OF A STACK

Two stacks, to be exact. When the Orford Copper Co. was building its refinery at Bayonne, N. J., the residents of Staten Island were greatly exercised over the prospective smoke-nuisance. Litigation was threatened, but Col. Robt. M. Thompson, president of the company, stepped in, and said to the people of Staten Island:

"It is not necessary to take this matter to the courts. You and I are neighbors, and as such and good citizens, are bound to respect each others' rights. Whatever is necessary or whatever you wish done to protect you against the smoke from my furnaces, I will cheerfully perform. I will build my twin stacks so high that not the slightest breath from them shall pollute your atmosphere. I will even build them with a foot for every day in the year."

Accordingly the chimneys were designed for a height of 365 feet and to cost, $150,000. A week before they were completed a member of Colonel Thompson's family called his attention one night at the dinner table to the fact that it was leap year and that the year therefore had 366 days. Col. Thompson immediately wired to his engineers: "Add another foot to the stacks."

The twin stacks still stand, and one can see them any clear night, black, twin pillars against the sunset sky, with flaunting smoke banners that swirl 300 feet above the heads of the placated and satisfied Staten Islanders. — Wall Street Journal.



NURSED A HOT TEMPER.

Something Had to Give Way When William Morris Broke Loose.

Though explosive tempers may not be admirable and temperamental explosions are not always harmlessly expended, they are always preferable to soreness, sullenness, brooding resentment or cold anger. Arthur Compton-Rickett in his study of William Morris—that "jolly vivid man," as he terms him—relates several new instances of Morris' violent thunderclaps of temper and swiftly ensuing sunniness and sweetness.

Once while he was painting he was called from the room, and presently his startled model heard him furiously anathematizing some one outside whom he dismissed or ejected and then returned a moment later still boiling with wrath. He could not resume his work, but made wild dashes about the room, growling and muttering, until at last in a culminating access of rage he took a flying kick at the door and with a vast crashing and splintering smashed in a panel. It was too much for his model's nerves, and he started to flee, but at that moment Morris, with his ire entirely gone now that the explosion was over, turned with a beaming smile, and assured him genially:

"It's all right, it's all right, but something had to give way!"

REED'S WITTY THRUST.

It Silenced For the Time the "Great Objector," Holman.

There are many stories of the caustic wit of Thomas B. Reed, the famous speaker of the house of representatives. One of his most amusing thrusts was delivered at William S. Holman, a member of congress from Indiana. It was perhaps the keenest witticism ever uttered in debate on the floor of the house.

Holman was a constant objector to the expenditure of money by congress and had honestly earned the title of "Watchdog of the Treasury." One day, when the committee was perfunctorily putting through a number of bills for the erection of government buildings in various cities, Holman was constantly on his feet, objecting to their consideration. But when Indiana was reached and the committee began to propose appropriations for buildings in the towns of that state Holman's objections came with much less spirit and finally ceased altogether. When at length a bill was offered that carried a generous appropriation for a building in Holman's own town, he rose and expressed hearty approval. Hardly had he taken his seat when Mr. Reed was on his feet. "Mr. Speaker!" he shouted; and then, in gently sentimental tones, he recited Byron's familiar lines:

'Tis sweet to hear the watchdog's honest bark
Bay deep mouthed welcome as we draw near home!

And the "great objector" forgot to object any more that day!—Youth's Companion.

To Develop Copper Mines.

Extensive development operations in connection with the promising copper-bearing deposits at Notre Dame Bay, Newfoundland, are to be undertaken shortly. Prof. Wyndham Dunstan, the director of the Imperial Institute, will arrive in the Colony next month to investigate its mineral possibilities. The Crown Lands Department is already engaged in preparations for facilitating his examination of the various mineral areas.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 17.—There were no new developments in the local grain today, business being rather quiet in all lines, but the tone of the market was firm on account of the somewhat limited supplies available on spot. There is a good demand for millfeed, offerings of which are limited. In baled hay, the feeling is strong under a good demand, and small spot supplies. The butter market was rather quiet today, and prices at the auction sale were ⅛c to ¼c per pound lower than Friday last, finest creamery selling at 27⅝c.

HUSBAND AND BABE KILLED.

Woman Arrives In Rennes With Terrible Story of Brutality.

LONDON, Aug. 18.—A Reuter despatch from Rennes, France, says:—

"Mme. Guillon, a wealthy resident of Combourg, a town a short distance southeast of St. Malo, has arrived here, and told how her husband and baby were killed by angry mobs in Hanover, Germany. The woman, who was terribly grief-stricken, said:

"We were expelled on Aug. 2 from Kolberg (a town of Prussia, in Pomerania), and tried to reach France through Switzerland. But we were turned back before we reached the German frontier, and compelled to retrace our steps and go by way of Holland.

"'On arriving in Hanover my husband and myself were arrested as spies and stoned by a mob, despite the protective efforts of the police. My husband, unfortunately, lost his self-control and cried, "Long live France" and "Long Live England," whereupon he at once was shot.

"'Two friends who tried to intervene also were killed. Our baby, which wore a cap bearing the word "France," was torn away from me and dashed to the ground and killed.

"'My brother-in-law was thrown into prison at Bentheim. I escaped, and, after various adventures, succeeded in reaching Holland'."

Scrupulous.

An old negro man was on a jury in a Missouri town. It was a case of particularly atrocious murder and there seemed to be no room for doubt as to the guilt of the accused. But the old negro obstinately refused to vote for conviction, though the eleven other jurymen agreed at once. News of the "hanging" of the jury came to the judge. He called the refractory juror in and asked him his reason for holding out against a verdict of guilty.

"I don' b'lieve in cap'tal punishment, jedge," was the answer.

"And why don't you believe in it, Mose?" inquired the court.

"Well, jedge, it's this a-way; my old Mars John allus taught me yer oughtn't fer ter kill nothin' what wusn't fit'n to eat."—New York Post.

THE LANGUAGE OF FLOWERS.

Its Eloquence Dawns Upon a Fiance With Startling Suddenness.

"My dear Clarice," I said, "I like being engaged—to you (no, I've never been engaged before), but I don't see the sense of getting married. Even the state seems to deride the idea of our union."

"What do you mean?" said Clarice. "I'm almost alarmed. Have they discovered that you suffered from toothache as a boy?"

"It isn't," I said, "a question of eugenics. I was at Somerset house today getting a copy of my birth certificate, and"—

"They surely didn't say anything about our engagement at Somerset house. I didn't suppose they even knew of it," said Clarice.

"Ill news travels apace," I said. "But that by the way. I was about to say that red is a noble color. A day on which a great event occurs is called 'a red letter day.' Black, on the other hand, may mean nothing, or it may denote sadness. As I was saying, red is a color used for indicating notable events. The state considers a birth is a notable event. Birth certificates are printed in red."

"And death certificates," said Clarice, "in black, I suppose?"

"Yes," I said, "a delicate hint that the state feels sad."

"And marriage certificates?" asked Clarice.

"Ah," I said, "that's the strange thing. Nothing may be implied really, but it is significant that they print them in"—

"Purple?" said Clarice eagerly.

"Verdant green," I said.—Punch.

Courage, Canada

CANADA is favored among the nations. We have peace within our own borders. We have learned the lessons taught by lean times, and so are prepared to face the days ahead. Our farmers are prospering by reason of the present conditions—and when agriculture flourishes, the business outlook is one of good hope and good cheer.

Some Canadian industries and mercantile enterprises must suffer because of the partial suspension of trans-oceanic trade. But more industries will be stimulated to supply our home demand, which MUST be satisfied. It is a time of business opportunity in Canada.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

THE SPORTING WORLD

COMMENT
As You Like It

This is not United States' year, so far as sports are concerned, and the only success of any importance attained by the athletes from across the line was the winning of the eight at Henley, when Harvard captured the honours. The Americans lost the polo cup, Gunboat Smith lost the white heavyweight honours to Carpentier, and to make the clean-up more impressive the Australians wrested the tennis honours from the Yankees on Saturday. Another American defeat occurred when the English relay team captured the event at Philadelphia early in the summer. To Canada came the quarter-mile sprint honours of the continent, which Butler won a week ago, and also the open championship single skull event, won by Dibble on the same date. Then, again, Jimmy Duffy of Hamilton and Fabre of Montreal ran one, two, in the Boston Marathon, where they shook off the cream of the continent's long distance men.

You cannot win ball games if you do not score runs. Yesterday the Petes lost both games to St. Thomas. In the two encounters the Petes grabbed six hits and no runs while St. Thomas had ten runs and eighteen hits. Belting was belted while Creswell whom the men who should know baseball have not used, held the Saints to seven hits. If the club does not buck up it will be the cellar for us. There is either very much dissension, lack of that trying stuff or the team is just commencing to play to form.

Beans. You have heard of Boston beans, well George Stallings and his Boston Braves have spilled the National League [illegible]. They won two from Cincinnati yesterday and are now just two and one half games behind New York. Rudolph formerly of Toronto won the first game and thereby registered his tenth straight win. Dick is one of the best if not the most reliable hurler in the National League today. He twirled great ball when the Braves were trailing along in last place about two months ago. Charley Herzog's Germans are slipping, slipping, slipping and Garry Herrman will no doubt be casting about for another pilot, but what's de use, Cincinnati may give up all hope of ever getting anything like a real club, until the manager is the manager, etc.

London lost and Ottawa won. The Cockneys were repulsed by the Beaver artillery while Ottawa sent the Red Sox scurrying in all directions under a sharp attack. The results mean that Ottawa creeps closer to th championship. No, not creeps, races like a Jack Rabbit. They are going like the fellow who was running away from a ghost and caught up to a Jack Rabbit. He was a colored gentleman and he said to the Jack Rabbit, "Gwone get out o' de way and let someone run who knows how to run." Some speed. Ottawa has shown that sort for the past month.

THEY PLAYED MARBLES.

One Street Game in Which Lincoln Took a Hand.

An elderly gentleman now residing in Washington tells this story about Abraham Lincoln:

"I was about ten years of age and given violently to the game of marbles. One cold March day my companions and I were playing on the sidewalk before my father's shop when I slipped on a piece of ice and fell, cutting my chin. The other boys seized as many of my marbles as they could and made off. Wild with anger, I started after them, calling them names and threatening to annihilate them, and so on. Suddenly a hand on my collar stopped me, and a deep voice said:

"'We've got enough ill feeling going on in this country these days without you boys catching it!'

"A big man swung me around and wiped my wounded chin and then went on:

"'I saw what they did, son. Have you any agates left? Good! I'll put up three chiny alleys, and we'll see who'll win.'

"He drew from his pocket three marbles.

"'I got them from my boy Tad,' he explained, and then I knew who he was.

"There on the street I played marbles with the president for five minutes and he let me win. Here are the marbles — a precious possession!" — Exchange.

JUST LIKE A MAN.

He May See the Advantages of a Bad Bargain, but Not Like a Woman.

"WELL," said Mrs. Caperton expectantly as her husband entered the room, "how did it look to you?"

"Bully!" cried Caperton enthusiastically. "It's just the place to spend the summer. You'll like it immensely. I know you will. I've engaged accommodations for August with an option on September."

"Is it a nice boarding house?" asked his wife.

"Oh, nice enough," answered Caperton. "The rooms are dinky little things, the windows are small, and the ceilings are low, but"—

"Well, of all things! And you engaged accommodations in such a place?"

"Listen, dearie; I'm not through yet. As I just said, the rooms are small and all that, and I'm told the grub isn't so very good—mostly canned stuff, you know—and they don't keep many cows, so the milk supply is not particularly plentiful when there's a crowd there, but"—

"Are you losing your mind, Jim Caperton?"

"Wait a bit, dearie. Don't be hasty! I'm not through yet. The rooms are small, and the food is not absolutely 'A No. 1,' and they're sort of shy on milk, and it's a good way to the town, and there are not many nice walks, and there's no water near except the well, but those are just minor considerations."

"Just mi"—

"Precisely. Here's the main thing. They've got the finest ballroom and floor I ever saw in my life anywhere, and there's dancing every night and free lessons in all the new steps every morning. Free—just think of that! They keep a fellow there all season just to teach 'em!"

"You big ninny," blurted Mrs. Caperton—"yes, ninny. You know how a place like that fills up. Why didn't you reserve accommodations for July as well as August? Can't you get them on the long distance phone?"—Puck.

Valuable Misinformation.

In the large dining room of the Hotel Marseilles hangs a large equestrian painting representing General Robert E. Lee. It is the mascot of the Hungry club, which has its dinners at monthly intervals at this hotel and was painted by a member of the club.

Recently a lady on the west side gave a bridge party at the hotel in aid of her pet charity. Among the players was a modern Mrs. Malaprop, a typical "climber" with considerably less education than cash. Consequently she was never backward with misinformation on most any subject that came up. During a cessation in the play one of the ladies expressed admiration of the picture and a desire to know whom it represented.

It was Mrs. Malaprop's opportunity.

"That, my dear," she assertively explained, "is General Marseilles, a noted Frenchman, for whom the hotel is named."—New York Times.

The Garden Variety.

A slim chicken who was so thin that she nicked the counter where she leaned against it, trickled up to the hosiery department of a Sixteenth street store and said:

"Cawn you give me a pair of hose that won't bag at the knees?"

Mame shifted her chicle against her back molars, cosed a wise slant over the customer and replied listlessly:

"Not unless yuh take garden hose!" —Judge.

The Way to Unlock.

The red haired office boy was whistling a late popular air, but he didn't carry the tune very well.

"You will break into song occasionally, will you?" remarked his employer.

"Sometimes," answered the auburn haired youth.

"If you'd get the key you wouldn't need to break in," retorted the boss.—National Monthly.

IANS .I. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

MY Dear Mr. President—As the town of Jericho elected you by a majority of seven votes and as it will have much to say whether you get a second term or not, it will be wise for you to post yourself a bit about the people.

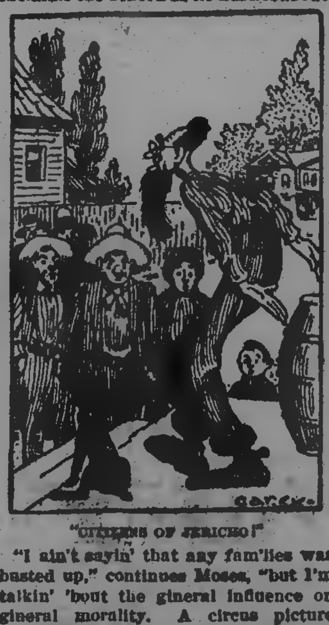
It was Moses Harper who begun it. Some one told him that a circus advertisin' wagon was slowly but surely approachin' the town of Jericho, and he let it be known that he would show up at the postoffice in the evenin' and have sumthin' to say to interest the hull United States. The crowd was holdin' its breath when he showed up. Moses put his spectacles on and said:

"Citizens of Jericho—The tocsin has sounded, and we are here tonight to counsel together in the cause of morality. Last year, as most of you know, Jonas Teachout, whose barn faces the highway a mile outside of this town, allowed the circus wagon to paste up pictures on three sides of the buildin'. How many tickets for the circus he got has nothin' to do with the question. What I'm sayin' is that them pictures, in my solemn belief, shocked the morals of this community far worse than if ten saloons had been opened. The circus wagon is again creepin' along its insidious way, leavin' the blight of destruction in its path, and if sumthin' ain't done Jonas Teachout's barn will ag'in be enrapped in the allurin' colors of vice and degradation."

"It appears to me," said Deacon Spooner, "that a p'int has bin made. I'd like to hear from Silas Lapham."

"I ain't blamin' Jonas 't all," said Silas. "He got twelve deadhead tickets fur the use of his barn, and I don't believe anybody was the wickeder fur it. Did my wife run away from her husband because of them pictures?"

"That's a p'int, I says; it's a p'int!" exclaims the deacon as he hustles about.



"CITIZENS OF JERICHO!"

"I ain't sayin' that any fam'lies was busted up," continues Moses, "but I'm talkin' 'bout the gineral influence on gineral morality. A circus picture suggests lemonade and peanuts and whisky and poker and bein' out late nights. They are like pizen ivy. I hope this meetin' and this community air with me."

"Enos Williams," says the deacon, "you driv by that barn twice a day all summer. How did them pictures affect you?"

"Not much different from a huskin' bee," said Enos. "I didn't feel no feelin's of wickedness stealin' o'er me. I'm thinkin' that hard cider has more gineral influence than circus pictures."

"It's a p'int!" shouted the deacon. "It's a p'int nobody kin git over. Moses, have you got any more arguments?"

"Of what use?" says Moses. "Wasn't Sodom warned? Did Sodom heed it! When vice stalks rampant through every household in Jericho and innocence is driv' to the fields to sit under a blackberry bush and weep, then remember what I have said here tonight."

"I'd like to hear from Lish Billings on this matter," says the deacon.

"It's purty late," says Lish.

"How purty late?"

"Jonas has rented his barn ag'in and got twenty-one tickets, and here's one he give me."

The meeting stood appalled, and then Deacon Spooner says:

"Jonas has got twenty tickets left and that means he has sixteen more to give away outside his fam'ly. Fellow countrymen, do you take it this meetin' has pledged itself?"

"No, no, no!" shouted the crowd.

"Then I'm offerin' the followin' resolution: Resolved, That circus pictures on a barn may or may not affect the moral standard of a community, but we are willin' to chance it this year. All in favor or agin will manifest it in the usual way."

The resolution was carried with a whoop, and the crowd piled out to look for Jonas Teachout and beg fur deadhead tickets, and Moses Harper wasn't one of the last!

City of the Dead.

Close by Canton, China, is the hill called Queen of Heaven mountain, on the lower slopes of which is the famous City of the Dead. Their bodies wait in their coffins sometimes several years before the priests are able to determine an auspicious day for interment.

Stuffed and Won.

"What is the meaning of this?"

"My dear," he murmured, "I got to thinking about women being denied the right of suffrage, and I took a few drinks."

And he got away with it that time.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

HE WANTED A JOB.

The Red Bearded Sailor Who Insisted That He Could Sing.

One day many years ago, when Billy Emerson was in his heyday and all San Francisco was at his feet, he was accosted by a sailor with a long red beard. The sailor said that he could sing and wanted a job.

"I have no opening," said Emerson.

The tar, however, was obdurate and several times during the day importuned Emerson to give him a chance. To get away from his tormentor Emerson was compelled to go to his hotel.

Near the theater was a saloon where the minstrel boys were wont to congregate after a show. It was of the usual kind, with a room in the rear, with a piano and a piano player. Into this room, when the performance was over, went the sailor and asked the man at the piano if he would change places with him and allow him (the sailor) to play in his place. The musician acquiesced.

The performers trooped to the front of the saloon, and soon there came from the rear room the strains of "Sally In Our Alley," sung as only one man in the world could sing it.

"Boys," said Emerson, "that's Tom Dixon."

A rush was made for the rear, where it transpired that the "sailor" was none other than the great minstrel tenor. He had gone to Australia with a company. It disbanded, and he worked his way home as an ordinary seaman, during which time he grew the long red whiskers.

Did he get the job with Emerson? You didn't know Billy or you would never have asked that.—Edward Le Roy Rice in Chicago Journal.

Not American at All.

A certain type of story—that having the sudden conclusion, such as "Willie Jones fired a cannon yesterday; the funeral will be tomorrow"—has been claimed as purely American in its origin. But, as a matter of fact, this kind of story is older than America itself. If you will turn to II Chronicles, xvi, 12, 13, you will find these words:

"And Asa in the thirty-ninth year of his reign was diseased in his feet until his disease was exceeding great, yet in his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians. And Asa slept with his fathers."—Ladies' Home Journal.

OMEMEE PUPIL WINS FINE RING

Had Honor Standing in the Entrance Examinations

Omemee, Aug. 18. — Mr. William Lamb of Peterborough came out in his car on Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. White and Master Willie have returned home from a visit with friends at Bailieboro.

Some of our boys have enlisted for the front and are training with the 57 at Peterborough or with the 45th at Lindsay. Omemee boys will give a good account of themselves in the fight for the honour of the British Empire.

Master Neill Henderson was presented with a handsome finger ring by the principal of the public school for his honour standing at the Junior Entrance examination and the high mark of proficiency on the term examinations. The prize was monogramed and engraved with the significance and date of presentation.

Mr. Hartley Currie of the Bank of Toronto staff has returned to duty, his holidays having been shortened because of the diminution of the general staff, owing to many enlisting for military service.

The Rev. Wm. Johnston of Toronto conducted service in the Presbyterian Church at Mount Pleasant on Sunday afternoon, and at Omemee morning and evening.

Mr. T. W. McLean made a trip to Port Perry on Wednesday.

Mr. Fred Stinson, who left our town about a year ago and has been working in Detroit and Chicago, returned home on Tuesday and is the guest of his mother. Fred looks well and has made good in his new field of work.

Miss Down, of Napanee, has returned to that eastern town after a holiday at the parsonage with her parents, Rev. and Mrs. Down.

Omemee's civic holiday was observed on Friday. Business places were closed up tight, and a large crowd left town, seeking various forms of entertainment. Some went fishing, some journeyed to Lindsay and Peterborough, but the greater number took in the excursion to the Indian village, which was conducted under the auspices of the Methodist Sunday school. The excursion was via the 8.51 a.m. train to Lindsay, thence by boat to the Indian village, and return by the same route. The weather was on its good behavior, and the trip was most delightful. A short stop was made at the Indian village, where a game of baseball was played between the team of that village and our ball-heavers. The Indians proved a superior team and put it over Omemee by a score of 12-2. The excursion was a splendid success and the committee of management is to be congratulated.

The long-delayed rains have arrived, and may help the late crops and the plowing, but to average up the early grain and garden crops is beyond its power for 1914. Some of these crops stand, in their diminutive height and yield as mute evidence of the lack of moisture and of the withering power of too much heat.

Mr. and Mrs. Kidd of Warsaw were the guests of their aunt, Mrs. O. G. Williamson, of King street.

Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Morden were in Peterborough on business one day last week.

The Misses Rutherford and Master Kenneth McMann were in Peterborough on Friday.

Mr. Ira Gardiner of Franklin was in Omemee on Saturday.

SOME FAMOUS PAINTINGS

A Tiny Work of Art and Rosa's Transformed Harpsichord

The smallest painting in the world of distinctive merit was executed on the smooth side of a grain of corn by a Flemish artist. On this limited surface the artist painted in perfect detail a mill, a miller with a sack of grain on his back, a horse and cart and a group of several peasants standing in a road.

The largest picture ever painted is said to be a panorama of the Mississippi river, executed by John Banvard, an artist who died in Watertown, S. D., in 1891. The gigantic canvas was twenty-two feet high and nearly two miles long. It gave a detailed representation of 2,000 miles of the Father of Waters.

The largest of the old masters' canvases is Murillo's "Appearance of the Christ Child to St. Anthony of Padua." The picture is ten feet wide and eighteen feet high.

It is related that a friend called on Salvator Rosa in Florence one day and found him playing on an old harpsichord. The caller asked the artist why he kept such a worthless instrument.

"Why, it is not worth a scudo!" the friend said.

"I will wager," replied Rosa, "that it shall be worth a thousand before you see it again."

A bet was made. Rosa immediately painted a landscape on the lid that not only sold for 1,000 scudi, but was accounted a work of great merit.

The Whale Dance.

One of the most curious customs among the natives of the Eskimos of the Far North is the annual celebration of the whale dance, when the Eskimos select their wives. It is in celebration of the season's catch of whales that the dance is given, and it lasts for twenty-one days.

The great dance circle is prepared, and in the centre the dancers, both male and female, perform the most savage of evolutions and motions to the accompaniment of rhythmless beating of the tomtoms and weird chanting. The dance song tells of the prowess of the hunters and of the history of the tribe. The movements of the women are surprisingly graceful, and they mean to show in their dance that, as daughters of a great people, they are possessed of all the qualities such women should have.

The men execute pantomime scenes of the hunt, and go through all the motions of the kill; they spear the ice bear, slay the walrus and seal, and finally, with extraordinary contortions, vanquish the mighty whale.

SERGEANT IS UPHELD

Militia Officials Say he Did His Duty in Shooting

IN STATE OF WAR

MONTREAL, Aug. 18.—Sergeant George Hooten, of the Heavy Artillery, will not be court-martialled for the shooting and killing of Antoine Nottar, the French reservist, in front of the drill hall on Craig street, Friday afternoon.

A military court of inquiry will be held to-day, but only for the establishment of the facts of the case to be placed on record. Sergt. Hooten, it is said, was only doing his duty as a soldier in shooting, and will in no sense appear as a criminal before a court to-day.

Such is the tenor of the statement issued at militia headquarters yesterday morning by Col. S. J. Denison, officer commanding the fifth division at Montreal, through his general staff officer, Major G. W. Henderson. "The public do not realize," said the latter officer, "that Montreal is in a state of war, just as much as Germany or Belgium or any part of Europe at present. All I can say to the man in the street is, if a soldier in uniform gives you an order, obey it and don't argue."

FIRST EAGLE IS CAPTURED

French Riflemen Send Prized Trophy Home to Paris

PARIS, Aug. 18.—The first Prussian eagle captured by the French during the present war swung yesterday above the entrance to the French War Office in Paris. It is the red and black flag bearing a Prussian eagle in the centre, which was borne into battle by the first lower Alsatian Infantry Regiment, No. 132, of the German army, when it came into action at Sainte Blaise, also known as Sainte Marie Aux Mines and Markirch. The regiment came from the German fortress of Strassburg.

The flag was taken by the 10th battalion of French Rifles, and was brought to Paris Sunday night by Col. Marcel Serret, formerly French military attache at Berlin.

Crowds of Parisians stood hour after hour yesterday staring at the captured standard.

Parade of European Armies Would Extend From Montreal to Vancouver and Back to Calgary

With approximately 20,000,000 men under arms in Europe, representing nations the areas of whose countries exceed one-half of the area of the globe statisticans are figuring out various complex yet interesting conditions which the mobilization of so vast a body of men in time of war necessarily creates. The war now in progress being one of the greatest in history, it follows naturally that in comparison with the data of the past the present computations rise to heights beyond the comprehension of the average person, whose talents for mathematics are, perhaps, directed in other and more useful channels.

After making various calculations, based upon facts and figures connected with the current war, a statistician has figured that if the armies of Germany, France, Austria, Russia, England, Servia, Montenegro, Belgium and Italy, numbering 20,000,000 men should lie at full length, allowing six feet for each man, the line of sleeping soldiers would extend a distance of 120,000,000 feet, or 22,728 miles. Such a line of human beings would almost encircle the globe.

Would Fill 585 Vaterlands

The statistican said further that the transportation of such an army of men across the Atlantic would requires 585 steamships the size of the Vaterland, of the Hamburg-American line. The ordinary man of sound appetite consumes about two and one half pounds of food every day, so that the men under arms in Europe consume 50,000,000 pounds or 25,000 tons daily. To transport this vast food supply, allowing thirty tons for each freight car, a train of 833 cars would be required. Allowing sixty feet for each car, this train would have a length of nearly ten miles and aproximately twenty locomotives would be required to move it.

The clothing for 20,000,000 men, allowing three yeards for each man's uniform, would represent 60,000,000 yards of cloth. Sewed end for end together this strip of cloth would cover a distance of 34,000 miles or one and one-half times the circumference of the earth. The buttons for these uniforms which weigh about 2,000 tons and would require more than one thousand horses to draw the load comfortably.

Each soldier consumes about one and one-half pounds of meat a day, provided it is apportioned on this liberal basis by the various commissary departments of the respective armies. This would mean the consumption of 30,000,000 pounds, or 15,000 tons. To supply this food more than 25,000 cattle would be required. The hides so obtained would, if converted into shoes for this vast army, provide shoes for fewer than 500,000 men for one year and shoes for 20,000,000 would take more cattle than could be housed in the stock yard in Chicago if they were twenty times as big as their present size.

Would Make Vast Parade.

Fewer realize what a tremendous spectacle 20,000,000 men would make if they were to parade," said the statistican. A regiment of 1,000 troops, marching four abreast occupies a space ten feet wide and 1,000 feet in length. Twenty million men marching in the same order would cover a line of march 3,837 miles in length. If the men marched four feet apart this distance would be doubled, and at six feet it would be trebled. Just fancy a parade reaching from Montreal to Vancouver, the head of the line counter-marching and reaching Calgary on its return before the last men are in motion at Montreal.

All parades ever held in the world would be insignificant in size compared with the monster procession.

"Let us speculate further. Suppose these 20,000,000 troops were to encamp in Montreal the whole island would be fairly covered with tents, while the avenues between the lines of tents would be almost impassable because of the stacked rifles—The thousand commissary and accoutrement wagons with their thousands of horses would be forced to seek accommodation elsewhere.

"One round of ammunition of the modern type for 20,000,000 men would cost $600,000. The rifles for such an army represent an outlay of approximately $260,000,000 more. In the course of a hotly contested battle a single soldier will explode fifty rounds of cartridges, so that if 20,000,000men were engaged, the exploded ammunition would represent a cost of from $15,000,000 to $30,000,000. The loss of armaments by breakage, capture or otherwise in battle approximates ten per cent. so that the expense incurred for this item alone in an ordinary engagement of 20,000,000 troops would be approximately $26,000,000.

BRITAIN'S STRENGTH IN HER ARMY

Details of Expeditionary Force Show Three Army Corps in Europe

NEW YORK, Aug. 18. — British papers received here yesterday give details of the composition of the British expeditionary forces under command of Field Marshal Sir John French. The field force is composed of three army corps, each comprising two divisions, and there is an extra cavalry division under the command of Major-Gen. Edmund Allenby.

Each army corps is formed of 24 infantry battalions of about 1,000 men each on a war footing, six cavalry regiments, eight batteries of horse artillery of six guns each, eighteen batteries of field artillery, two Howitzer batteries, and troops of engineers, signal corps, army service corps and other details.

The British field force, therefore, should contain 72 infantry battalions, 18 cavalry regiments, 24 batteries of horse artillery with 144 guns, 54 batteries of field artillery with 324 guns, six Howitzer batteries and the usual details, according to the latest British army list issued at the end of July.

The First Army Corps is commanded by Lieut.-Gen. Sir Douglas Haig, the Third by Maj.-Gen. W. P. Putteney, and the Second was led by Lieut.-Gen. Sir James Grierson, who died suddenly yesterday, and has been replaced by another general.

CARRANZA WILL ENTER CAPITAL

Elaborate Preparations for Reception to New President

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 18. — The banks of the capital which closed last Thursday probably will re-open today. The question of a circulating medium is causing some uneasiness in business circles. At present four distinct issues of bank notes are being passed in ordinary business transactions.

To-morrow has been declared a national holiday, in honor of the entry into the capital of the main body of the Constitutionalist army and Gen. Carranza, the new provisional President. Elaborate preparations have been made for the reception of Gen. Carranza and his forces, and the inauguration of the new regime.

No Liquor After Eight.

MONTREAL, Aug. 18.—With the mayor's approval Chief Campeau of the Montreal police last night notified the hotels and restaurant keepers of this city that they must not sell liquor to soldiers in uniform after eight o'clock at night. This action was taken because of the large number of soldiers in Montreal and the excitement over the war.

THE YOUNG KING OF THE BELGIUMS

His Stand Forced Britain to Intervene

King Albert of Belgium, whose determination to fight Germany rather than allow his country to be used as a base of operations against France, and whose appeal to Great Britain to help him preserve Belgian neutrality and independence was the concluding factor which determined Great Britain to plunge into the European war, is intensely popular with his own subjects.

He has none of the vices of his late uncle, King Leopold, and in fact is in almost every respect the direct opposite of the late monarch.

King Albert is the second son of the Count of Flanders, who was the younger brother of Leopold. Albert's elder brother died, and as Leopold had no son, he became the heir to the throne, as women are debarred under the Belgian laws. On the death of his father several years ago, Albert inherited a large fortune.

The king's full name is Albert Leopold Clement Maria Mainrad. His mother was the Princess Maria of Hohenzollern, and he was born April 8, 1875. His paternal grandmother was a daughter of Louis Philippe, King of France. He is finely educated and is thoroughly unostentatious. Stubbornness of purpose is the chief characteristic he inherited from his Hohenzollern mother.

He is fond of athletics, and because of this has changed a naturally delicate constitution into one much more robust.

At the time of his elder brother's tragic and mysterious death a few years ago his delicate health gave rise to universal fears that he would not live to grow to manhood. He is tall and soldierly looking, well set up, and always had the reputation of being of a far more studious temperament than his brother, Prince Baudouin.

A Mysterious Death.

The latter met his death under circumstances still shrouded with mystery, in a house situated in one of the most fashionable thoroughfares of the Belgian capital, which has remained untenanted ever since, and is pointed out to strangers as the scene of a tragedy which, according to popular rumor, bore many striking analogies to that at Meyerling, which cost the Crown Prince of Austria his life.

The King has been an extensive traveler. He has visited every country in Europe, and visited the United States in 1898. A devotee of the bicycle, he has always preferred that to horseback riding.

Queen Elizabeth became the wife of King Albert fourteen years ago, their wedding having been celebrated in royal state on Oct. 1, 1900. Their union was described at the time as a genuine love match, and it was said they had similar and congenial tastes. Both are highly educated, and fond of literature, music and art.

Queen Elizabeth, who was a Bavarian princess, is a strikingly handsome woman. She has a long, oval face, with fine features, and boasts of hair of a pale golden tint that surrounds her head like an aureole. She has traveled extensively with her father and mother, one of her trips extending into the interior of Siberia. Music is a passion with her, and she is an accomplished violinist. As a horse-woman she is without fear, and is said to ride as well and gracefully as her aunt, the late Empress of Austria. A few years ago she developed talent as a dramatist and wrote a play entitled "Romunda," which was produced in Brussels in March, 1908, causing a stir in the Belgian capital.

CANADA'S WAR FUND AT FIFTY MILLIONS

Resolution Introduced in Commons Also Includes Provision for Government War Risks, Insurance on Ships and Cargoes---Power to Declare Moratorium and to Ease Currency Asked.

OTTAWA, Aug. 19. — Parliament was opened yesterday afternoon by H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught, who motored to Parliament Hill accompanied by Their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Connaught and the Princess Patricia.

Canada's war fund will be fifty million dollars. Sir Robert Borden has given notice of a resolution embodying the principles upon which the fund may be administered. Legislation based upon the resolution will be introduced later.

The resolution reads:

"Resolved: That it is expedient to provide that a sum not exceeding fifty million dollars be granted to His Majesty toward defraying any expenses that may be incurred by or under the authority of the Governor-in-Council during the year ending March 31, 1915, for: (a) The defence and security of Canada; (b) the conduct of naval or military operations in or beyond Canada; (c) promoting the continuance of trade, industry and business communications, whether by means of insurance or indemnity against war risk, or otherwise; (d) the carrying out of any measure deemed necessary or advisable by the Governor-in-Council in consequence of the existence of a state of war.

"Further resolved: That the Governor-in-Council be empowered to raise by way of loan, temporary or otherwise, such sums of money as are required for the purpose of making any payment authorized by an act founded on these resolutions."

Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, has also given notice of important resolutions upon which legislation will be based to enable the banks to cope with the extraordinary financial situation which the war has already created in this country.

The resolutions empower the Governor-in-Council by proclamation to:

(a) Authorise the making of advances to the chartered banks by the issue of Dominion notes, upon the pledge of securities, deposited with the Minister of Finance, of such kind and amount as may be approved by the Treasury Board, such advances to be repayable at such times as the board may determine, with interest at a rate likewise determined by the board of not less than five per cent. per annum; (b) authorise chartered banks to make payment in the bank notes issued by each bank instead of in gold or Dominion notes, the total amount of the notes of any chartered bank circulation at any time not, however, to exceed the amount of its notes issuable under the provisions of the Bank Act, and of an enactment upon the next succeeding clause of resolution; (c) authorize the banks to issue excess circulation, from and including the first day of March in any year and including the last day of August next ensuing or during any part of such period, to amounts not exceeding fifteen per cent. of the combined unimpaired capital and reserve funds of the respective banks, interest to be payable on such circulation at a rate not less than five per cent. per annum; (d) suspend the redemption of gold in Dominion notes; (e) authorize in so far as the same may lie within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada the postponement of the payment of all or any debts, liabilities and obligations, however arising, to such extent, for such extent, for such time and upon and subject to such terms, conditions, limitations and provisions as may be specified in the proclamation.

When the House assembled after hearing the speech, the Prime Minister announced that Government business would have precedence on every day of this session, which will probably conclude next week. The debate upon the address will be moved today by Donald Sutherland, M.P. for South Oxford.

The speech from the throne follows:

"Hon. Gentlemen of the Senate:

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

"Very grave events, vitally affecting the interests of all His Majesty's dominions, have transpired since prorogation. The unfortunate outbreak of war made it immediately imperative for my Ministers to take extraordinary measures for the defence of Canada and for the maintenance of the honor and integrity of our Empire.

"With respect to such of these measures as may require the sanction and approval of Parliament, the necessary legislative proposals will be submitted for your consideration. Other bills authorizing additional measures which are essential for the public safety will also be presented to you without delay.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons, estimates will be laid before you to provide for expenditure which has been or may be caused by the outbreak of hostilities.

"Hon. Gentlemen of the Senate:

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

"The critical period into which we have just entered has aroused to the full the patriotism and loyalty which have always actuated the Canadian people. From every province and, indeed, from every community, the response to the call of duty has been all that could be desired. The spirit which thus animates Canada inspires, also His Majesty's dominions throughout the world; and we may be assured that united action to repel the common danger will not fail to strengthen the ties that bind together those vast dominions in the possession and enjoyment of the blessings of British liberty.

"As representative of His Majesty the King, I must add my expression of thanks and admiration for the splendid spirit of patriotism and generosity that has been displayed throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion."

London, Aug. 19. — The Daily Telegraph in its leading editorial today protests against the action of English and Belgian authorities in ousting newspaper men from the field of action.

"Restrictions placed upon the work of war correspondents go farther," says the Telegraph, "than is justified by the attitude of the press and that is consistent with public interest."

RETIREMENT OF BELGIANS IS RUMORED

Troops Are Said to be Retreating Towards Antwerp

FIGHTING AT DINANT

Canadian Press Despatch.

Paris, Aug. 19.—An official announcement this morning says the retirement of Belgian troops towards Antwerp is rumored, but not confirmed.

Paris. — Details of the fighting at Dinant, between the French and German troops show that the carnage was terrible. The first French company although decimated held a position until another company came up with artillery. French cavalry then advanced and pushed the German attackers back into Meuse.

A Brussel's Report.

Brussels, Aug. 19.—It is officially announced that the situation of the Belgian army continues excellent. While it is impossible to indicate the position of the troops, says a statement from the war office, it may be said now that there is no chance of any incursion towards Brussels.

No Germans are in or around Laden. German cavalry camps are in Gembloux region but there is no movement of troops in that direction.

COMPLETE SILENCE AS TO RESULTS OF BATTLE NOW ON

Fate of Liege Forts Not Definitely Known --- Commanders of Allied Forces Will Give No Information --- The Beginning of Operations on a Large Scale

Canadian Press Despatch.

Toronto, Aug. 19.—Complete silence is maintained as to the results of the big fight understood to be in progress somewhere along a line extending through Belgium and Luxemburg. Despatches give evidence of the presence of masses of German troops pushing through on their way to the front behind a screen of cavalry whose dashes in search of information have resulted in sharp clashes and heavy casualties.

Commanders of allied forces will not permit anything about their positions to be made public.

At Brussels it is said, the situation has changed since yesterday when it was reported to be excellent for the allies. The fate of Liege forts is not definitely known, the Germans asserting their heavy artillery has reduced them, while the Belgians maintain they are still intact. French reports continue to represent the French turning movement throughout Southern Alsace, as progressing favorably and this received some confirmation in German reports of the loss of two batteries of guns and the continued advance of the French.

A careful study of the situation leads French military observers to conclude that events occurring in Belgium today are the beginning of operations on a large scale Germany, it is declared is making a fresh and mightier effort to break into France through the comparatively open Belgium country. Government opinion in Paris is confident that the allies will be able to meet this shock successfully and reply to it crushingly. The brief announcement from Brussels of fierce fighting between Belgian and German troops along the extended front is generally accepted in London as indicating the real beginning of the first battle in the war. The German attack is today again reported to have been made on the direct orders of Emperor William himself to his generals. A despatch to a Paris newspaper from Brussels says cannonading was distinctly heard in Brussels at six o'clock this morning and it was understood a German army is now marching upon Brussels by way of Huy.

A despatch to Reuter's from Brussels says the German advance posts covering the region between Gembloux and Jodoigne are being gradually pushed back before the advance of the Belgian and French forces.

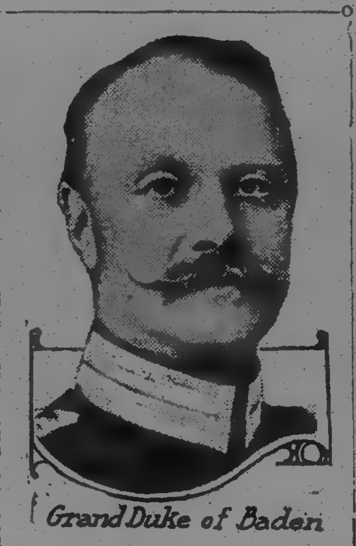
FIRING IN PROGRESS IN NORTH SEA IS REPORTED BY BRITISH PRESS BUREAU

AN EXHORTATION FROM POPE PIUS

Canadian Press Despatch.

Rome, Aug. 19.—Pope Pius has addressed an exhortation to the whole world, which in part says: "In the midst of this universal conflict, and now that Fatherly love and apostoli ministry demand of us that we should with all earnestness turn the thoughts of Christendom thither, whence cometh our help—to Christ, the Prince of Peace, and the most powerful mediator between God and man. We charge, therefore, the Catholics of the whole world to approach the throne of Grace and mercy, more especially the clergy, whose duty, furthermore, it will be to make in every parish public supplication, so that a merciful God may, as it were, be wearied with the prayers of his children and speedily remove the causes of war, giving to them who rule the power to think the thoughts of peace and not of affliction."



Grand Duke of Baden

Ruler of one of the German States who has joined forces with his Imperial War Lord.

No British Casualties Thus Far—German Effort to Cross Meuse at Dinant Fails—French Advancing.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—In a despatch from Brussels the Exchange Telegraph's correspondent says:

"The German movement toward the Belgian centre seems to have been checked at Landen and Gembloux. No further movements of enemy's troops have been observed. The German prisoners in Belgium will be sent to England."

The British official press bureau announces that some desultory fighting occurred Tuesday between the British patrolling squadrons and flotillas and German cruisers, which were reconnoitering. No losses are reported or claimed. "A certain liveliness is apparent in the southern area of the North Sea," say the press bureau.

The official bureau also announces, in reply to "attempts that are being made by the enemy to spread false reports of disasters to ourselves and our allies," that "no casualties have as yet occurred in the British army."

A Reuter despatch from Brussels says that the Germans made another attempt to cross the Meuse yesterday by a bridge not far from Dinant, where cannonading was resumed. The French artillery repelled the attack with considerable loss.

German cavalry patrols have been sighted to the northward of Antwerp, according to the Antwerp correspondent of Reuter's.

An official statement issued by the French Embassy in London last night says:

"The Liege forts are still holding out. Not one of them has been taken."

Reported Decisive Battle.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—There is a persistent report here that a decisive battle is in progress on Belgian soil.

Great crowds surround the bulletin boards.

Railway communication between Brussels and Namur has been cut by the Germans.

An official despatch from Gen. Joffre, who is directing the French operations in Alsace, issued yesterday says:

"All day Monday we continued to progress in Upper Alsace. The enemy's retreat from this side was in disorder. They abandoned everywhere their wounded and their stores."

"The French artillery silenced the German guns and by seven o'clock in the evening the Germans were retreating. Only the citadel continued to shower lead on the advancing French. The citadel is on a hill south of the town which rises to a height of 300 feet. It is an ancient work and now of no military value, but it is difficult to take by assault.

"The French, when the bugle sounded the charge, fixed their bayonets and began to swarm up the numerous steep and rock paths leading to the summit under a deadly hail from the machine guns and rifles above, keeping their eyes fixed on the German flag from the citadel. They climbed steadily, however, disregarding their losses, and a well-planted French shell silenced the machine gun a few minutes later. The French soldiers tore down the enemy's flag while the scaling party fired down on the fleeting Germans."

Severe Defeat Administered To Eighty Thousand Austrians

London, Aug. 19.—An official communication received here from Paris confirms a report of a Servian victory at Shabats. Over 80,000 Austrians suffered a severe defeat, 3,000 being killed and 5,000 wounded.

Madrid, Aug. 19.—King Alfonso and Premier Dato are to have a conference with French and English ambassadors in regard to Spain's attitude towards the European conflict.

London, Aug. 19.—A despatch from Rome says refugees from Magdeburg, Germany, report that German soldiers fired on 3,000 Italians confined in a barracks there, killing 7 and wounding 16, because some of them shouted "Hurrah for Italy!"

Enthusiasm for War in Austria Completely Lacking

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 19.—It is officially stated in Paris that the mobilization of the Austrian army was accompanied by much disorder and even open mutiny in many places, owing to the unpopularity of war among many classes of the people.

Austria enthusiasm for war is completely lacking and people complain bitterly against spending blood and money in a useless cause.

PORTUGAL'S ATTITUDE TOWARD ENGLAND

London, Aug. 19. — The Lisbon correspondent of the Morning Post says, the only topic of conversation in Portugal is war and the attitude of Portugal. A week ago, says the correspondent, party politicians were at each other's throats. Now home politics have been laid aside and the only attacks on the Government are on the grounds that it is acting too weakly in support of its ally, England.

PETERBOROUGH, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 19, 1914

THE CITY COUNCIL SHOULD ACT.

THE LAYING OFF of many men, the short-time operation of factories, and the closing of others are facts showing how the European war is affecting Canada. The public cannot blame a manufacturer or employer of labour for laying off hands at this juncture, when the facts are considered.

Nearly every business man in Canada is experiencing difficulty in financing his business. The word has been handed to the banks to tighten up and curtail their credit. They have done this to protect themselves and the public's money in their possession, and it hits the employer who, when he cannot make temporary loans to meet wage bills and other current expenses, is obliged to lay off his men. Then, the hindrance to trans-Atlantic trade has taken away the market for many things, such as the large export business of farm implements and machinery by the Massey-Harris and other companies. There are large steel and machine companies in Canada who have done a large business with Russia, and these companies have now no place to sell their goods. They must therefore stop producing what they cannot sell, and that means laying off men. The employer cannot help the conditions which prevail, and if he cannot get money with which to pay his men, he is forced to lay them off.

In view of this condition, it is essential that all public works by municipal, provincial, or Dominion authorities should go on. Governing bodies like these have the largest line of credit in Canada, and it should be used in time of stress, like the present, to provide as much ready money as possible to lessen thus the hardship caused by the war. We think the local Council of Peterborough ought to take immediate steps to do something practical along this line. With men being forced out of employment in our factories, and thus deprived of the wages to maintain them something should be done to relieve the local situation.

HEARST SHOWS HIS HAND.

WE DESIRE to draw attention to an editorial that appeared in Saturday's issue of the Montreal Mail which says that violation of neutrality by the San Francisco Examiner, owned by W. R. Hearst, has been noted and published by the Government of the United States. The official notification, published in the press, at the request of Rear Admiral C. F. Pond, U.S.N., is as follows:

> "The act of the San Francisco Examiner in sending out a tug, furnishing papers containing information of the whereabouts and of the movements of belligerent men-of-war and conveying the German consul to the German cruiser Leipzig on the high seas off this port, is considered un-neutral service and a violation of the President's proclamation of neutrality."

More convincing evidence could not come of the pro-German policy of W. R. Hearst in this war, to which the Daily Mail on Wednesday called attention as a grave danger to Canada and the Empire. The San Francisco Examiner is the original Hearst paper. It is still in his ownership and control. It strikes the keynote which the string of Hearst papers stretching across the States takes up. It leads and the others follow. Now that it has violated the neutrality of the American Government, the rest of the Hearst papers may be expected to take the cue and go to exceptional lengths in aiding Germany.

The Review is of the opinion that the matter of Hearst newspapers coming into Canada should be considered at the forthcoming special session of Parliament. Canada doth not want Hearst newspapers circulated among her people. If we have a protective tariff, surely it ought to be high enough to prevent such dangerous matter getting to the people.

AERIAL WAR FLEETS.

SO FAR, there has not been much news of the effect of air craft in the present war. What has been done was brilliant and deadly, but extremely costly. The European nations have spent much money equipping air fleets, and time ought to demonstrate soon the efficiency of these fighting appliances. The Germans have not been behind other nations in developing her aerial fighting craft, which is a powerful war force.

The great surprise of the German military bill of 1913 was the large sum demanded for the creation of an air fleet—$20,000,000. This was in addition to the huge sums voted for the navy. Germany had already made great strides in the provision of aeronautical sections for the army. During the autumn manoeuvres of late years airships and aeroplanes have been tested, and their value established beyond peradventure. It was therefore decided to equip both the army and the navy with a powerful aerial force.

The act of 1913 provided for the navy two squadrons of airships with a base. There are four vessels to each squadron, with one in reserve. Both squadrons have their base at the mouth of the Elbe. This base is furnished with double revolving sheds and has all the necessary gas and other installations. There is also a "mother station" for naval aeroplanes, and six coastal stations. There are thirty-six hydroplanes always in service and sixteen in reserve. The coastal stations are kept at the highest pitch of efficiency, ready for any emergency, and are guarded at all times. The chain of islands off the Elbe, with Borkum as the centre, is the centre for most of these coastal stations. The staff and crews number 1,452 men.

It is not claimed that the airship has yet proved its worth as a reliable arm; but Germany determined to be adequately provided with the latest aeronautical appliances, so that they could be used to the utmost in the field that experiment has proved that they possess value. The Admiralty believes that under certain atmospheric conditions they might be very useful for attacking the enemy; and that in any case during the course of a naval campaign in the North Sea they will do good service as scouts.

No one doubts the bravery of the Germans; they have qualities of resistance possessed by no other races except the Dutch and the English. But they lack the nerve, the dash and the deviltry of the French. To sail through the air and, with the swoop of an eagle, dash into the side of a German airship is glory for the aviators of France. It is dramatic, it demands courage, daring, nerve, and skill — everything that appeals to the mind of the French. In this war the airmen of France will count their lives as dross if only they can annihilate the enemy. It is safe to say that in this war in the air the French will extirpate the Germans.

VALUE OF CANADA'S FISHERIES.

ENCOURAGING reports come from Canada's Pacific Coast Fisheries and indicate a resource that will be of very great importance should the great European war be at all extended.

The Prince Rupert fisheries are developing very rapidly, and during the month of July the fleet gathered in a catch valued at $490,535. This included salmon taken in the canneries or used otherwise. Of that quantity, 6,800 pounds were either frozen or used in a fresh condition. In a canned form there were 8,156,000 pounds made use of, while for mild curing 1,289,000 pounds were utilized.

Halibut is easily the next most important fish for the month with a total catch landed of 1,016,000 pounds. The only other variety that was represented in any quantity was the cod to the extent of 6,000 pounds, all of which was used in a fresh condition.

There is also an ever-increasing production of fruits and vegetables in the district around Prince Rupert. These have been of exceptionally good quality. Fruits ripened earlier than usual this season, bringing them into close competition with produce grown farther to the south.

These favourable reports also give some idea of the growth of Canada's Pacific province. The passage of time will undoubtedly prove British Columbia to be one of Canada's richest and most beautiful possessions.

THE OFFICIAL estimated wheat yield of British India for the crop year 1913-14 is 8,385,000 tons, a decrease of 1,332,000 tons from 1912-13. The Punjab has an increase of 4.4 per cent. and is expected to yield 3,428,000 tons, but large decreases are reported in practically all the other wheat growing districts of India. However, compared with the average crop for five years ending 1911-12 the decrease is only 187,000 tons. India exported by sea during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1914, wheat to the extent of 1,202,205 tons, compared with 1,660,187 tons in the preceding year.

Germany's Fighting Force.

Collier's.

The most efficient and elaborate system ever devised by the ingenuity of man, used not only for war and destruction, but as an intelligence clearing house for the whole of the Empire, is the German War machine. Conceived by General Stein in the days of the Napoleonic wars, added to and elaborated by successive administrations, solely under the control of the ruling house, its efficiency and perfect and smooth working are due to the total absence of political machinations or preferences. Brains, ability, and thorough scientific knowledge are the only passports for entrance to the Grosser General Stab, the General Staff of the German Empire. You will find blooded young officers and gray-haired generals past active efficiency, experts ranking from an ordinary mechanic to the highest engineering expert, all working harmoniously together, with one end in view, the acme of efficiency. Controlled and directed by the War Lord in person through the Chef des Grossen General Stabs—at present General Field Marshal von Heeringen—this immense machine, the pulsating brain of a fighting force of 4,500,000 men, is composed of from 180 to 200 officials.

American Sentiment Toward Germany.

New York Tribune, Aug. 8.

There is no anti-German sentiment among the people or in the press of this country, as some distinguished German residents writing to the newspapers seem to think. We have too many German citizens, respect them too much, owe too much to their industry and loyalty, ever to have anything but the best feeling toward the German.

It is against the German Government and its policy that the present indignation is directed; against the Kaiser, with his wild militarism, that is now working havoc in all Europe and has brought Germany itself face to face with ruin.

American public opinion holds the Kaiser's Government responsible for destroying the peace of Europe and bringing distress upon the whole world. It was the Kaiser's Government, with its "year of sacrifice," that started the last orgy of preparation for war, whose after-effects are being realized today. The Kaiser could have held back Austria-Hungary when Servia humbled herself. The world looked to him to save it, but he did nothing.

The nations of the Triple Entente went into the fight with reluctance, that showed some sense of their responsibility as civilized powers. But the German Government flung Germany in without counting the costs, without even stopping to find out where its ally, Italy, stood; eager to strike the first blow with that huge engine of destruction in which it had such mad confidence.

American public opinion is outraged by the wanton attack on the weak neutral power of Belgium and the slaying of its subjects. It recoils at the cost of what the Kaiser has undertaken. It has no sympathy with the excuse that this is a war of self-preservation for Germany. That is a militaristic delusion. Under peace, Germany was outstripping its rivals, filling England with anxiety on the sea, and putting out of the head of France its cherished visions of a regained Alsace and Lorraine.

American opinion feels that the best thing that can happen to the world is to have the German militaristic idol shattered and thrown down in the dust. Without the least feeling against the German people, that is how the American public feels that the present German Government and its works, and that sentiment is rightly reflected in the American press.

THE COP

By Walt Mason

I'd hate to be a peeler, and tread the pave of brick, the goat for every squealer who thinks he has a kick. He tries to do his duty, nine cases out of ten; the burglar fierce and sooty, all sorts of strong arm men, the hobo and the killer, the bad man with a past, he'll chase from post to pillar, and run them in at last. His life he doesn't reckon when tracking deadly foe; wherever perils beckon the peeler has to go. The cop must be a wizard, a Sherlock in disguise, and know, from A to Izzard, the wicked's lures and lies; and he must be a scrapper to master hoodlums rude; and yet he must be dapper and well groomed as a dude. The manners Chesterfieldan he must possess, of course, or we shall take his shield in, and fire him from the force. A Crichton he'll resemble, in nothing he'll be lax, or surely he may tremble, for he will get the axe. As brave as any lion, yet dovelike, mild and meek, as eloquent as Bryan — at fifteen bones a week! I'd hate to be a copper, on feet that throb and ache, the goat of every yawper who has a kick to make.

CRABBE'S NAME HONORED.

Wiltshire Town Celebrates Association With Poet.

On June 17 the Wiltshire town of Trowbridge in the southwest of the Old Country for a moment forgot its long association with the making of cloth while it gave itself up to celebrating the beginning of the connection with a poet who was regarded by Byron as Nature's sternest painter and the best, and who won from Edward FitzGerald whole-hearted and lasting homage.

It is a strange linking of opposites that Crabbe, a "Pope in worsted stockings," should have gained the admiration of the author of "Don Juan," and the translator of Omar Khayyam, though it may be that Byron's praise was meant as much for a dig at the "lakers" and other of the new-style poets as for genuine appreciation of Crabbe, and that FitzGerald's interest was in its origin topographical.

For Crabbe's early life was associated with East Anglia—he was already in his 60th year, a clergyman of over thirty years' experience, and a poet of acknowledged prominence and popularity when his association with Trowbridge began.

It is just a hundred years ago that George Crabbe, who had lost his wife a few months earlier, was presented by the Duke of Rutland to the living of Trowbridge. He reached his new rectory on June 1, 1814, on the 3rd he was inducted, and on the 5th he preached his first sermon in the tall-spired church that for the last eighteen years of his life was to be the centre of his spiritual duties, and in which when he died, in 1832, in his 78th year, he was to be buried.

It is certainly fitting that so interesting a centenary should not be permitted to go by unmarked, for it is worth recalling that though Crabbe's reputation as a poet was well established before he removed to Wiltshire, yet it was from Trowbridge that he issued those "Tales of the Hall," which, as competent critics have declared, include work as good as any which has given him his earlier fame.

In Trowbridge the poet wrote, in Trowbridge the parson preached, and in Trowbridge he lies buried, so that it is but to be expected that the town should desire to pay its meed of honor to the memory of its famous citizen on such an occasion. It was at Trowbridge, too, that the widower-poet, the strong home-lover and sociable man—as was revealed in a recently published volume, "The Romance of an Elderly Poet"—toyed with the idea of re-marriage, longed for a partner, but lacked the courage or the assurance to secure one.

If he was not altogether happy on first arriving at his Wiltshire rectory, that was probably in a measure owing to the change in his surroundings taking place not only when he had reached a period in life when change becomes naturally distasteful, but also because of his domestic bereavement and the break-up of his home-life.

The elderly poet-preacher was afraid of making new ties, fearful of leaving a young widow unprovided for, and so contented himself with philandering on paper in the leisurely way of the poet of a century ago.

If it is likely to be with that East Anglia to which he belonged by birth and his intimate knowledge of which largely inspired his poetry, that George Crabbe's fame will remain most strongly interwoven, that is no reason why Wiltshire should not take pride in its association with his later years, and remember him with Thomas Moore and William Lisle Bowles as one of that triumvirate of poets, none of whom belonged to the county, but all of whom became identified with it.

Novels as Immigration Literature.

"We have never known," said a London librarian recently, "such a demand for books dealing with Canada.

"This demand is so marked that instead of the usual two or three copies of a book which may find a fair number of readers which we ordinarily obtain, we double the quantity in the case of books on Canadian life. The natural result is that authors are paying more attention to Canada as a literary field, and this means an increasing output of Canadian subjects."

This is undoubtedly true. More and more, the man who is "making up his mind" to go to Canada, consults the books that have been written by travelers rather than emigration "literature" issued by railway companies, real estate firms, or, even Governments; and it has become the usual thing for Canadian and provincial Governments, as well as the railways, to employ the pen of an author of known merit to depict the advantages of the Dominion.

EASY TRADE.

WHAT profit is in prophesying
And giving timid ones a fit
About the world's impending ending
And all the frills that go with it?
A man could never get the credit
Though into space the world might blow.
There would be no one round to listen
Were he to say, "I told you so."

It's just the very rankest guessing.
There are no schedules for the end,
No printed charts nor tables showing
The dates on which he may depend.
That doesn't feaze the yellow fellow
Who's working at it as a trade.
He doesn't need the book directions.
His prophecies are all homemade.

The truth is that the profit cometh
Not in fulfillment of the claim,
But in the weeks before the smashup
He gets a bit of fleeting fame,
And this enables him to gather
A small, perhaps, but faithful band
Who pay him tithes and give him presents
That cause his fortunes to expand.

It seems an easy way of living,
Requiring neither strength nor skill,
To say that sixteen weeks from Tuesday
We'll get the grand and final thrill.
So many gentlemen are looking
For easy money it is strange
More people are not in the business
And that way picking up their change.

Wanted It Forgotten.

"I can read your past and foretell your future," said the lovely fortune teller.

"How much will it cost?" asked the young man.

"Just a dollar."

"All right. Here are two if you will say nothing of the past."

Knew by Experience.

"What's Ezra doing for his rheumatiz?" asked Colonel Haystack solicitously as he bit the end of a rye straw.

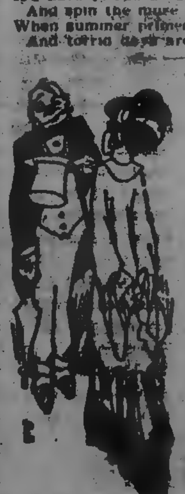
"He is trying baths."

"P'shaw! I hate to see him wastin' his money. I don't have no faith in them. I tried one onst and couldn't see no results."

The Heated Season.

I long to write a line or two
Of admiration deep.
I've tried to spring a rhyme or two,
But had to go to sleep.

It's hard to run a rhyme machine
And spin the muse ahead
When summer primes the time machine
And torrid days are shed.



She Knew.

"Just been out with the boys."

"Had anything to drink?"

"That's telling."

"No, indeed; it's smelling."

Serious.

When sunny summer softly smiles
I feel inclined to shirk.
I seem to be impelled to play
And loaf about the place all day,
Then die of overwork.

Somewhat Alike.

"What is the difference between a canoe and a motorboat?"

"Well, considerable."

"Not so much."

"Why not?"

"One the operator runs with his scull and the other with his brain."

Half Her Expectations.

"She thought he was a wonder before they were married."

"Yes. She imagined the sun rose and set on him."

"And was she disappointed?"

"Well, she found it didn't rise on him."

Lofty Reading.

The stars were all the books they had,
A very meager store.
No wonder then the ancient men
Were prone to read them more.
There were no midnight oil compellers
Quite like our modern six best sellers.

SPECIAL CORNER FOR AFTER DINNER READERS

DAINTY SANDWICHES.

They Are the Popular Thing to Serve at Afternoon Tea.

A cup of tea and a sandwich or two constitutes quite enough of "a bite" to tide one over until dinner time, when the bridge games breaks up, and less and less do bridge hostesses feel compelled to offer elaborate lunches in the way of salads, ices and sweet cakes so late in the afternoon. Some women are afraid of spoiling the dinner occurring soon thereafter and other women are in mortal terror of growing fat, so the elaborate lunch is little appreciated and, though everybody nibbles politely, most of the dainties are left on the plates.

Tea and buttered muffins always offered by a certain hostess after the bridge meeting at her home make her afternoons especially popular. Coffee and sandwiches are also relished, but sweets are better avoided, for few women really want to eat them just before dinner and are sorry when they do, though the keen appetite of late afternoon makes sweets especially palatable.

Celery stalks chilled and stuffed with cream cheese and chopped nuts is a toothsome delicacy for after bridge serving. Coffee and tiny rolled sandwiches may accompany the stuffed celery. To make rolled sandwiches cut the bread in thin slices in the morning, having first shaved off all the crust from the loaf. Pack the slices, one on another and wrap in a wet napkin. In an hour's time have ready some melted butter, a pastry brush and squares of oiled paper. Brush each slice of bread with melted butter, roll and wrap firmly in oiled paper. Set the rolls of paper in the icebox and just before serving remove the papers. The sandwiches will retain their rolled up shape.

Cooked sausage meat put through a chopper makes delicious filling for sandwiches. So does chopped apple and celery. Cream cheese with chopped nuts cannot be excelled. Chopped onions and green peppers are relished by some people as a sandwich filling, but there should always be other sandwiches without the onion filling.

He Fooled Them.

Mrs. Odell had a caller one afternoon and invited her to remain to dinner. The invitation was accepted, and the hostess said:

"I am so glad you can stay, Mrs. Parker. There is to be a joke on Mr. Odell. He is always criticising my cooking. To-day his mother came in, and I persuaded her to make some cakes. Won't it be funny when he finds fault with the cakes and I tell him that his mother made them herself?"

When the cakes were served at dinner that evening Mr. Odell exclaimed:

"My dear Maude, you are certainly becoming a perfect cook. These cakes are as fine as my mother makes."

Brides and Wet Weather.

A Breton bride rather likes to have a wet wedding. It is held to signify that all her tears are now shed and that she will therefore have a happy married life.

The Ezra of Simbirsk call the day before the wedding the weeping day, and the bride and her girl friends weep all they can, with the idea, it would seem, of getting the mourning of life over so that only joy may remain.

The Badagas of the Neilgherries attain the same end by sousing the bride with water. Some Greek tribes have a similar belief in the virtue of a drenching bringing good fortune.—London Globe.

A Tiny Farm For a Dime.

Land is cheap. For easy figuring let us say it is worth $160 an acre. A square rod, then, is worth only $1, and 10 cents' worth will be a little more than twenty-seven square feet, or a little farm slightly more than five feet on a side.

How often a boy will waste a dime and think nothing of it. For a dime he can buy land enough to hold a flower bed, four hills of clover or a peach tree! The boy who can save a dime can become rich. Make a dime look like a tiny farm. The boy who learns to save a dime and to know values will some day come into his own.

The Cricket's Chirp.

The variation of speed in the chirping of crickets depends so closely on temperature that the height of the thermometer may be calculated by observing the number of chirps in a minute. At 60 degrees F. the rate is eighty chirps a minute, at 70 degrees F. 120 per minute, and the rate increases four chirps to the minute with a change of one degree. Below a temperature of 50 degrees F. the cricket is not likely to make any sound.

What He Was Looking For.

"I do wish, Edward," said the lady of his choice, "that you wouldn't stare at other women so much. It's very rude and is certainly no compliment to me."

"On the contrary, my dear," replied the resourceful benedict, "I was looking to see if I could find a prettier face than yours, and I confess I really cannot."

Something Better.

"Then you can't get me a government plum?"

"No," said Senator Wombat. "But what's one paltry government plum? I have secured for you some plum seeds from the department of agriculture. Go home and start an orchard of your own, my friend."—Judge.

Points for Mothers

Prominent Ears.

Very few babies are born with prominent ears. This disfigurement is often produced by a careless way of putting on the hats or bonnets or by laying the little heads on the pillow thoughtlessly. Great care should always be taken to see that the ears are smooth and flat. Once acquired, this trouble may be cured by getting baby an ear cap. Let him wear it constantly for a time.

For Sensitive Skin.

If the baby's skin is very sensitive and chafes easily give it bran baths instead of soap baths. One pint of wheat bran should be placed in a bag of coarse muslin or cheesecloth and this put in the bath water. It should then be squeezed for five minutes until the water resembles a thin porridge.

Right Breathing.

Be sure that your child breathes through his nose and not his mouth. The nose may be clogged by a growth or adenoids in the throat may obstruct the air passage. Habitual mouth breathing creates a tendency to tuberculosis and should be prevented by operation if necessary.

Blackheads on Children.

It is not advisable to use skin treatment on young girls for enlarged pores, pimples, blackheads, etc. With proper bathing, abundance of sleep and a correct diet of fruits and green vegetables the skin will develop a normal condition within a reasonable time.

Bassinet For Baby.

A bassinet on wheels is by far the most convenient sort to handle. The wheels are small round blocks of wood, and the basket can be removed from the frame which the wheels support. Such a bassinet trimmed with net and ribbon can be made at home.

Lime In Milk.

Lime is needed to strengthen the bone and to help to form the teeth in young children. In good milk there is plenty of lime without the addition of lime water. A baby of eighteen months should have at least two pints of milk a day.

No Starch For Infants.

An infant should be given no food containing starch until it cuts its teeth. Starchy foods include biscuits, cornstarch, tapioca, sago, rice, potato, etc. An infant cannot digest any of these until its teeth are cut.

Carlyle and Ceremony.

Thomas Carlyle and his wife were so wedding frightened that it is sad to think of it. Replying to a letter of his describing his fantastic terrors, she wrote: "For heaven's sake get into a more benignant humor or the incident will not only wear a very original aspect, but likewise a very heart breaking one. I see not how I am to go through with it."—T. P.'s Weekly, London.

People profit more by experience in speculations in which they make than in those in which they lose.

Many a man has just missed being great, but the fact never has been chiselled on any one's tombstone.

Troubles must come to all men, but those who are always looking for them will have the largest share.

IN SUCH PAIN WOMAN CRIED

Suffered Everything Until Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Florence, So. Dakota.—"I used to be very sick every month with bearing down pains and backache, and had headache a good deal of the time and very little appetite. The pains were so bad that I used to sit right down on the floor and cry, because it hurt me so and I could not do any work at those times. An old woman advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I got a bottle. I felt better the next month so I took three more bottles of it and got well so I could work all the time. I hope every woman who suffers like I did will try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound." — Mrs. P. W. LANSENG, Route No. 1, Florence, South Dakota.

Why will women continue to suffer day in and day out or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has restored the health of thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, etc.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

YOU CAN HELP THE CHILDREN

Get Them Started in the Fascinating Summer Pastime

Of course, when the boys and girls were babies it was the easiest thing in the world to tuck them away in bed at night time, plant a kiss on each rosy cheek and go placidly about your work knowing that no harm could touch them. Now it's different, isn't it? Sure! The kiddies are determined to rush out of doors, after dark, and the poor little mother has to keep her eye on every small chick.

"They want something to do," you sigh.

Of course they do, and here it is! The greatest fun in the world, working out the rebus cpitures, an instructive puzzle at that, with a chance to win something in the end.

Just think of this! Betty and Susie, and Jacky and Tommie will have a pleasant task and maybe a reward later on. Human nature is the same yesterday, today and tomorrow.

A boy's mind and a girl's mind, too, for that matter, grows restless with nothing to do. Between you and me, big folks are the same way, too. What if you have six sons and daughters. They can all work in the contest, and all have a chance of winning the prize, for that matter.

The Pastime is perfectly individual. Why don't you get each one of the youngsters his own paper, let him work out his own picture, and save his own coupons? It'll make the little chap more independent.

And this isn't saying that daddy and mummy can't enjoy the fun of the Review's Summer Pastime.

AUNT LUCY.

When making a steamed pudding put a piece of well greased paper over the top before tying on the cloth. This will prevent the cloths from becoming greasy, ad they are no trouble to wash.

HOMES OF THE NAVAJOS.

Stuffy Winter Hogans and Light and Airy Summer "Cottages."

The Navajos are the least gregarious of native American tribes, never congregating in towns and vilages and never forming permanent communities. Their homes, called hogans, are mere hovels, built of stones or the trunks and limbs of trees, with rounded roofs thickly covered with earth. A smoke vent in the roof and a doorway in the side are the only means of ventilation. In cold weather these cavelike structures are kept tightly closed, so that no one but an Indian could live in them at all.

But when springtime comes the Navajo squaw constructs a summer cottage, sometimes consisting of no more than a windbreak of sagebrush around a circular clear space. Sometimes the summer hogan is a shady bower under a desert cedar tree, with leafy branches piled around as a measure of protection against winds and sandstorms. Sometimes it is a shelter formed by the utilization of old pieces of canvas, sheet iron and other cast away material picked up around the refuse dumps of the railroad towns. In any event, the dwellers in the summer hogans are practically in the open all the time. Fresh air is never for a moment excluded.—Christian Herald.

NAILS IN STONE WALLS.

Easy Method of Placing Them So They Will Remain Firm.

Few women know how to drive a nail into a brick wall, and yet it is what they often need to do for themselves if there is no man about.

The following method is easy and has been found entirely satisfactory: Having decided upon the exact spot into which the nail is desired to be driven, which must be in the plaster between the bricks, provide yourself with a hammer and screwdriver. With these tools commence working out the hard plaster by tapping the handle of the screwdriver. As the plaster turns to dust it must be blown or dusted out so that the size of the hole may be seen.

When a space about one inch long and nearly one inch deep has been worked out get a small piece of wood about the same size and with the hammer wedge it tightly into the space. When it seems firm take the nail and drive it into the wood. It will go in nicely, without bending, and remain firm an indefinite length of time. This same method was used at one time when it was decided to hang a hammock between the fence and the wall, with the exception that the hole was dug out a little longer and deeper than for an ordinary nail.—Minneapolis Journal.

MOBILIZATION ON THURSDAY

Canadian Forces to Assemble at Head Quarters

ON TO VALCARTIER

Embarking Strength of Force is to be 22,218

OTTAWA, Aug. 19.—Orders were issued last night to commanding officers throughout Canada to mobilize to-morrow morning the troops who have volunteered and have been accepted for active service. The orders went out by telegraph last night from the Minister of Militia as soon as it was learned that the camp at Valcartier would have its water supply ready. The troops will mobilize at regimental headquarters to-morrow, and proceed forthwith to Valcartier. It is expected that they will all be mobilized there within a week from the time the first transport trains start to move on Thursday.

The order in council providing for the Canadian expeditionary force of one army division defines the number of officers and men in the various units. The total embarking strength of the force is to be 22,218, although upwards of 25,000 men will mobilize at Valcartier. Commanders and staffs total 90; cavalry, 157; artillery 3,888; engineers, 442; signal service, 160; infantry, 12,025; army service corps, 567; army medical service, 698; army veterinary service, 11; ordnance corps, 18; army pay corps, 2; postal corps, 15. In addition to these, there will be 1,750 officers and men at the overseas base, and 2,395 in the administrative units available for reserve or reinforcing purposes.

AUSTRIANS LOSE TWO SHIPS.

Torpedo Boat and Cruiser Are Sunk In Adriatic Sea.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—A despatch to the Central News from Rome says the Austrian torpedo boat, No. 19, struck a mine at the entrance of the harbor at Pola, the Austrian naval base in the Adriatic, and went down. Only one member of the crew was saved.

The destroyed torpedo boat was 128 feet long, built at Elbing in 1896, and had a speed of 18 knots. She carried a crew of 20 men.

An official message received in Rome from Vienna says the Austrian cruiser Zenta was sunk in a naval battle off Antivari last Sunday, according to a despatch to the Exchange Telegraph from Rome.

The Cruiser Zenta, which was built at Pola in 1897, was 303 feet in length and displacement 2,265 tons.

Servians Rout Austrians.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—The Servian legation has received the following telegram from the Servian Premier, N. P. Pachitch:

"The Austrians were completely routed in the mountains near Sabac and 15,000 annihilated. Fourteen guns were captured. The Austrians are fleeing in great disorder to recross the Rivers Save and Drina, hotly pursued by our troops."

Pope Not Seriously Ill.

ROME, Aug. 19.—Pope Pius X. is not in so serious a condition as has been reported, according to the statement of Dr. Marchiafava, the attending physician. The pontiff's sisters and nieces have been allowed to nurse him, as in the case of previous illness, as that relieves him and distracts his attention from the gravity of the European situation, because of which he has suffered great depression.

CANADA GETS AEROPLANES

Several Modern Machines May Accompany the Expedition

OTTAWA, Aug. 19. — The Militia Department has acquired several aeroplanes of recent design for use in connection with Canada's expeditionary force, if on trial they are found to be up to expectations. There are more aviators in Canada than was generally thought, and the Government has been informed during the past few days of numerous machines now in the Dominion which have been hitherto employed for private purposes by the inventors and owners.

Dr. Graham Bell has been conducting for a considerable time aviation experiments at Baddeck, Cape Breton, and his latest achievements will probably be made use of by the Government for military purposes.

AVIATORS KILLED

PARIS, Aug. 19.—A German aeroplane has been destroyed in Russia near Samno and four German aviation officers killed, according to an official announcement here yesterday. It is thought Saima, Finland, is probably meant.

TEUTONIC DEFEATS.

Even German News Agency Admits Losses In Alsace.

LONDON, Aug. 19. — An official despatch to the French Embassy says:—

"The Germans have abandoned Saarburg, where they were strongly established with heavy artillery."

Germans Acknowledge Reverses.

BERLIN, Aug. 19.—(Via Copenhagen and London.)—The Wolff Bureau, the semi-official German news agency, yesterday gave out the following account of the battle of Muhlhausen:—

"One and a half French army corps entered upper Alsace while our troops were still concentrating. Nevertheless we attacked the enemy, who was thrown back toward Belfort, but whose march afterward continued.

"A small section of artillery from Strasburg was defeated, and two batteries, which had been rendered useless, were taken by the enemy, who then marched toward Schirmeck, eight miles from Saales, Alsace.

"An investigation has been begun in an endeavor to ascertain if any treachery exists among the local population."

GERMAN CRUISERS TAKEN

Terribly Disabled War Vessels In Hong Kong Are of Kaiser's Fleet.

SHANGHAI, Aug. 19. — Two German cruisers have been disabled and brought into Hong Kong. Confirmation of this fact was received here yesterday. The deck works, the turrets and the barbettes of the two cruisers were demolished and their masts and funnels had been shot away. Their sides were stained with blood which had run through the scuppers. Owing to the rigid censorship established by the British authorities at Hong Kong it is impossible to obtain the names of the two German cruisers.

Many German merchant vessels are lying in the harbor at Hong Kong.

Two warships badly damaged and carrying many wounded were reported to have entered Hong Kong harbor on Aug. 13. Their identity was not made public, but at the time it was believed that they were either the British cruisers Minotaur and Hampshire or the French cruisers Dupleix and Montcalm, which were reported to have had an engagement with the Gneisenau.

Negro Firebug Slew Seven.

SPRING GREEN, Wis., Aug. 19.—Two more deaths yesterday brought the fatalities of last Sunday's tragedy in Frank Lloyd Wright's bungalow up to seven. Only two persons of the nine occupants of the cottage when it was set on fire by Julian Carleton, the negro chef, are now alive.

Thomas Brunker, the sixth victim, died during the day, never having recovered consciousness, and David Lindbloom, Wright's gardener, died a few hours later. William Weston and Herbert Fritz, employes of Wright, were less seriously hurt than the others who were in the bungalow when Carleton ran amuck.

FOUND PRESENT AMONG CIGARS

Construction Company Sent Gift of $2000

MONTREAL, Aug. 19.—An interesting story detailing how he found two $1,000 Dominion of Canada bills in a Christmas box of cigars which lay in his cellar for two months before it was opened was told to the Board of Control yesterday by Mr. George Janin, chief city engineer, at the resumption of the investigation into the Notre Dame de Grace sewer contract scandal.

The gift was from the Harris Construction Co., which had the contract for the sewer. Chief Engineer Janin is not a smoker, hence the delay in finding the two thousand dollars. He returned the money, he said, to Mr. Harris.

Suspected Spies Imprisoned.

KINGSTON, Ont., Aug. 19. — The suspected German spies, arrested at Gananoque on Aug. 12th, who carried arms, ammunition and other equipment, have been brought to Kingston and will be incarcerated in Fort Henry.

They are the first military prisoners to enter the fort since 1837. They will be closely guarded.

Firing Heard Off Holland.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—The Amsterdam correspondent of The Post says a telegram has been received there from Texel Island reporting heavy gun fire Tuesday morning in a western direction.

Texel Island is in the North Sea and is the southwestern most part of the province of North Holland.

ONLY ONE CORRESPONDENT.

Col. Hughes Refuses To Let Press Representatives Go.

OTTAWA, Aug. 19. — The Militia Department is still in receipt of applications from Canadian newspapers desiring to send war correspondents to the front or with the troops, and some newspapers have gone so far as to say that they have arranged for a war correspondent. The Minister of Militia therefore desires to have it understood that the British War Office has only sanctioned the sending of one war correspondent from Canada and that one and no other will accompany the Canadian contingent. The one correspondent thus authorized will be selected by and will represent the Canadian press exclusively. This decision cannot be evaded by any newspaper man enlisting as a soldier and then, upon arriving at the front become a war correspondent. The Minister is emphatic on that point.

Spies on Isle of Orleans?

QUEBEC, Aug. 19. — Spy stories are current throughout the country, and the Island of Orleans, where a naval station has been established, is having its share of the spy scares. Since the authorities have taken precautionary measures, no less than eight spies have been seen on the island, the latest suspect being reported yesterday as taking plans and making drawings.

Islanders say they saw the man at work, but the authorities refuse to talk on the matter.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 18.—The Winnipeg wheat market opened ½c lower to ½c higher and advanced gradually during the early hours. At noon a gain of 3c to 4c had been made with a strong undertone. Oats opened ½c higher and flax 4c higher. At noon flax had made a total gain of 9c over Monday's close, but this was not maintained. Oats in the same time made a gain of 3½c and held it.

The passing of the shipping bill by the United States Government has tended to clear the difficulty of export, which, it is claimed, caused the advances in grain prices.

Trading today was quiet. While cash demand was quiet there were few offerings. Further advances occurred towards midday and the market became generally unsettled. Closing prices were 4⅝c to 5c higher for options and 3c to 2¾c for cash wheat.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 18.—The local grain trade was without any new feature today, prices for all lines being firm, with a fair amount of business passing for local and country account. There is a good demand for Argentine corn, and sales of round lots were made at 83c to 85c c.i.f. A feature of the flour trade is the strong feeling in winter wheat grades, and prices have scored a further advance of 25c per bag, with sales of 90 per cents. at $3 per bag. In spring wheat grades good trade is passing, and the market is active, with a strong undertone. The demand for millfeed is good, and millers generally are now oversold for some time to come. An easier feeling has developed in the market for butter, and it is doubtful if over 28c would be paid for round lots of finest creamery. The demand for cheese is quiet, but there is no change in prices to note. A good trade is being done in eggs.

NO EVIDENCE TO CONVICT

Friends Gathered at Pat. Lavery's Home and Drinks Were Served

OFFICER HEARD OATHS

Young Women in the Case Says She Swears When Vexed

The case of Patrick Lavery, Jr., charged with supplying liquor to a girl, under the age of 21 years, was heard before Magistrate Dumble this morning. Lavery entered a plea of "not guilty."

The girl's mother gave evidence to the effect that the defendant was a nephew of her's and a cousin of the girl in question. Her daughter went to the home of Patrick Lavery on Lock Street on Sunday and came home in what appeared to be a perfectly sober condition. The girl is seventeen and is not according to her knowledge, in the habit of drinking intoxicating liquor.

Detective Meagher stated that he was called to the home of the girl last Sunday evening and by her language, every other word of which was an oath, he knew she was intoxicated. When he arrested Patrick Lavery at his home he was very drunk.

Has the Habit.

The young woman created quite a sensation when she claimed that she was perfectly sober last Sunday evening and if she were boisterous, that was nothing unusual for she swears anytime when vexed. She acknowledged going to her cousin's home and saw John Swanson and Fred Allen drinking beer, with her cousin. The latter's wife was also drinking. The girl claimed that she had one glass of beer which Fred Allen handed her.

John Swanson gave evidence to the effect that he paid for the keg and went down Saturday night and stayed there till arrested on Sunday evening. He gave the money to "Scotty" Bell who bought the keg. He denied seeing the girl, in question, drinking.

His Worship in reviewing the evidence stated that it looked as though the keg was brought to Lavery's for a drunken spree and the girl who happened to be present had some of it, which although morally wrong, was not so in the eyes of the law. Hence he could not convict the defendant.

PATRIOTIC TRIP BY THE SONS OF ENGLAND

Proceeds of the Excursion on Saturday for Hospital Ship

Lansdowne Lodge, Sons of England, are to the fore with action that should add considerably to the fund for the hospital ship. The lodge has decided to add the proceeds of their excursion on Saturday afternoon to the hospital ship fund, and they hope that the outing will be largely patronized.

The management of the Stoney Lake Navigation Co. has placed the steamer Stoney Lake at the disposal of the lodge, at a greatly reduced rate. The Grand Opera House orchestra will supply the music gratis, and J. J. Turner and Sons will furnish decorations free of charge.

The tickets are 50 cents for adults and 25 cents for children. The boat will leave George Street wharf at 1.30 and the Street Railway wharf at 2 p.m., bound for Jubilee and Harwood.

Farewell to Members.

The last meeting of the lodge brought about considerable enthusiasm. Four of the members—V. Gifford, J. Aspey, G. N. Curtis and W. G. Ellis—had volunteered for active service, and their fellow lodge members joined in giving them a fitting send-off.

Another member, A. E. Miller, and several others are already on their way to the front.

Insure the Volunteers.

Secretary Oke, who has returned from the Supreme Lodge in Windsor, brought back the announcement that all members volunteering for overseas service would be kept in good standing in their respective lodge, and also that each would be insured at $1,000.

THE CITY COUNCIL AND WORKINGMAN

Knowing that you have the interest of the city and its people at heart, I write the following, from which I trust prompt action may follow, and hope that you will add your remarks thereon, which may have considerable influence in obtaining the desired end. The Council, if they could hear the remarks made of them as to their apparent unbusinesslike proceedings and what seems "a don't care" sort of style respecting the working man of the city, would not feel flattered. The private opinion of them is that they won't take any action because they cannot see any gain for themselves. If such is the case, it is a crying shame, and it is up to those of the Council who really mean business to see that such a state of affairs is done away with at once. What reason is there that work is not started for the unemployed? The excuse is no funds. There is no earthly reason for this, as if money is required it could be procured through our member from the Government. The Premier would guarantee to sanction any such proposal, knowing it would be cheaper in the end than having to supply food, etc. Who of the unemployed wishes charity? It is a crime to force the same on them. Now is the time to put everything in good shape ready for when the war is over, for the boom that must surely follow, and not leave it, as is the usual way, for the good times to come and be unprepared. What reason is there that factories should not be built and started in the manufacture of articles that we have need to import? Then there is work on the streets—and it will be admitted by all that much improvement is necessary — which might give considerable employment. Besides this, there are many more avenues of employment which the Council might create for those now requiring it. Another way to help those out of work would be to have all of the 57th Regiment who have not gone to the front, to be in barracks, on pay, ready for any emergency, and you may be assured that an emergency does exist; the whole world is being drawn gradually into the war, and we in Peterborough should be prepared.

Yours truly,
CITIZEN.

Albert Smoke Gets Double Dose

Fined $20 for Drunkenness and $10 for Assault.

Magistrate Dumbe resumed his customary seat this morning, after a short vacation, and he was greeted by five members of the booze-fighting brigade. The usual fine of two dollars was imposed.

John Swanson, a blacklister, contributed five times that amount for falling from grace.

William Smoke, an Indian from Chemong, pleaded guilty to being drunk in a local option district, and was assessed $20 and costs, amounting to $33.31.

Smoke was also charged with assaulting Peter McCue, the Indian constable, when he went to arrest him. On this charge he was fined $10.

Asked where he got his liquor, Smoke stated that he was standing on the corner of Georg and Hunter streets when a fellow "hit him up for the price of a beer," and when Smoke responded, the stranger offered to buy him liquor, and, grasping the opportunity, he gave him two dollars, in return for which he brought him a bottle. The stranger told him to wait and he would come back with the other bottle. Smoke waited for two hours, but his newly made acquaintance didn't show up. All he knew about the stranger was that he wore a military belt.

INDIAN NOT GUILTY.

Edward Johnston, of Chemong, appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning, charged with indecent exposure. He was found not guilty.

SOME EXPERIMENTS WITH AUTUMN SOWN CROPS

Three hundred and forty-three farmers throughout Ontario conducted experiments with autumn sown crops during the last year. Reports have been received from thirty-nine counties and districts throughout Ontario. Those sending the greatest number of reports were Nipissing, Rainy River, Northumberland, Huron, Simcoe, and Lennox. The average results of the carefully conducted co-operative experiments with autumn-sown crops are here presented in a concise form.

Winter Wheat.

Five varieties of winter wheat were distributed last autumn to those farmers who wished to test some of the leading varieties on their own farms.

The Imperial Amber, which occupies second place in the average of nineteen years' results of fourteen varieties tested at the College, occupies first place throughout Ontario in 1914. The American Banner, the only white wheat included in this experiment, comes second. It closely resembles in appearance the Dawson's Golden Chaff. The Crimean Red, although a rather weak strawed variety, is a good yielder, and produces grain of excellent quality.

Winter Rye.

In the autumn of 1913 the Mammoth White winter rye and the Imperial Amber winter wheat were distributed to be tested under uniform conditions. The average results show that the Imperial Amber winter wheat surpassed the Mammoth White winter rye by a yield of 83.2 pounds of grain per acre. In experiments throughout Ontario for seven years the Mammoth White surpassed the Common variety of winter rye by an annual average of practically four bushels per acre.

Winter Emmer and Winter Barley.

A comparative test of winter emmer and winter barley has been made throughout Ontario in each of the past five years. The average results for the three years previous to 1913 showed that the winter emmer gave 1,8[illegible] the winter barley 1,812 pounds [illegible] grain per acre. The average [illegible] of an experiment conducted [illegible] farms in 1914 show that the [illegible] barley gave 1,480 pounds and the winter emmer 720 pounds per acre. The winter emmer was quite badly winter killed.

Hairy Vetches and Winter Rye for Fodder.

In each of the past three years, hairy vetches and winter rye have been compared as fodder crops in the co-operative experiments. Four good reports of this experiment were received in each of the past three years. In 1913 and again in 1914 the winter rye produced a greater yield per acre than the hairy vetches in each of the separate tests. The low yield of the hairy vetches is due to the fact that the crop was badly winter killed.

Fertilizers With Winter Wheat.

In the co-operative experiments with different fertilizers applied in the autumn to winter wheat, the average yields of grain per acre for eight years were as folows: Mixed Fertilizer, 23.5 bushels; Nitrate of Soda, 22.5 bushels; Muriate of Potash, 21.5 bushels, and Superphosphate, 21.2 bushels. On similar land, Cow Manure, at the rate of 20 tons per acre, gave an average yield of 25.8 bushels per acre, and the land which received neither fertilizers nor manure gave an average of 18.1 bushels per acre. The Superphosphate was applied at the rate of 320 pounds and the Muriate of Potah and the Nitrate of Soda each 160 pounds per acre. The Mixed Fertilizer consisted of one-third of the quantity of each of the other three fertilizers here mentioned. In the past two years the fertilizer experiment with winter wheat was the same as in other years, except that the fertilizers were applied in the spring instead of in the autumn of the year. From the spring applications the land which received the Mixed Fertilizer gave the highest average yield, and the unfertilized land the lowest average yield of grain. The cost of fertilizers used in this experiment would be approximately four to five dollars per acre.

In another experiment, Nitrate of Soda increased the yield of wheat more than Common Salt when applied either in the autumn or in the spring.

Distribution of Material.

As long as the supply lasts, material will be distributed free of charge in the order in which the applications are received from Ontario farmers wishing to experiment and to report the results of any one of the following tests: 1, three varities of Winter Wheat; 3, one variety of Winter Rye and one of Winter Wheat; 3, spring aplications of five fertilizers with Winter Wheat; 4, autumn and spring applications of nitrate of soda and common salt with Winter Wheat; 5, Winter Emmer and Winter Barley; 6, Hairy Vetches and Winter Rye as fodder crops. The size of each plot is to be one rod wide by two rods long. Fertilizers will be sent by express for Number 4 this autumn and for Number 3 next spring. All seed will be sent by mail except that for Number four, which wil accompany the fertilizers.

SHOE POLISHER.

Homemade Article That Will Keep the Boots Spic and Span.

It is not always convenient to carry a box of polish in one's traveling bag, but a "strip polisher," which can neither upset nor smudge the contents of one's bag, answers the purpose quite as well for a short journey. In fact, it's not a bad thing to have tucked in the corner of one's bedroom shoe box at home.

To make the polisher take a strip of velvet or plush about four inches wide and eighteen inches long and attach to the ends two little sticks, round or square, about a half inch thick. The sticks should be given a coat of glue and then rolled into each end of the cloth sufficiently to cover the wood with the material.

This is to keep the sticks from slipping out of the open ends.

Then sew the sticks in tightly to keep them from being pulled out when the polisher is being used. Have the shoes polished before leaving home, and for several days one can bring them to a bright polish by simply rubbing the polisher back and forth over them. For polishing the backs and heels, place the strip back of the shoe and rub it briskly back and forth by pulling first one handle end and then the other toward you—just as the shoeblack does. The right side of the velvet or plush should always, of course, be next the shoe.

CUCUMBER SANDWICHES.

Take one cupful of cream, whipped stiff; one small cucumber, cut very fine; three teaspoonfuls of powdered gelatin, salt to taste, also paprika to taste, five tablespoonfuls of vinegar. Soak the gelatin in as little cold water as possible and dilute in as little hot water as possible. Mix together and set on ice to cool. Then spread on thin slices of bread.

Moss Bread.

Along the shores of the Columbia river a kind of bread is made by the Indians from a moss that grows on the spruce fir tree. This moss is prepared by placing it in heaps, sprinkling it with water and permitting it to ferment. Then it is rolled into balls as big as a man's head, and these are baked in pits.

His Standard.

Young Bride (to waiter)—Waiter, my husband has been here very frequently lately. I hope he's all right, eh? Waiter—Oh, yes; he never has more than three glasses of beer. If he were not happy he'd surely drink six.—Fliegende Blatter.

Friendship is a strong and habitual inclination of two persons to promote the good and happiness of each other.—Meredith.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

There is here and there a person who makes a dazzling success as a failure.

Philosophy is the output of a man who isn't personally interested.

Being able and willing is a combination that is hard to beat.

The emotional temperament is too apt to require liquid inspiration to be entirely dependable.

Being able to see it first is what has put many a man to the front.

The man behind the gun may be all right, but it is the push behind the man that really counts.

Getting used to a thing is energizing and exciting anyway.

Summer styles in earthquakes are not so extreme and strenuous as summer styles in millinery.

Nothing like a pull to push things along.

A timely check on a bank frequently prevents an untimely check to a young man's career.

Neglected.

All eyes are fixed upon the one
Who wears the dress of fluffy white.
Admiring friends arise to say
In every way that she's all right.
But who has smiles or cheering words
Or hopes for him a future great,
Who boosts along in any way—
The poor, forlorn boy graduate?

They come with posies in a bunch
To shower upon the favored lass
Who boldly down the platform walks,
Admired and envied by her class.
Her brother, though his head be full,
Is hardly in the social swim.
The audience forgets to bring
A lemon even round to him.

Fame may be waiting for the lad,
Be loafing just around the way,
The world may have rewards for him,
But that is not his special day.
The essay that he reads may make
The whiskers of the trusts to curl,
But no one has a thought for him.
All eyes are on the pretty girl.

Neglected in the bunch he sits,
A thorn with roses all around.
He ventures not to move a limb,
Nor would he dare to make a sound.
For him it is a torture day,
For them a long remembered date,
For no one pauses to console
The poor, forlorn boy graduate.

No Pay.

"Well, sir," brusquely inquired the girl's father, "what can I do for you?"

"Why—er—I called, sir," stammered the timid suitor, "to see if—er—you would give assent to my marriage to your daughter."

"Not a cent, sir; not a cent. Good day."

Woman's World

Mrs. Pennybacker, Women's Club Leader and Philanthropist.

MRS. PERCY V. PENNYBACKER.

Mrs. Pennybacker is a southern woman by birth. She first saw the light at Petersburg, Va. Her father was the Rev. J. B. Hardwicke, D. D. She was educated at the high school in Leavenworth, Kan., and at the State Normal school in Huntsville, Tex. She taught school for fourteen years, an experience that was the foundation for her great interest in educational work. She was married in 1884 to Percy V. Pennybacker, a leading educator of Texas. The marriage was a very happy one, but in 1899 he died. Administering her home affairs and looking after her children did not occupy her time to the exclusion of intellectual interests. She has always been an enthusiastic clubwoman. Through the woman's club she believes much educational work may be accomplished and wide social service rendered.

She is a gifted writer and speaker. Her history of Texas is a standard work on that subject. SUMMER AWNINGS.

They Should Be Attractive as Well as Convenient.

The style and color of awnings should be studied so that a pleasing effect from a distance will be the result of their use. Striped awnings are generally popular, especially those of green and blue, with white and buff with red. These stripes are to be found in several widths. A brown and buff combination is a wise selection for the brown bungalow or shingled house in a rambling style of architecture.

A recent departure which promises to be more than popular, even though it is more expensive, is the plain white canvas on which the stripe or design is painted. This style allows a chance for individuality of taste. When the design on white or cream is used the under side is usually painted over with a restful soft green. Authorities say that these painted canvas shades last longer than the ordinary coarsely woven awnings.

In ordering awnings one is apt to decide on a stripe and not designate the width. If a house is of extensive dimensions and stands at the end of a long avenue, drive or walk and is well surrounded with foliage a wide stripe is most effective, while a smaller house with a limited approach calls for a narrow stripe or even a plain material.

Several new awning devices have been brought out. One for use with the casement window which opens outward has a frame with an extra rib or rod near the top, which holds the canvas high and gives freedom to the window.

Dyeing White Shoes.

One way of prolonging the service of white shoes after they have been cleaned many times is to make them tan colored. They can be made a pretty brown by applying saffron. Mix ten drops of saffron with three teaspoonfuls of olive oil. Clean the shoes well before applying the mixture, as all dark spots will show. Apply with a piece of flannel, and after two coats they will look equal to new.

A Sanitary Grater.

The glass grater is new. It is a roughly pebbled slab of glass screwed to a flat back of wood, making it very convenient to handle, as the wood does not slip in holding it. It washes very easily and is pronounced much more sanitary than the old fashioned tin grater.

WHEN YOU EAT HAM

Baking In the Oven Is the Best Way to Cook It.

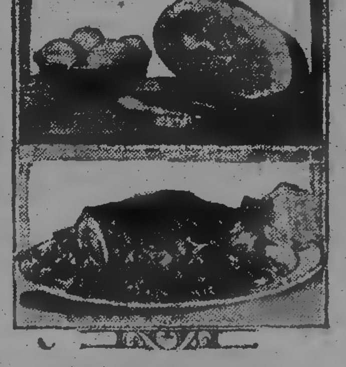
DESTROYS DISEASE GERMS.

It Also Gives the Meat a Fine Flavor, Besides Making It More Wholesome. Some Suggestions For Preparing It Palatably In This Way.

Pork is served frequently in cold weather because of its heat producing qualities. Ham, owing to the fact that it has been cured and smoked, is one of the most wholesome forms of pork. It should never be eaten raw, however. To eat it safely the ham should be well cooked before serving. The fat of pork is especially indigestible; but, owing to its leanness, ham is less open to objection on this score. Pork of any kind requires about five hours for digestion. It is therefore best served in the middle of the day or a long time before retiring.

Ham should be boiled eighteen minutes to each pound of the meat, provided it is placed into boiling water immediately. If the ham is placed first in cold water and gradually brought to the boiling point it should be boiled at the same rate, but a half hour should be deducted to allow for the time until the water begins to boil. In other words, the ham should be left in the water after it begins to boil eighteen times its weight minus thirty.

Ham is more desirable in the baked form than in the boiled. It is baked fifteen minutes to the pound—eighteen if you like the ham very well done. The ham should be first washed in cold water. Then take baking soda, sprinkle it over the ham and scrub with a small brush. Rinse it in cold water and trim it.



PREPARING HAM FOR BAKING.

Ham may be boiled before baking. After this has been done let it remain for an hour in the liquor in which it was cooked. Then take it out, let it get thoroughly cold and remove the skin. Rub the upper part of the ham with white of egg and sprinkle over it the sifted crumbs of dry bread, putting them on to form a crust a quarter of an inch thick. Sprinkle with pepper and set in the oven until the crust is brown and nicely shortened by the oozing fat. This will be in about a half hour. The ham should be served cold.

If you do not wish to bake a whole ham try the following:

Take two pounds of ham, cut three inches thick, half a cupful of grape juice, a cupful of boiling water, two cloves and an inch stick of cinnamon. Freshen the ham for two hours in cold water, drain, place in a baking dish with the other ingredients, cover and bake till tender, about one and a half hours. Remove from the liquor, add to it two tablespoonfuls of chopped raisins and thicken with half a tablespoonful of arrowroot dissolved in a little cold water.

Spiced baked ham is nice. Parboil a young ham for about an hour and a half. Lift the ham out of the vessel and pour cold water over it. Remove the skin and rub into the ham a handful of brown sugar. Dot with cloves, sprinkle with breadcrumbs and bake until tender.

Stuffed ham is a fine dish. Remove the bones from a ten pound ham, rub the inside with salt, pepper and sage and fill the space from which the bone was taken with a highly seasoned dressing. Fasten together, place in a pan, rind side down, and add a little water. Bake, basting often. An hour before serving rub the surface with sugar. It should be baked for about four hours. Serve hot or cold.

Ham baked with cider is especially palatable. The Boston cooking school gives the following recipe for preparing it: Let a choice ham stand covered with water overnight; drain and set over the fire in a fresh supply of cold water; let it heat slowly to the boiling point; then simmer for four hours. Remove the ham to a deep baking pan, take off the skin and pour over it one pint of the liquid in which it was cooked and one pint of hot cider; baste each ten minutes and let cook until the bones of the skin may be turned. Serve hot with a dish of spinach chopped and mixed with a small quantity of cream sauce, about half a cupful to a generous plat of spinach.

For sauce skim off the fat from the liquid in the baking pan. Take a pint of this liquid, one cupful of rich brown stock and thicken with one-fourth of a cupful of flour cooked in one-fourth of a cupful of butter. Season with salt and pepper and stir in one-fourth of a cupful of currant jelly.

The first part of the cooking may be done overnight in a fireless cooker. Apple sauce, apple and celery salad or cabbage salad may be served with the baked ham.

Points for Mothers

Embroidered Carriage Covers.

The embroidered articles for baby should be washable, for they will frequently need freshening up. The prettiest white articles are for the baby's crib or perambulator. The little pillows are always fascinating things to make, and the embroidered sheets to match are a suggestion which many needlewomen will welcome. They will make an appropriate gift and one which will not be duplicated as frequently as many other dainty articles.

Pique and linen are the favored materials for making lingerie carriage covers. When the former material is used it is necessary to cut the piece for the underflap and seam it again on the under side, for both sides of the pique are not alike. This flap is drawn over the strap and holds the cover in position. The carriage cover should be cut long enough to extend over the end of the carriage. The width should be ample also.

A simple design is preferable for the cover. Anything elaborate is not considered good taste. A combination of eyelet and solid embroidery is charming for the cover of linen or pique. The edge should be scalloped and buttonhole stitched.

The daisy design is always appropriate for the cover of linen, and the festooned garland of small flowers and foliage looped up with bowknots or ribbons is a design generally admired.

Fancy Crib Sheets.

The tiny crib sheets can be had with hemstitched ends, and in this case it is only necessary to add the embroidery design. If you desire a more elaborate design scallop and buttonhole stitch the top. The top of the sheet is turned down to a depth of eight inches and the design embroidered with satin stitch. Many pretty effects can be obtained with dots. One sheet has a border of interlaced rings formed of dots of graduated sizes. The edge of the top is buttonhole stitched. A second design is an arrangement of daisies, while a third has a gracefully trailing vine along the hemstitched border.

For Outdoor Amusement.

Sand interests every child. It can usually be secured from a nearby builder. Tincups, molds in different sizes, several of each size, can be purchased for a small sum.

The sand should be boarded off in one corner of an outdoor shelter, and as the child experiments and creates with it he is rapidly gaining a sense of proportion. He sees that large molds will not fit into small ones, nor will their contents make a uniform border unless they are placed with those of a like size. Buckets and shovels of varying sizes are also excellent play toys for sand.

A Traveling Bassinet.

When it is necessary to take baby on a long journey he may be made very comfortable in a bassinet built of the traveling baskets or suit cases which have two sections, one fitted over the other. Line each half with quilted cotton sateen. The deeper piece will answer for a cradle. When it is in use the other, if placed over the end lengthwise, will make a nice little shield from drafts. In traveling from place to place pack the baby's belongings in the basket, and carry it by means of a shawl strap. It may be opened up for use on the train or boat.

Exercises With Clay.

Colored clay that is very reasonable in price is most useful in amusing a child. Place a low table and small chair in the shelter, and on this he will never tire of fashioning new forms with the clay. The big muscles need constant and proper exercise. Clay gives this to perfection. Without actually helping him suggest pretty forms for him to make on the clay, as baskets, rosettes and borders made of balls. Sometimes make him a model and then ask him to imitate. Imitation is the basis of all teaching.

Summer Rompers.

A crawling youngster of a year can get about as dirty as any little four footed pig. If the rompers are of white they will be a sight to behold in five minutes; if they are dark blue the dirt will be there just the same, only not visible. A compromise calls for a thin quality of material that easily washes out. No ironing is needed. If such garments are dropped into a big tub of water kept for the purpose they may be hung out dripping, but clean. They will dry in a couple of hours and be ready for wear.

Curing Crooked Eyes.

Crosseye or squint in children is sometimes caused by a peculiarity or slight malformation of the interior of the eye. Take the child to an oculist at once. The wearing of spectacles will probably cure the trouble, or a slight operation may be needed. Do not let childish timidity or your own nerves stand in the way of proper treatment.

Buttons on Shoes.

When buying buttoned boots for the children get the shopman to put the buttons on with patent fasteners before sending them home. Boots with buttons off are always untidy.

A friend in need seldom hesitates to tell you so.

WHY DO TOPS SPIN?

Even Scientists Would Like To Know More About It.

Few boys ever stop to think why their tops spin. Neither do the grown-ups who pause to watch the top-spinning which is so universally popular every spring.

Yet engineers, astronomers, physicists and inventors would all like to know more than they do about spinning tops. A great many matters of the utmost importance to the human race depend on finding out all we can about this subject.

The earth on which we live is a top. So are Mars, the North Star, the sun itself, and all the other celestial bodies. It is even suspected that atoms and electrons are spinning tops. The dirigible torpedo is a top, the monorail car is a top, the bullet sped by a gun is a top.

A new form of compass, called the "top" or gyroscopic compass gives direction without being affected by the iron of a battleship or the rolling and pitching of the steamer.

All speed machinery has "top" action, which must be reckoned with. Rotary engines, turbines, Diesel engines and all machines which drive fly wheels and propellers have the spinning top behavior.

Submarines, aeroplanes and dirigible balloons would be more stable and less dangerous, if we could only solve the mystery of a spinning top's action.

The gyroscope is a toy top within a tin rim. It is made of a heavy rimmed metal fly wheel mounted in a frame. Friction is reduced to a minimum by the spindle rotating on ball bearings. Thus a great velocity is possible. Engineers and inventors learned from boys to spin this gyroscopic top. They are always hoping for a clear understanding of the spin.

The gyroscopic action of the paddle wheels of a steamer exerts a steadying effect upon the vessel at the expense of her steering qualities. The effect of this is to cause the steamer to run away to starboard when acted upon by a cross sea. This makes her turn to starboard when the sea would be expected to send her the other way.

On the other hand, when a paddle steamer is steered to port she heels over to starboard because of the top-spinning action of her paddles. This causes the wheel on the starboard side to become more deeply immersed in the sea than the port one, and the steering is exaggerated.

The top-spinning action of the fly wheel of an automobile is interesting, too. The axis of an automobile fly wheel runs backward and forward and the flywheel crosswise. If you stand behind an auto you see the wheel revolving as do the hands of a clock. If a man or a woman in a car tries to turn the auto toward the left the flywheel tries to spin its way upward. In consequence a "couple" as it is called, acts on the car and throws the weight of the machine on the back wheels.

When an automobile turns to the right the weight is thrown on the front wheels because of this top-spinning action of the flywheel. Many accidents to motor cars are due to interference with this top-spinning action when turning a corner sharply or at great speed.

Turning a motor boat, a ship's head and an aeroplane, as well as the rolling and pitching of great vessels all bring about unlooked-for catastrophes by virture of this mysteriour top-spinning.

Man and His Tailor.

A man can be measured to the best advantage, tailors say, away from a glass. Standing before a mirror he is almost certain to throw out his chest, if he does not habitually carry it so, and take an attitude that he would like to have rather than the one he commonly holds, whereas the tailor wants him, as the portrait painter wants his subject—in his natural pose and manner. With the man in that attitude the tailor can bring his art to bear, if that is required, in the overcoming of any physical defect and produce clothes that will give the best attainable effect upon the figure as they will be actually worn.

Whispering.

What is the most arresting noise—the human shout, the fire bell, the toot or scream of the motorcar? Not a bit. A doctor will tell you that the human whisper is the wakener. A patient may sleep through all the noises but that, which some people think secret, in a railway train. And the first thing a nurse has to learn is not to whisper, for you can waken the soundest sleeper with that when a conscientious carpenter's hammer would leave him sound asleep.—London Standard.

No Fiction.

It was a clerk in a bookstore of whom a prim matron demanded a book for her son. "No fiction, please," she explained, "but absolute, literal truth, without unnecessary verbiage or absurdly fanciful pictures."

"Well, madam" — the bookseller paused, his eye running over his shelves; then, with a flash of inspiration, he took down a volume. "I should think this might meet your requirements," he said, and he handed her a popular geometry.

An Easy Problem.

Prove that 9 taken from 6 and 10 taken from 9 and 50 taken from 40 when all added together is only 6. Easy when you know how. Take IX (9) from SIX and you have S left; take X (10) from IX (9) and you have I left; take L (50) from XL (40) and you have X left, and when you add S and I and X together you have SIX, haven't you?

Unappreciated Talent.

Tramp—Yes, mum, I was once quite a musician, an' I guess I ain't forgot all about it yet.

Mrs. Housetop—Indeed! Well, you can take the ax and chop a few cords out of that woodpile.

About the time the average man learns how to live he quits the game.

THE CLOTHES CLOSET.

Method of Keeping Garments Nice and Economizing Space.

The usual method of preparing a closet for the proper keeping of wearing apparel is to place a row of hooks along the back and ends, with possibly a long rod extending from one end to the other, from which hangers may be suspended.

As we all know, this means that garments that hang in the rear are not very easy to get at. Only those on the rod are in evidence. For the others we grope blindly, grasping a skirt to discover whether it is the blue serge, the gray voile or the white mohair we want. And as for the things suspended on the hooks behind, they might as well be in trunks and boxes as far as distinguishing one from the other goes.

Now some clever woman has found that by fixing a swinging rack—very much on the order of the towel rack, a dozen arms extending friendly ends out for holding garments—the capacity as well as the convenience is trebled. These arms are made of light wood, so they can be doubled, with light clamps on the outer ends that slip in a groove, holding fast anything placed between. In this way half a dozen pairs of trousers or the same number of skirts, hung by folded belts, may be nicely and neatly kept in order on one rack, and if there are two, one at either end of the closet or one with longer arms directly in the center at the back, it will be such a comfort to find double the amount of room with garments all visible without extra light of any sort.

Himself being judge, any man is somewhat above the average.

ALL EYES TURNED ON BOSTON BRAVES

Stallings Team the Sensation of the Season

New York, Aug. 19.—Major league baseball interest this week centres in the sensational spurt of the Boston Braves toward the top of the National league standing.

George Stallings' men, whose steady upward trend has been watched with more or less nervous apprehension by the clubs ahead for more than a month past, outdid the expectations of their warmest admirers in the closing days of the week by running the champion New Yorks off their feet, routing them in a three-game series. The Braves are now only three and a half games behind the McGrawites and playing at a clip which bids fair to land them at the top in short order, as Giants appear to be wobbling badly in all departments.

May Win Yet.

Boston did something none of the rivals of the Giants has been able to do this season. The champions staved off Pittsburg's early attack, blasted the hopes of Cincinnati and turned back the Chicagos when they challenged for the leadership. None stood the test when pitted against the Giants, team for team.

The contrary was the case with the Braves, however. Their feat at the Polo Grounds in the three-day battle has won them the admiration of the baseball public and inspired a confidence in most quarters that they have the staying powers to make them a decided factor in the race from now on, and quite possibly to prove the winners.

Boston, however, must needs to keep up its pace, not only to gain on the Giants, but to keep its second place intact. St. Louis and Chicago are tied, only two games behid and a spurt by either with a slump by the Braves would do damage to the Bostonian hopes. The rest of the teams are still in the ruck, with Cincinnati now occupying the cellar position.

Cinch For Mackmen.

The American League race at this date is very much an affair of the Athletics, which the rest comparatively nowhere. There seems little prospect of any club preventing the Mackmen, with their eleven games lead at this comparatively late stage of the season, from participating in the next world's series. They have won twenty-five out of their last twenty-eight games. Boston and Washington are now fighting for the second position with the Red Sox having the better of it at present. Detroit has been slumping, with both Chicago and St. Louis picking up again.

The girl who doesn't know she is pretty isn't and the man who doesn't know he is a fool is.

COMMENT

As You Like It

(Hamilton Spectator.)

As is to be expected, the London crowd are beginning to howl. Already the cry that Shaughnessy has seventeen players in uniform and has played some fifteen more games than London is being raised. It is true that the Ottawa manager has made some shifts to his line-up in the past two or three weeks in an effort to make the last month of the season at least interesting. For this effort he is to commended. A month ago the struggle for the pennant appeared to have lost all interest with the Cockneys so far out in front that it did not look as if they could be headed. Then Ottawa got busy, with the result that the fans around the circuit have something to interest them and keep their attention riveted on the league doings. No fault can be found with a manager who stirs up interest in a pennant race during the dog days of August.

As to the growl about the additional number of games played by Ottawa. In the first place there is no room for such a howl. Every club in the circuit knew when the season opened that Ottawa and Erie would play more games than the other teams, for the simple reason that these two clubs would be playing Sunday games on their home lots. All the clubs welcomed this fact, however, with a mad scramble being made by some of them, especially London, to get in and pick up some of the big gate money which was to be the benefit to be derived from the Sunday fixtures. London was satisfied with this condition as long as London was in front, but the minute that London's leadership is threatened, along comes one of those childish howls which is to be expected almost daily between now and the end of the season.

The opinion down this way is that Ottawa is going to jolt the Cockneys just as they were jolted last year, and the sincere wish of almost every Hamilton fan is that it is done in the very best of style.

Hitting the Pipe.

When Jones got home the other night he found the family in a panic and the house being flooded from a burst water pipe. The first thing he did was to scold his wife for not having sense enough to go down to the cellar and hammer up the supply pipe to prevent the water from escaping. Then he went downstairs and was soon heard hammering vigorously. After some minutes' strenuous work, giving one last mighty blow, he asked, "How is it now?"

"There is no difference in the flow of the water," his wife calmly replied, "but as the light has gone out I very much fear you have hammered up the gas pipe."

Remember Benefits Only.

To have a memory for benefits, not for offenses—these are the two pivots on which friendship may rest strong and abiding, friendships which pass to the greatness of noble minds. Be not like those who are more hurt and offended by an unkind word or by a word meant in fun and which escaped, as it were, from a cloister, unlocked for a moment by the tongue—yes, more hurt than they ever were pleased and comforted by a thousand renewed proofs of loving friendship.—Petrarch.

A Spider's Four Webs.

Two thousand nine hundred silkworms are required to produce one pound of silk, but it takes 27,000 spiders to produce one pound of web. Spiders have four paps for spinning their threads, each pap having 1,000 holes, and the fine web itself is the union of 4,000 threads. No spider spins more than four webs, and when the fourth is destroyed they seize on the webs of others.

Limited Knowledge.

Betty—What is the luckiest day to be born on?

Jack—Can't say. I've only tried one.

Especially.

Moralist—The outsider who buys stocks is a gambler, pure and simple.

Ticker—Especially simple.

REAL TROUBLE.

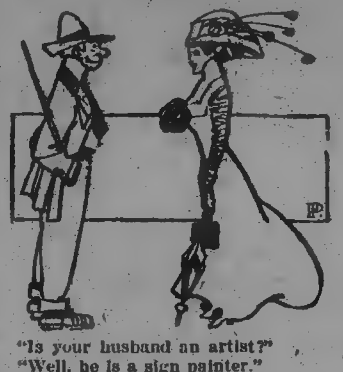
Oh, speak not of trouble and prate not of woe,
  Though thickly they come to your mitt;
Don't mention distress, though it falls more or less
  The earmarks to bear of a hit!
The worries that come from your dealings with men
  Like molehills to mountains appear,
As pygmies seem other annoyances when
  The typewriter gets on its ear.

Perhaps you are writing a beautiful ode
  On spring, which is always a mark,
And getting a twist with your pliable wrist
  That flashes the genuine spark,
And then without warning or notice by mail
  Perhaps as the mooring draws near
And as you are making the harbor full sail
  The typewriter gets on its ear.

The letters make only one-half of the mark—
  The ribbon has gone on the blink,
The keys commence sticking, the tension is kicking,
  Your fingers are covered with ink.
You call for a screwdriver, borrow a wrench,
  Examine it bottom and top,
And straightway your table resembles a bench
  That blooms in a carpenter shop.

Of all of the meanness, contemptible, low,
  And calling for words that are strong,
A typewriter lame is severely the same
  When things in its inwards go wrong.
And when you have put it together again
  You find it is still out of gear.
Oh, it is the mischief and several things when
  The typewriter gets on its ear.

No Class.



"Is your husband an artist?"

"Well, he is a sign painter."

"That is hardly art."

"I am afraid not, because there is a good living in it."

And She Worried.

"I'd go through fire and water for you," he said.

"Yes," she sadly replied as she got a whiff of his breath, "but you don't seem to be able to give up firewater for me. I told you I'd break our engagement the next time you came around in this condition. Go!"

Later the poor girl worried, for she had an idea that she might have driven him to the dogs.

Her Opinion.

"What do you think of me?" chirped the rah-rah boy.

"What do you think of yourself?" replied the spinster.

"I am fresh and unspoiled," proudly announced the rah-rah boy.

"There is no doubt about your being fresh," quietly replied the spinster, preparing to move away.

Raised a Doubt.

"What are you looking so blue about, old man?"

"I used to think I was as bright as other people."

"Ain't you?"

"Well, they accepted me on the jury this morning."

Earning His Board.

"Will your dog bite?"

"Of course he will."

"Then why do you keep him?"

"You didn't suppose a dog was a parlor ornament, did you?"

Natural Gift.

He—That historian had a marvelous memory for details.

She—They say he inherited it from his mother. She was the greatest gossip of her time.

The First Offense.

He loved her more than treasure,
  Than could be told by tongue,
So you can take his measure
  And guess that he was young.

The Point of View.

Brother William—Yes; Deacon Jones is a good man.

Sporty Ike—Who did he ever lick?

Just Good Business.

"He claims to have no vices, and yet he stole an umbrella."

"He calls that a virtue."

LATEST NEWS PARAGRAPHED

Eight hundred French reservists sailed from Montreal this morning, according to information given at the French consulate.

News from the British gold coast of Africa says the British forces of that colony, whose capital is Accra, have taken some German prisoners and captured two trains in Togoland.

The steamship Victoria, from Nome, Alaska, brought $200,000 of gold bullion to Seattle yesterday from the placer mines of Seward peninsula. The gold output this year will be large.

Francis Drake, an unmarried man who has resided in Belleville for many years, was yesterday morning found dead in his room. Apoplexy was the cause of death. He was 63 years of age.

Four British steamers, the Indiana, Carlton, Astraca and Wellbury, cleared at Galveston, Texas, yesterday for London, Liverpool and Bordeaux with approximately 860,000 bushels of wheat on board.

In a fit of despondency Mrs. Margaret McIntyre, of London, Ont., a widow, aged 78, threw herself from a second-storey window of a rooming house at 338 Maitland street yesterday afternoon and was almost instantly killed.

A PLACE FOR THE GOAT.

Rough Lands of British Columbia May Rival Switzerland.

British Columbia has for its ensign the wild goat of the mountains signifying that this animal was a typical native well suited to the prevailing conditions. If, asks a contributor to The Victoria Times, the rough lands are the real home of the wild goat, why should the province not be equally a place for the domestic goat?

In the mountainous regions of the Swiss Alps every hotel keeps its herd of domestic milch goats and wealthy tourists go there for health and are supplied at table with this food, which is for that poor country a mine of wealth. If British Columbia had a gold mine producing $3,000,000 a year like the dairy herds of goats in Switzerland, the whole country would be boomed on that account.

We utterly neglect what a thrifty people find their great means of livelihood and are thereby losing a great opportunity for future generations, if not for our own. It may be when the boom in land is over, and we shall be glad to lease to the hard-working Chinaman, the thrifty Hindu, or the economical Jap the high priced lands we now gamble in, that these races (all of whom raise goats in some parts of Asia) will supply us with milk, as they now supply cows' milk from their local dairies around the cities of the west.

This American herd of goats has been bred from the European stock animals, and has supplied a want amongst the humbler tillers of the farm, and the foreign communities of Italians who live in the cities and run dairies which supply goats' milk to people of their own race who have been accustomed to use it. It retails at 12 cents a quart in New York and is used mainly to feed infants and children. If with the high cost of living it be necessary to consider every available source of an economic food supply, there is none that would give such good results as the study and economic use of the goat products and the starting of dairies to supply that food at large centres of population. But in order to do this a new breed and some encouragement might be given to enable the business to live down the ignorance and prejudice under which goat raising has suffered in Canada, and suffers to-day. With the hair of the Angora goat at 24 cents a pound, and an open market in the United States, where large quantities of Angora hair are now used to make warm underclothing; with a call for goat skins for high grade boots and gloves, not to mention the food and milk supply drawn from an animal too long neglected in this country, it is about time some effort were made in a country so fitted by nature as British Columbia for raising goats.

The high price of living offers a sound reason for taking up this question at the present time. From an esthetic point, one looks forward to the time when the tinkling bell of the herd of goats will be heard in the mountains of British Columbia as it is in Switzerland, and valleys will have homesteads of a thrifty race of men who will try to do something after the style of the Swiss peasantry with the rich endowments of nature.

FRASERVILLE

Fraserville, Aug. 19.—Mr. W. A. Kidd has been remodeling his store for the fall trade having an expert from Toronto to rearrange the goods.

Dr. McMoyle of Bracebridge spent a few days with his mother, Mrs. D. McMoyle last week.

A cyclone passed through Fraserville last week blowing down Mr. W. A. Kidd's kitchen and doing damage to the property.

Mr. W. A. Wood has received a large shipment of coal ready for the convenience of the public and also expects several more carloads in the near future.

The rain on Sunday last caused a number of the young men to wash the rubber tires after the evening drive.

Mr. J. Roddy, auctioneer of Fraserville, states that the army worm has become extinct in this locality. He also states it has done little or no damage to the community at large.

Owing to the dry weather and the scarcity of help the oil well in the vicinity of Fraserville has made little or no progress but it is expected that a move in that direction will commence in a few days as the busy season will be over and help will be more plentiful.

Mr. and Mrs. H. McMoyle of Toronto are visiting Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Latimore.

Mr. J. Henry of Fraserville has been repairing and painting his house.

The people of the vicinity of the Otonabee River are being much annoyed by the conduct of the people that make Sunday their outing day. They state it is more like circus day than the Sabbath.

The Rev. Thomas Dodds exchanged pulpits with Rev. Mr. Wickett on Sunday and delivered an excellent discourse.

Miss Hamner has returned home to spend her vacation with her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. J. Hamner.

Mr. W. Bean has made a marked improvement on his property by putting up wire fencing.

SHERIDANS VIEWS ON GERMANY

Among the critical military spectators of the last Franco-Prussian War was General Phil Sheridan, who was with the German head quarters staff, and whose memoirs contain some very interesting pasages relating to his experiences. Sheridan, of course, was primarily a cavalry leader, but he was also one of the most scientific soldiers of his time, and the comments he made upon the German army on the last occasion it took the field against an enemy are of particular interest at the present time. Germans organization and superiority of numbers, and French unpreparedness and the blunders of her officers, were in his opinion, the reasons for the defeat of the French armies. The Prussians did not show that they were superior men. Sheridan says that his own American troops would have done just as well as the Germans in the same conditions, but he exprosed doubt if the Germans would have done as well as the Americans did had they to contend against the conditions that prevailed throughout the Civil War.

War the Same Everywhere.

"Of course,' he says, "I found a good deal to interest and instruct me, yet nowadays war is pretty much the same everywhere, and this one offered no marked exception to my previous experience. . . . Following the operations of the German armies from the battle of Gravolotte to the siege of Paris, I may, in conclusion say that I saw no new military principle developed, whether of strategy or grand tactics, the movements of the different armies and corps being dictated and governed by the same general laws that have so long obtained, simplicity of combination and manoeuvres, and the concentration of a numerically superior force at the vital point.' In other words, the German generals, able as they were, and fresh from their experience against Austria, failed to develop anything new in the handling of troops that was not known to a general whose whole experience had been gained in the United States. They invented nothing, improved nothing, and their victories were due wholly to the previous organizing genius of Moltke, the incredible blunders of their adveraries, and their overwhelming superiority in numbers.

Fine Prussian Infantry.

Of the Prussian infantry Sheridan says:

"The infantry was as fine as I ever saw, the men young and hardy in appearance, and marching always with an elastic stride. The infantry regiment, however, I thought too large — too many men for a colonel to command, unless he has the staff of a general—but this objection may be counterbalanced by the advantages resulting from associating together thus intimately the men from the same district, or county, as we would call it; the celerity of mobilization and, in truth, the very foundation of the German system being based on this local or territorial scheme of recruiting. There was no delay when the call sounded for the march, all turned out promptly, and, while on the road there was very little straggling, only the sick falling out. But on such fine, smooth roads, and with success animating the men from the day they struck the first blow, it could hardly be expected that the columns would not keep well closed up. Then, too, it must be borne in mind that, as already stated, campaigning in France — that is, the marching, camping and subsisting of an army, is an easy matter, very unlike anything we had during the rebellion. To repeat, the country is rich, beautiful and densely populated, subsistence abundant, and the roads all macadamized highways; thus the conditions are altogether different from those existing with us. I think that under the same circumstances our troops would have done as well as the Germans, marched as admirably, made combinations as quickly and accurately, and fought with as much success. I can but conjecture how the Germans would have got along on bottomless roads — or none at all — through the swamps and quicksands of Northern Virginia, from the wilderness of Petersburg, and from Chattanooga to Atlanta and the sea."

Criticism for Cavalry.

General Sheridan was not so favorably impressed by the German cavalry, though he admits that he did not have much opportunity to observe it either on the march or in battle, except in the unfortunate charge at Gravelotte. That engagement showed that its mettle was good and its discipline fair, but served no other useful purpose. Such of it as was not attached to the infantry was organized in divisions and operated in accordance with the old idea of covering the front and flanks of the army, a duty that it thoroughly performed. "But thus directed," he says, "it was in no sense an independent corps, and hence cannot be said to have accomplished anything in the campaign or had a weight or influence at all proportionate to its strength. The method of its employment seems to me a mistake, for, being numerically superior to the French cavalry, had it been massed and manoeuvred independently of the infantry, it could easily have broken up the French communications and done much other work of weighty influence in the prosecution of the war."

Commissariat an Easy Problem.

One great difference between the Franco-Prussian War and the American Civil War was that in the former the soldiers were operating through a densely populated country. It was always possible for the Germans to quarter their troops in villages and require the villagers to provide food and fodder. Hence there was no necessity for camp and garrison equippage, nor enormous provision trains, and the armies were unencumbered by these impediments, which are indispensable when operating in a poor and sparsely populated country. There will be the same great difference between the present war and the last war in which Britain was engaged. In South Africa soldiers and supplies had to be carried half round the world, and a line of land communication kept open of more than 1,000 miles.

Canadians Were Arrested.

Two Nova Scotian lads, one a native of Halifax, of the party of the Canadian cadets aboard H. M. S. Berwick, which arrived at Kingston, Jamaica, recently with refugees from Mexico, played the principal part in a dispute between the Mexican authorities and the British authorities. The cadets, whose names are S. Critchley, son of Capt. T. C. Critchley, Oxford street, Halifax, and Cuthbert Taylor, of Weymouth, were arested by Mexicans when the two were on shore leave and were held by their captors for two days and nights before they were released, at the demand of the British authorities.

The two boys were mistaken by the Mexicans for Americans. The upshot was that the Mexican officer commanding the garrison arrayed himself in full regimentals and made a formal apology to the commander of the Berwick.

"Andy" and the Suffragette.

Andy Broder, the veteran Federal member for Dundas, who took charge of the campaign in Sir James Whitney's county at the recent provincial elections, had a run-in with a suffragette at one of the meetings. The lady wished to know if he was in favor of votes for women. "I am not," replied Andy, with some vehemence. "I think the husband is quite capable of looking after the interests of the wife."

"But supposing he isn't?" put in the fair heckler.

"Then she should get another," was Andy's triumphant retort.

"But you know, Mr. Broder," persisted the disciple of Mrs. Pankhurst, "the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world."

"Yes, I admit that," put in Andy, "but too often the cradle is empty."

That put an end to the dialogue

HAD BAD YEAR

Eastern Fishermen's Record For 1912-13 Shows Large Decrease.

Reports from New Brunswick for last year (1912-13) show that the total marketed value of all fish and fish products amounted to $4,264,054. This falls short of the preceding year's total by $622,103. The decrease is due almost entirely to the collapse of the canned sardine market, which resulted in such low prices that little more than half the preceding year's catch was taken from the weirs. With the exception of lobsters, oysters and clams, on the gulf shore, all the chief kinds of fish gave substantially increased values.

There were 106 fewer men in vessels, 189 fewer in boats, and 187 fewer workers on shore. Boats to the number of 1,087 used gascline as a means of propulsion. This is an increase of 299, in the number of fishing boats now independent to a certain extent of wind and tide.

Nova Scotia reported the total marketed value of the fish and fish products for the year under review at $7,384,055.

This, when compared with the total for the preceding year, shows a decrease amounting to no less than $1,983,495. This big decrease is due principally to a shortage in the catch of cod, haddock, halibut and lobsters; the value of which dropped $934,720, $263,886, 164,872 and $301,935 respectively.

Stormy weather throughout the summer and fall of 1912 made deep-sea fishing more than usually hazardous, and to this alone must be attributed the diminished yield. Compared with the preceding year, there were 123 more men employed on vessels and 431 more in boats; while of fish workers there were 1,672 fewer employed on shore.

The total marketed value of the fisheries of Prince Edward Island for the same year amounted to $1,379,906, which when compared with the preceding year's total ($1,196,396) shows a very considerable increase. A greater lobster catch, together with enhanced prices, added much to the increased total.

The yield of smelts, notwithstanding unfavorable weather conditions, was also greater and produced in value $38,999 more than the catch in the preceding year. The take of clams and quahaugs, on the other hand, was smaller, and resulted in the value of these being diminished by $12,432.

Quebec province marketed in the year under review fish valued at $1,988,241, which is $120,105 greater than the total for the preceding year. The lobster catch was less than that of the preceding year; but the higher price per case brought the value in both years about equal. There is little difference in the catch of cod, but the enhanced price of the dried product gave over $70,000 of an increased value.

During the year under review the two steamers of the whaling station at Seven Islands, captured 90 whales; as against 45 in the preceding year.

However political opinion may differ as to the rightfulness and value of bounties to certain manufacturers, no one opposes the payment of bounties to encourage the dangerous and valuable fisheries of the Atlantic. Indeed the amount granted is very small in any case.

In 1912-13, says the Annual Report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces received the sum of $159,996.40 as bounty on their respective catches of sea fish during the season of 1912-13, and against that small sum might fairly be set the total amount received as revenue from fishing licenses, fines, etc., $106,496.01, which includes the sum of $13,500, paid by United States fishing vessels as modus vivendi fees.

The sum of $67,318.80 was paid to 965 vessels and their crews and to boats and boat fishermen was paid the sum of $92,677.60.

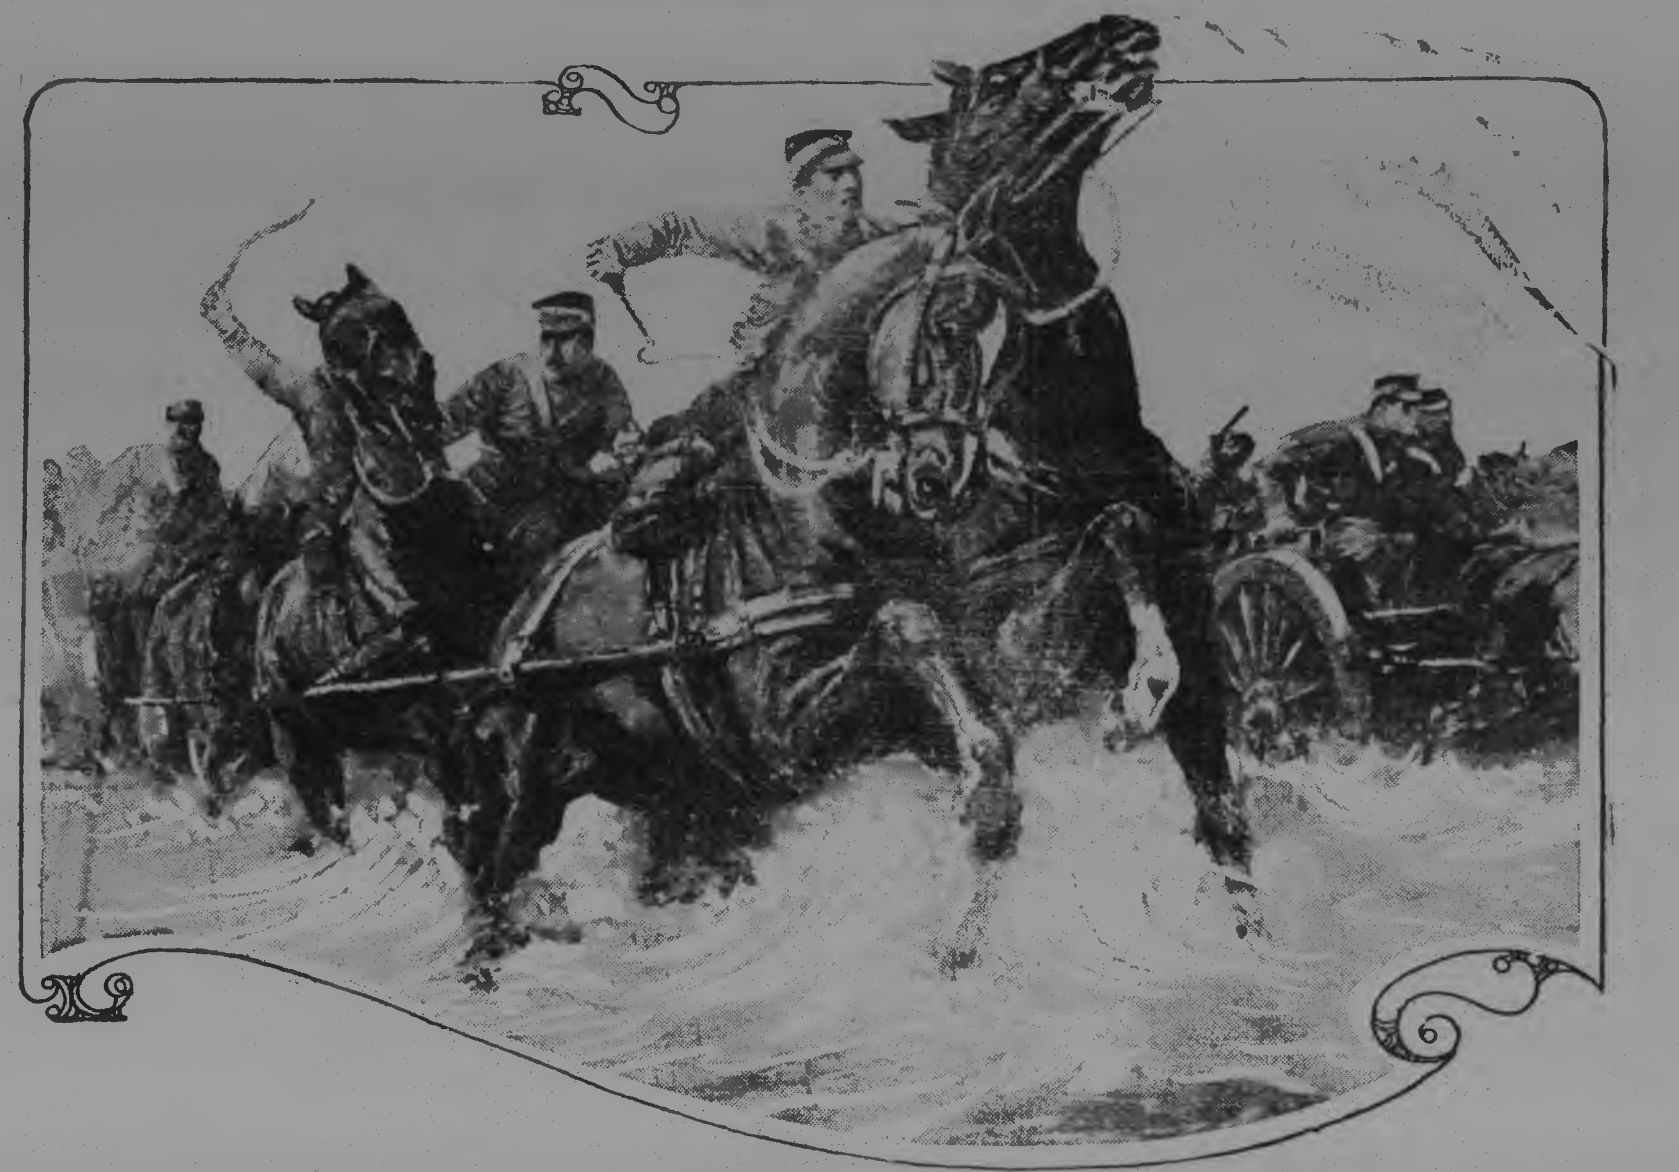
DASHING FRENCH ARTILLERYMEN CHARGE THROUGH RIVER MOSEL UPON ADVANCING GERMANS



THE GETTING OF MOVIE FEATURES

Operators Run Great Risks to Get Sensatianal Films.

Do you ever stop to consider the many difficulties that assail a motion picture photographer? No soldier was ever more a hero than the man who goes into the heart of South Africa, or the wilderness of South America, and with a camera for a weapon stalks big game that the world may see them in their own haunts and in a natural position. This last is the hardest thing to do. To take a picture of a tiger, depicting its every action, and not to let the beast know that it is being done, this as much for the photographer's own sake as for the picture's future, is no easy task.

As may be imagined, there are many methods in vogue among photographers to obtain truthful pictures of animals. It is entirely a case of strategy on the man's part. He must wait in the jungle sometimes for days until his odor becomes familiar to the animal. He builds himself a house, sometimes inside a hollow tree trunk, sometimes in the tree itself, and bides his time.

But this is not enough, for under ordinary circumstances the moment he started to turn the handle of the camera the noise would be such that the beast would either fight or run away, and either would be bad for the man.

So again resorting to strategy, he invents a machine, small and compact, that will exactly imitate the clicking of a camera. This is turned by the action of the wind, and it is not long before the animal becomes accustomed to the noise. Sometimes, though, it is necessary to bribe the animal with a wounded deer or a lame goat.

Probably the hardest picture of the kind to obtain is that of a fish under water. Much patience is necessary and much skill. The first step is the manufacturing of a glass caisson, which is semi-submerged and contains the man and his machine. The top is open to the sky and there the operator must receive his meals from an associate. It is compulsory that the man shall stay there for an abrupt movement might scare the subject beyond recovery.

A fish is noted for its curiosity and it is upon this fact that the camera man works. A shot fired in the water will bring fish from all over to the spot to investigate. Likewise with the cage. They want to see what it is, and it is not long before they will be close to it. Then for the pictures.

The camera snaring of birds is an undertaking that requires much skill and greater patience. To get a good picture of a bird on the nest actually hatching eggs without frightening her is very hard. Prof. Frank Newman, the well-known English photographer, tells many interesting stories of his adventures in this work.

He cited one case in particular in which he had lain in wait for a week with his imitation camera going full speed, grabbing a meal when he could, only to have the bird take fright and leave her nest forever, thus wasting all his time. He has however, been able to catch near pictures of the moor hen, probably the most timid of birds.

Newman has also been very successful in his pictures of large birds such as the South American condor the American eagle, and the buzzard and vultures of the South. As may be surmised, a different sort of skill is required to get such pictures as these.

Editor In Name Only.

Ficitious "editors" are regular members of the staff of many Russian newspapers. Some time ago the so called "responsible editor" of a labor journal was charged under a statute relating to the incitement of class enmity. He pleaded not guilty, and it turned out that he could not even read and could only write his own name with much difficulty. He had been promised $15 monthly for giving his name as responsible editor of the paper. Although the journal was issued in St. Petersburg, the "editor" worked in Riga as a factory hand and was actually serving a sentence for robbery when the charge was brought against him.

Brilliant Fish Hues.

Like birds, many fishes assume their brightest hue when they wish to attract the opposite sex of their species. The colors of the male common pike become exceedingly intense, brilliant and iridescent in the breeding season. The eel also puts on an intense silvery hue at the breeding time which is very noticeable and at one time caused naturalists to distinguish it as a distinct species. The males of the tench, roach and perch also show a marked increase in brilliancy in the breeding season.

Men and Women and Love.

Swedenborg once observed that woman seeks in man something good which she really loves as true, as an expression of wisdom; the man, on the other side, seeks in woman something good which he really loves as beautiful.

Painfully Frank.

Caller—Is your mistress in?

Maid—Did you see her at the window as you came up the walk, ma'am?

Caller—No.

Maid—Well, she said if you hadn't seen her to say that she was out.

KNAPP'S ROLLER BOAT STILL LIES IN TORONTO HARBOR

Contractors Will be Called Upon to Remove the Queerest Craft That Sailed the Great Lakes.

When the contractors for the Toronto Board of Harbor Commissioners commence work along the waterfront they will be called upon to remove the wreck of the queerest craft that ever sailed upon the surface of the Great Lakes. This hulk is the physical remains of the Knapp roller boat, a marine construction that attracted the attention of the scientific press in the year 1897.

On August 19th, 1896, there was launched from the Cail dockyards, on the River Seine in France, the Ernest Bazin roller boat. For months the press had been keenly interested in this craft, and much was expected of it. It was to possess great speed, to have great stability, and to be an economical type of vessel to construct, operate and maintain.

Six great hollow iron rollers were to allow the ship to roll on the surface of the water. Each roller was equipped with blades and a small steam engine, and in addition a powerful screw propeller stretched out behind the boat.

A keenly interested crowd gathered on the banks of that historic river to witness the tryout, and amidst hearty cheers the roller boat was towed to mid-stream and started.

Instead of frisking over the river surface the rollers churned up the water and sank deeper as additional power was applied. A few seconds of this proved to the onlookers that the experiment had failed, and after the press had explained to their own satisfaction the reasons for the failure the matter dropped from public view for a time.

In the early winter of 1897 the Canadian press announced that the riddle of the roller boat had been solved. A Mr. Knapp handed out the result of his investigations, and declared that if the six rollers of the Brazin boat had been united in one, and the screw propeller dispensed with, all the claims made for the French model could be demonstrated.

Early in the spring of 1897 the Polson Shipyards commenced work on the new model, and on the 21st of October in the same year it was ready for its maiden trip.

The Knapp vessel consisted of a huge cylinder, 22 feet in diameter and 110 feet in length, the ends tapering somewhat suddenly to a diameter of 15 feet. Admission to the boat was had through the ends, which were left open for this purpose, and the interior platform rested on a series of little wheels that in turn rested against circular steel rails that went entirely around the interior of the iron cylinder.

On the platform, or centre of the boat, two boiler and engine sets were located, and their duty was to drive the shell around the platform.

On the outside of the shell were bolted 16 paddles or floats 15 feet long and eight inches deep, which were not radially to the cylinder but were slanted so as to hold the water and drive the boat over the sea.

On the morning of the trial the roller boat was towed out into the bay and the inventor and builder watched his creation from the deck of a ship of normal construction. When the engines were started the boat slowly forged ahead at a speed of six miles per hour. Although this boat behaved much better than the Bazin attempt, the spectators were not convinced that roller boats would be in general use in the immediate future.

Once the old craft broke from its moorings and wandered to the foot of Berkeley street. From here it was dragged back, without mercy, to the foot of Frederick street and shoved so hard against a mudbank that it has been unable to move since. The harbor builders will most likely break it up.—Toronto Globe.

Kent, Huron, Bruce, Parry Sound (North), Dufferin, Ontario, Victoria, Hastings, Glengarry (North), Carleton (Southeast), 30 to 35 inches annually. Canada's Influence on Crockett.

The late S. R. Crockett had struggled in his early life as many other poets and authors did. He began to work on the farm at an early age, as even a child's hands were useful to the struggling household. He was up at five o'clock, and all through his life he continued to rise at this hour, for early rising was a habit with pleasant memories.

One of his cousins was a farmer-plowman who had been to Canada and acquired larger ideas than the rest of the family, and, finding in the boy an unusual play of mind, be used to take him in the fields before the day's labors began, and make him read fine poetry.

Foreigners and Crime.

The degree to which foreigners are responsible for capital crimes, in the Dominion is indicated by the fact that of eleven cases now before the Justice Department, there is not a Canadian or British born subject in the list. They are mainly Italians and Poles.

HUSBANDS IN WILLESDEN

They Mind the Babies at Home While the Wives go Out to Work.

Willesden is a perfect paradise for a certain type of husband. There is no need for him to go out to work; his wife will see to that. All he need do is stay at home and mind the baby. He has a job for life and practically nothing to do.

The Gilbertian arrangement is due to the peculiar industrial conditions of Willesden, where there are many laundries and factories and female labor is much in demand. Although it is cheaper than male labor would be at the same class of work, the wages are good, considering that only five days a week are worked in the laundries, the women not being required on Mondays. As much as from 20 to 30 shillings a week can be earned, £1 being a common wage, even for girls.

Consequently the women rule the industrial world of Willesden. The positions of man and wife are reversed. There is no need for the man to go to work. Not only would he be unsuitable for the job, but the labor and the wages would not suit him.

Therefore a working girl, when she has saved sufficient money and thinks of marrying, looks around to find an eligible man, whom it would be her duty to keep in after life. He must know how to bathe, dress and feed a baby; how to amuse it and what to do when it has convulsions other than rolling it on the floor or slapping it on the back. If he can do all this the girl proposes, is accepted (if she is strong enough to work), and the knot is tied.

When the children grow up they are packed off to the laundries or to one of the biscuit, incandescent mantle or cedar pencil factories that abound in the neighborhood, and their wages go to swell the family income. As for father, he continues his congenial task of warming the baby's milk and performing other little duties. — London Cor. Philadelphia Ledger.

Grief-Stricken Horse.

An extraordinary story of a horse's sorrow for the death of his master comes from a village in the north of County Antrim, Ireland. When the man died the animal was out at grass. One evening a few days ago it broke out of the field, and went to the graveyard, a mile and a half away. The animal endeavored to get in, but was unsuccessful. It then broke into a field adjoinng the sides of the cemetery, and made desperate efforts to climb the wall separating it from its master's grave. It was taken away, and locked in the stable, where it was found dead the following morning.

Canal Across Scotland.

A ship canal is proposed across Scotland.

Willie's Comeback.

The teacher was telling the children a long, highly embellished story about Santa Claus and Willie Jones began giggling with mirth, which finally got beyond his control.

"Willie! What did I whip you for yesterday?" asked the teacher severely.

"Fer lyin'!" promptly answered Willie.

Not Modesty.

"Sometimes," said the press humorist, "I think my jokes are rotten. I s'pose that's my modesty."

"No," explained a friend, "that's your common sense."

Soldiers In Battle.

Those who have taken part in a battle have confessed that were it not for the shouting and the noise they would lose their nerves and run away. There is always an interval of cowardice in the soldier, but it is quickly overcome, and he fights grimly, unmindful of impending death. Bands were, of course, invented to raise the spirits of soldiers. Martial music, whether from the drum or the bugle, has done a great deal in saving campaigns. Nobody can fight in a cold blooded manner, and in the excitement of a general engagement the most nervous of fighters recover wonderfully.

FLOGGED OUT OF THE ARMY

Melancholy Fate of "The Whistler at the Plow."

Among the many pen names of the past "The Whistler at the Plow," was the happiest. It was chosen by Alexander Somerville, long since dead, who wrote the sweetest prose ever penned about the fields and woods and hamlets and the beasts, birds, reptiles and people of Canada.

I glimpsed him once—a stupendous Scot, with long white hair hanging over his shoulders and an expression of supreme sadness on the noble face. But he had the clear blue eye of the Scot—an eye that had an amber glint in it when he was roused.

He was an ex-soldier, but he did not serve out his term of enlistment in the army; neither did he get an honorable discharge.

Alexander Somerville was a private in one of the crack cavalry regiments of Great Britain and Ireland—I think it was the famous Scots Greys, but I am not sure. He must have been a magnificent looking soldier.

At the time of the great Chartist movement in England he was stationed with his regiment somewhere in the Midlands. The Chartists were looked upon as an incipient French revolution. Their meetings were forbidden, coercive measures were undertaken, and things began to look bad. The Chartists—honest, I can't tell you what a Chartist was, but he was, I fancy, an ultra Liberal or Radical of those days—decided to hold a procession. The authorities decided to prevent it, and a bloody clash was billed for the next Sunday.

The Scots Greys were ordered to rough whet their sabers in preparation to resist the mob. A saber so treated breaks bones and tears and bruises the flesh, but it doesn't sink deep. It was a terrible order, and Alexander Somerville, the future "Whistler at the Plow," refused to obey. He could not draw his sword on his fellow countrymen who were demanding liberty.

A corporal's guard seized Private Alexander Somerville. He was tried for insubordination by a court martial and was sentenced to be flogged and then dismissed from the army. He suffered a fearful flogging, with the whole garrison and as many of the citizens as could see looking on—suffered without a cry or a groan—and when the cruel, brutal business—a business that would have made Sitting Bull or Red Cloud miserably ashamed—was over he came out to this free land, a lone, broken and melancholy man, to sing of freedom among the free hills.

Does any one know where is his grave?—Toronto News.

BOWSER'S DAY OFF

On Which He Heeds the Call of the Meadow Lark

By M. QUAD

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

MR. BOWSER was thoughtful. At times he sighed. At times he sat with his gaze fixed on the picture of Washington crossing the Delaware.

The cat rubbed against his leg, but he gave her no more attention than he would have bestowed upon a grizzly bear.

A peddler yelled "String beans!" at the house twelve times in succession, but Mr. Bowser didn't bat an eye.

Had he failed in business?

Had he lost a dime in the street car?

Had he been advised to wear a wig?

He expected to be asked every minute what was troubling him, but Mrs. Bowser evinced no curiosity. He seemed on the point of speaking a dozen times, but finally went to bed with the mystery unsolved. It remained a mystery until he arose in the morning and put on an old suit. Then Mrs. Bowser observed:

"I hope you are not going to repaint the house or anything?"

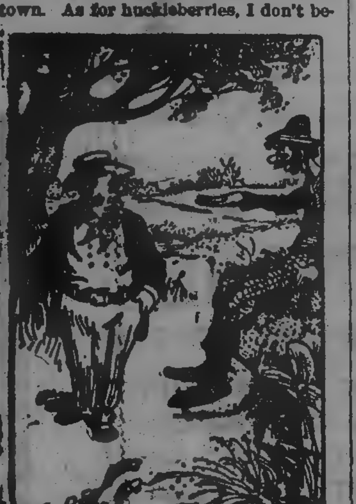
"How would you like to go out into the country today?" he queried.

"What for?"

"To get a breath of fresh air; to step foot on the green grass; to hear the song of the meadow lark; to pick the luscious huckleberry fresh from the dew covered vine."

Mrs. Bowser Withstands the Lure.

"I don't think I would care to go out and stroll around the hot fields. It is as hot out in the country as it is in town. As for huckleberries, I don't believe there's one within ten miles of us. Even if there was it wouldn't be growing on a dew covered vine."



"DO I LOOK LIKE A TRAMP?"

"Perhaps you can teach me how huckleberries grow."

"I can if you think they grow on vines. I've picked many quarts of them. They grow on bushes."

"Not on your life, Mrs. Bowser! They grow on vines. You are thinking of blackberries."

"I'm thinking of huckleberries and nothing else. They not only grow on bushes, but in and around swamps."

"Do you mean to tell me that I have lived to the age of forty-eight without knowing a huckleberry from a Hubbard squash? Mrs. Bowser, there is a certain impudence and assurance about you that provokes me to the limit. You were not big enough to spell cat when I was picking huckleberries by the bushel."

"Well, let it go at that. If you want huckleberries there are plenty in market. I will get some today and make a pie. There is no need to wander over ten or fifteen miles of country to get a quart of the berries."

"I have invited you," he said, with a severe look—"I have invited you to take a day off with me to hear the meadow lark, and so forth. Incidentally we will cull the huckleberry from the dew kissed vine. Will you go or not?"

"I—I don't think I care to. One is better off around the house such hot days as these. If you are going to stay home today we will ride around on the open cars."

Mr. Bowser Will Go Alone.

"Madam, I am going to the country. I want to see some honest grass and real trees. I want to hear the songs of birds, the hum of bees and the whispers of nature. In addition to this I have dreamed of picking huckleberries for three nights running, and I am longing to devour some right fresh from the vines. Will you go or won't you?"

"I'd rather not."

"That settles it. You can remain here and fry and stew and boil. I shall go and I shall have one of the best days of my life."

"And I shall have a huckleberry pie all ready for you when you return."

"You need have nothing of the kind. I can run my own huckleberry business without any of your help!"

With that Mr. Bowser made his start for the country, and an hour later the suburban trolley line deposited him among green fields. He did not know exactly what to do first, but after a little thought he walked up the highway a piece and then got over the fence into a field to roll on the grass. He hadn't rolled yet when a Weary Willie came along and stopped to say:

"Better hump yourself out o' that, cully!"

"For why?"

"De farmer will be after ye and use ye ruff. Dat's what dey calls trespass out here in the country."

"Let 'em call and be hanged! Things have come to a pretty pass when one can't roll on the grass."

"All right, cully. If ye git de boot don't blame me. I was jest tryin' to put ye next, ye know."

Falls In With Strange Acquaintances.

Mr. Bowser decided not to roll. He decided to sit in a shady fence corner for awhile and hear the notes of the meadow lark. There were birds about, and they were singing more or less, but he soon discovered that he couldn't tell the song of a lark from that of a crow. This made him secretly glad that Mrs. Bowser had not come along. She would have been sure to say something to hurt his feelings. After a rest of ten minutes he climbed into the road and walked on to look for huckleberry vines. At the end of a quarter of a mile he came to another Weary sitting on a log and gnawing at the last remains of a beef bone. Mr. Bowser was going by without salutation, but the other looked up and called out:

"Say, cully, when did ye take to the hoof?"

"What do you mean, sir?"

"Hain't ye on de pad?"

"Hoof, hoof? Pad? I don't understand the terms."

"Oh, ye don't! Den ye hain't been hatched long! What I'm askin' is do ye belong to de purfesh?"

"Do I look like a tramp?"

"To be honest wid ye, cully, ye don't. Ye look more like de man who takes tickets at de sideshow where dey exhibit de wild woman of Borneo. Are ye down on yer luck?"

Determined to Find Huckleberries.

Mr. Bowser drew himself up with freezing dignity and passed on. He couldn't fight with a tramp, but he determined to make Mrs. Bowser pay for those insults. Forty rods farther on he came to a farmhouse. There was a lathy young man greasing a wagon in front of the place, and Mr. Bowser halted and asked:

"Do you think I might be able to find any huckleberries around here?"

"Mebbe it's hayseeds and suckers you are looking for?" was the reply, accompanied by looks of suspicion.

"I simply desire to find some huckleberries and pick them off the vines."

The lathy young man laughed.

"Well, what are you cackling about?"

"I'm wondering whether you are a fool or a sharper. Why didn't you say that huckleberries grow on oak trees?"

"They grow on vines, as I said, and I see no need of your making a smart Aleck of yourself over it. I asked you a civil question."

"Pa, pa!" called the young man to some one in the house.

"Well, what is it?" asked the old farmer himself as he came out.

"Here's a feller as says huckleberries grow on vines!"

Mr. Bowser "In Bad."

The old man put on his spectacles and went closer to Mr. Bowser and then drew back and said:

"Look out for him, Sam! I think he's the feller that stole our milk cans one night last week! Lord, what a mug he's got on him!"

"See here, but what ails you!" shouted Mr. Bowser. "I come along here and ask you a civil question and you make a great mystery over it. If there are any idiots around here you are the ones!"

"But you said you were after huckleberries," protested the young man.

"Well, what of it?"

"And they grow on vines."

"And what of that too?"

"Don't try any bluff here, old man! Pa, whistle for the dog. Now you git!"

The farmer's wife came out with the dog. She had a hoe handle in her hand. Bowser decided to get. As he started the four took after him, and in his confusion he took to the woods across the road instead of keeping to the highway. The tramp down the road on a log had seen it all, and as the minutes went by and neither pursued nor farmers reappeared and the yelps of the dog sounded farther away he returned to his beef bone and mused:

"I guess he hain't de man who runs a sideshow, after all. I guess he's de chap dat does a stunt wid de hyenas, and dat dey has got de best of him from dis time on!"

Married the Day They Met.

Horace Greeley and Mary Young Cheney were married the first day they met. They had corresponded for some time, a common friend who was something of a matchmaker having brought this about. She was all his fancy painted her, but she was much disappointed in his appearance, so much so that when he appeared before her, having proposed and been accepted by letter, she frankly told him that, although she married him, she was not in love with him. Their married life was long and happy, and the loss of his wife was a blow which Greeley did not long survive.

LAWLESS ALBANIA

Blood Feud is a Recognized Usage in Balkan State

The pluck of Prince William of Wied, who has been chosen by the Powers as the first sovereign of Albania, and who is now endeavoring to settle down at Durazzo, the capital, has aroused the admiration of Europe. No man was ever faced with a more stupendous task, for the Albanians have never known a King, and they certainly know no law. For the most part the prince will find his subjects half-civilized mountaineers frank to a friend, vindicative to an enemy, and every man a law unto himself.

The Albanians live in a perpetual state of anarchy. Even the peasant in the fields bristles with weapons, for he loves warfare and brigandage far better than cattle-rearing or agriculture—hence the poor cultivation of the soil!

He is always on guard against his enemies, and constantly seeking the blood of those who have done him an injury.

In all parts of Albania the vendetta or blood feud is an established usage, and a man would be disgraced in the eyes of his friends and relatives if he did not kill an enemy who had injured him or any of those belonging to him. Delay in vengeance is held dishonorable. The man who will let years pass without killing his enemy becomes himself an outcast. Furthermore, till he has taken vengeance he cannot marry, or if he is married he may give neither his sons nor his daughters in marriage.

The first task that confronts Prince William is to stamp out these blood feuds and endeavor to carry some semblance of law into the mountains. It is, however, an almost impossible task, for the duty of revenge is a sacred tradition handed down to successive generations in the family, village, and the tribe. The consequence is that neighbors, villages, and even the several quarters of the same town are constantly at war with one another.

A single case of homicide often leads to a series of similar crimes or to protracted warfare between neighboring families and communities. A murderer, as a rule, takes refuge in the mountains from the avenger of blood, or remain for years shut up in his house. The latter is, in many cases, like a fortress, the only windows of which are loopholes for rifles; and in these houses families sometimes of a hundred people lead self-centred lives. Many men have not left their houses for years, and food has to be brought into them by their friends. Others again have taken to flight after killing an enemy, and unable to sleep in their homes or to till their fields, exist by brigandage, the latter being regarded as quite a legitimate form of livelihood.

Sometimes a truce, either temporary or permanent, is arranged by the intervention of the clergy, and occasionally a general truce is proclaimed. Between conflicting parties the restoration of peace is celebrated with elaborate ceremonies.

In some districts, however, there is a fixed price for blood, and a feud may be avoided if the homicide pays, by way of compensation to the relatives of his victim, sums ranging from $50 to $100, according to the district. Once a debt has been thus acquitted amicable relations are restored.

Curiously enough, although the Albanians are so lawless, they do not make war on women. In fact a woman may traverse a hostile district without fear or injury, and is often employed as an intermediary in the settlement of a feud.

Peculiarity of Snow.

The water which will allay our burning thirst augments it when congealed into snow, so that it is stated by explorers of the Arctic regions that the natives "prefer enduring the utmost extremity of thirst rather than attempt to relieve it by eating snow." Yet if the snow be melted it becomes drinkable water. Nevertheless, although if melted before entering the mouth it assuages thirst like other water, when melted in the mouth it has the opposite effect. To render this paradox more striking we have only to remember that ice, which melts more slowly in the mouth, is very efficient in allaying thirst.

The Diving Bell.

The celebrated philosopher Aristotle speaks of a diving bell which was put over the head of the diver, but there is no proof of the use of the bell in ancient times. John Jaesnier, who lived in the early part of the sixteenth century, makes the earliest mention of the practical use of the diving bell in Europe. In all probability the first real practical use of the diving bell was in the attempt at rescuing the treasures of the Spanish armada off the English coast, 1590 and on.

Fashion.

There exists a strict relation between class of power and the exclusive and polished circles. The last are always filled or filling from the first. Fashion, though in a strange way, represents all manly virtue. It is virtue gone to seed, a kind of posthumous honor, a hall of the past. Great men are not commonly in its halls. They are absent in the fields; they are working, not triumphing. Fashion is made up of their children. —Emerson.

THE CRUELTY OF MAN.

As Typified in the Case of the Handsome Suspender Seller.

"I HAVE made up my mind," said Betty, the beautiful stenographer, "that I'll never marry any man who can't afford to have a first class automobile."

Reginald Rashleigh, the well known suspender seller, permitted a shadow of disappointment to overspread his handsome countenance.

"I suppose, then," he said, "I may as well quit calling on you."

"Oh, I didn't intend to frighten you away."

"I'm not frightened, but I will confess that I am saddened by your remark."

"Anyhow, I never supposed you cared for me particularly."

"I think I have given you many reasons for believing that I cared for you."

"You hardly ever take me anywhere."

"I can't afford to take you to places where it is expensive."

"You might go in business for yourself."

"I've thought of that. If I only had a few hundred dollars I'd try it."

"I believe you want to get rid of me."

"Why do you say that?"

"You turn down every proposition I make."

"I hadn't noticed that you had made any proposition."

"Well, I've made some suggestions."

"Would you care for me if I owned an automobile?"

"I think I could learn to."

"Then I'm going to kiss you."

"No, no! Don't you dare—not yet!"

"When may I?"

"Have you a quarter?"

"Yes."

"Take me to the movies, and then"—

"And then what?"

"I'll see."

"Woman," he cried, "I believe you have been trifling with me. Promise before I spend my money."

"Oh, well, if I must, I suppose I must. That's the way with you men. You never are willing to do anything for a girl without making her feel that she is under obligations to you."—Chicago Record-Herald.

THE BELFAST "SHAWLIES" ARE GRIM AND RESOLUTE WOMEN

Sir Edward Carson Paid an Eloquent and Sincere Tribute to Their Courage and Unswerving Determination

In a recent speech, Sir Edward Carson, the leader of the Ulster opposition to Irish Home Rule, paid an eloquent and sincere tribute to the women of Ulster, to their courage and unswerving determination.

The women to whom he was speaking on this occasion were chiefly those whose services come prominently before the public in connection with the work of military organization, the wives and daughters of ministers, the civil servants, landed gentry, school teachers and professional women who, for the past year, have given themselves up, body and soul, to the cause of the covenant, who raised and trained efficient ambulance corps and emergency hospitals throughout the entire province.

It was, therefore, natural that he should refer more particularly to the splendid organization work done by the class which is known in Ireland as "the quality"—but his words also are applicable to the laboring women who are, if anything, more dour and doggedly resolute than the men.

Belfast has never quite forgiven Her Majesty Queen Victoria for that, in her diary, she recorded her impression of the homeliness of the women of Ulster's chief city.

In this her majesty was possibly indiscreet, but she was certainly truthful. The "shawlie," judged by all ordinary standards of beauty, is not a thing of joy forever—in fact, outside of Holland it is doubtful if anywhere on this planet there are so many plain women gathered together in one spot as in the manufacturing towns of Ulster. The good stolid peasant faces which their ancestors brought over from Scotland have gradually been modified to reflect the murky atmosphere of materialism in which they dwell.

Of all the modern world's strongholds of machine driven labor none can compare with Belfast and Glasgow to emphasize the truth of Ruskin's denunciation of modern industrialism. Ugliness and monotony are here the keynotes of life—great barrack-like buildings, where the workers toil eternally in their day and night shifts; long rows of sordid cottages, smoke begrimed and hideous, where, in their long hours of ease, the men converge upon the corner saloons as their chief recreation and solace, while the women pursue their truant offspring in all manner of unsavory haunts. One of the commonest and saddest sights of Belfast's mean streets after work hours is a street corner group of girls from 10 to 12 years of age, each carrying her younger brother or sister tightly fastened to her by the ubiquitous shawl. Small wonder that under such conditions the mill hand women has hardened, that her features and her manners have lost the gentleness and grace that should be woman's birthright.

All alike, young girls and matrons, envelop themselves in drab colored shawls, hideous wrappings of tweed or knitted wool or drugget cloth, which covers them from waist to hatless head — garments always either rain sodden or dust choked, which to the hygienist shout aloud of dirt germs and disease. In such a garb there can be no place for feminine coquetry or individuality of adornment; it is as if they had all sealed themselves to labor with a common seal of ugliness, even as women in the east blacken their teeth with betel nut in token that they renounce the pomps and vanities of feminine allurements.

Their voices have the curious rhythmic lilt and fall which marks the Ulsterman's speech all the world over, and their speech is characteristic by a Rabelaisian raciness and forcible directness which to the ear of a stranger, are qualities more admirable in men than in women. The Belfast mill girl's vocabulary is indeed a fearful and wonderful thing—a local dialect peculiar to the linen industry and themselves, which is heard at its brightest and best in fierce ordeals or wordy battle—a trumpet tongue of invective and grim humor, the speech of a breed which believes implicitly in physical prowess and the survival of the fittest.

Polished.

A certain newspaper artist, noted for his large feet as well as his facility with the pencil, sat down to have his shoes polished.

"Give me a fine shine, Tony," he said to the operator, "I'm going to see a pretty girl and want to make a hit."

When the contract was completed and payment made, Tony said: "Say, boss, if youse doesn't make a hit wid dat skirt to-night it won't be cause you doesn't shine downstairs."

THE PROPOSAL.

He had no intention at all to propose
But the tender light of the stars was shed.
The garden breathed with the scent of the rose,
And the night bird sang—and he lost his head.

It's apt to happen that way, you know,
When the moon is bright, and the girl is fair,
And the whippoorwill calls, and the roses throw
Their fragrance sweet on the evening air.

He knew that he wasn't in love with her.
He liked them slender, and she was stout.
But the spell of night made his pulses stir,
And ere he could stop them the words were out.

Then he groaned within in a keen distress,
And the cold chills traveled along his frame,
For he knew full well she would answer "Yes,"
And he held his breath till the answer came.

But the word was "No," and he thrilled with bliss
Till he stopped to think she had spurned his plea.
And ever since then—will you solve me this?—
He has wanted but her and ardently.
—Puck.

Clinical.

The eminent physician—still young and a bachelor—stood on the rustic bridge over the babbling brook which just there made a cool brown pool. He leaned upon the handrail. By his side, also leaning on the handrail, stood a girl in the most artful early summer time garb. Her eyes were bent on the clear water below. Suddenly she looked up, gave her companion a swift glance, and then looked demurely down again.

"What would you do, doctor," she murmured, "if my heart lay at the bottom of that brook?"

"I should hasten to congratulate you," replied the doctor crisply, "upon the admirable fashion in which you had rallied from the operation."—New York Post.

Laying Bridge Floors.

The most interesting and dangerous looking stage in the construction of a suspension bridge is the building of the floor, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. In this work the builders have nothing to rest their work on and must build out each way from the towers, securing the floor piece by piece to the heavy steel bars suspended from the main cables far above. The work is done with derricks that are equipped with booms long enough to reach out ahead of the finished structure and hold the girders suspended while they are being riveted in place. As each section of the floor is completed the derricks are moved ahead and the construction of the next section is begun.

Making a Silk Dress.

Times have changed a good deal since the days of the Garden of Eden, when a single fig leaf was supposed to have been the wardrobe of the mother of men, Mme. Eve. Nowadays, Japanese scientists have figured, it requires 288 pounds of mulberry leaves to make a single dress for the modern woman. Eighteen moths also do their part in making the dress, they having laid the eighteen packages of eggs from which were hatched the 6,400 worms that ate the 288 pounds of mulberry leaves. These worms produced about 5.6 pounds of cocoons, from which were reeled ten skeins of raw silk or 1.6 pounds of silk.

Training Canaries.

In the canary breeding establishments of Germany only the male birds are valued, because the females never sing. The method of training the birds to sing is to put them in a room where there is an automatic whistle, which they all strive to imitate. The breeder listens to the efforts of the birds and picks out the most apt pupils, which are then placed in another room for further instruction. These are the best singers and ultimately fetch high prices.

HE FOUGHT THE BEARS.

Story of Old Hotel and Its Soldier Patrons.

The destruction of an old building will often cause an old resident to turn back the pages of memory and relate tales of the days of old. Thus it was that three or four gentlemen listened with a great deal of interest to a few lunch hour stories about the days when the old Bank of Upper Canada, King and Frederick streets, that is now demolished, was a thriving institution in a good section of the city.

"I [illegible] to live right close to the bank," said the eldest of the group, a man of possibly sixty-five years, "and two or three doors from the bank, down the street, a man kept a hotel. In Toronto of those days the Sunday liquor laws were not enforced as they should have been, and this tavern-keeper, in order to induce custom to his place on Sundays without too much publicity, tried a rather novel idea.

"From a circus which went defunct in Toronto he bought four bears, big black fellows, and chained them in his back yard, and ordered that any one coming to see the bears would have to pass through the bar-room. As a consequence, a large number came to see the bears on Sunday and many of them stayed for a considerable length of time.

"At length the news got to the soldiers in the fort, and a few of them came down one Sunday morning to see what was in the air. One of these chaps was a big six-footer, and after he had visited the bar and examined the bears at some length he commenced to feel in a fighting mood. The hotel man didn't want a fight in his house on Sunday, so he sent him out to fight the bears. The soldier went out and found the bears all asleep, so he swatted the largest of them three or four goods ones on the nose, and with this rude awakening Bruin got up to see what it was all about. The soldier struck out once or twice more, and the bear got him within his grip and hugged him so tight he broke his arm. It took several men to get the soldier from the bear's grasp and take him to a nearby surgeon."

When the old Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz was staying at Holkham with Thomas Coke, then commonly known as "king of Norfolk," he boasted one evening at dinner that no man had ever dared to shoot at him and that if any one had ever attempted such a thing he would have shot the man dead on the spot.

The next day at the court the grand duke suddenly felt a shower of shot peppering his legs and, turning round in a fury to find whence it proceeded, saw William Coke with a gun leveled in his direction.

"I've got another muzzle ready," said William coolly. "Will you shoot?"—From "The Life of Thomas Coke, Earl of Leicester."

Contraband.

Mr. George W. F. Fowler, the New Brunswick M.P., tells a story of a rather prominent politician from one of the Scott Act counties of New Brunswick who visited St. John a few weeks ago and proceeded to take advantage of the license system in force there.

A friend who was anxious to get him started for home before he imbibed any further, but who did not have the time to attend to the matter, called up a mutual friend and requested him to keep in touch with the politician and not leave him until he was on the train for home.

"I would like to oblige you," was the reply, "but don't you know there is a fine for shipping whisky into a Scott Act county?"—Toronto Saturday Night.

New Railway Points.

Some indication of the development of the west may be gathered from the fact that upwards of 200 new points will be opened up by the three transcontinental railways during the present year. This simply means that new railways will for the first time touch districts already fairly well settled and for which convenient marketing and commercial points must be established.

EGGS ON THE FARM

Here are seven rules advised by the Missouri College of Agriculture for the care of eggs on the farm:

1. Market only eggs of standard size — 24 ounces or more to the dozen.

2. Sort out exceedingly large or very small eggs.

3. Avoid dirty eggs by keeping clean quarters. Dirt can be removed with a damp cloth, but eggs should not be washed.

4. Remove males from flock as soon as the breeding season is over. The presence of the male birds in the poultry flock destroys one-half million dollar's worth of eggs each month during summer. Prevent this loss by the production of infertile eggs. Fertile eggs do not keep well, it costs money to feed surplus males, and the hens are more productive when no males are present.

5. Reject eggs from stolen nests; that's where many of the rotten eggs come from.

6. Store eggs in cool, well ventilated places. Heat assists in chick development, and also increases the shrinkage.

7. Keep eggs away from odors, such as those from kerosene, cabbage, rotten food, fresh paint, etc. Food also influences flavor; only clean food should be fed.

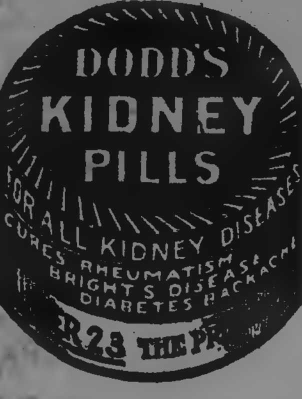
8. Market eggs once or twice a week. An egg deteriorates in quality with age.

9. Insist that your dealer purchase eggs on a "loss off" basis, not just as they come in. At present the dealer buys all eggs good, bad and indifferent, at the same price, and does not recognize the difference in quality. The result is that an everage low price is paid for eggs. Some eggs are worthless, while others are worth much more than the average price. Insist that your dealer candle eggs during the summer. If he sorts out bad eggs he can then afford to pay more for the good.

CHICKENS ENJOY SILAGE.

Cows and sheep thrive on silage; it is a little too bulky for hogs to eat a great deal; horses eat small amounts with profit, and a writer to Hoard's Dairyman tells that it is the best ever for poultry. He states: "We have tried it for two years, and find the birds are crazy for it, and will clean up all given them. Of course we give a grain ration, oyster shell, grit, etc., besides the ensilage." Since poultry require some green food in order to do very well and lay best when they enjoy their food best, it can be seen that ensilage will help a great deal to keep the egg production up to standard, as well as stimulating the milk flow of dairy cows or putting beef on steers and mutton on sheep.

Rub a little soap over the mildew spots, and on top of this a little chalk and lemon juice. If the garment is then put out in the sun for a couple of hours and afterwards washed in the usual way, the spots will disappear.



LEADERS ARE GROWING OLD

British Statesmen Show the Marks of Their Long Struggle.

There is no activity in which a man ages more quickly than in politics. Quite young men in the British House of Commons look prematurely old.

At times even Mr. Churchill, over whose head only 40 summers have passed, has the look of a man of 50, and the tell-tale marks of age under the eyes have registered themselves. His colleague, Mr. Lloyd George, some 11 years older, has the walk and the alert figure of a well-preserved man of 50, but his hair, worn thickly at the back, is quite grey. When the Chancellor is vexed the lines on his face show out very strongly. Only when he smiles he looks his real age.

Mr. Asquith's hair, or what there is left of it, is quite white. He gives you the impression that he has lived every one of his 62 years, and that time has dealt not too kindly with him. He is young-looking, however, compared to Mr. Birrell, two years his senior, whose deathly pallor is accentuated by the mass of white hair that always seems awry. For a philosopher with an agreeable turn of humor, the Irish Secretary has ill-resisted the advance of years. One imagines his career likely to end with the dissolution of the present Government.

Thirteen years older than his leader, Lord Morley has aged perceptibly these last few years. His step is slow and measured; his voice that once rang through the House like a clarion, is low and difficult to hear; the fine ascetic-looking face is the face of a very old man. One sees the difference in time's treatment of others when one notices the tall, upright, steady figure of Lord St. Aldwyn, better known as Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, striding proudly through the Lords. On him the years have fallen very gracefully. He might be only 60 from that firm gait of his, and yet he is 77. With his daily floral buttonhole and his well-fitting clothes, Mr. Redmond encourages the belief that he is young, but regarding him in one of those off-moments, when his features assume a settle expression, one cannot help being struck by the time-worn picture he presents. His hair is now quite white.

Lord Lansdowne makes a brave struggle to resist looking unduly old, and, remembering that he is 68 one must admit he has done much better than most contemporary statesmen in Parliament. His carriage is remarkably upright, and he shows wonderful vitality, due to the careful way in which he has husbanded his energies. Mr. Balfour, three years younger, has remarkably improved in health and appearance since he relinquished the reins to Mr. Bonar Law. He looks ten years to the good as compared to the days when the "Balfour must go" cry was the leading note in English politics. As for Mr. Bonar Law, he wears very well, and one has some difficulty in believing he is really 56. It would seem, therefore, that on the Liberal side age comes more quickly than on the Unionist. To be in office may be tempting, but it has its penalties.

Landmarks Threatened.

The effect of motor bus vibration, which threatens the safety of such giant landmarks at St. Paul's Cathedral, Westminster Abbey, and the clock tower of the House of Commons in London, is being made the subject of careful tests by the National Physical Laboratory.

Investigators have learned through delicate instruments placed in these buildings that the amount of vibration is largely a matter of speed of the buses. When three buses were driven past the cathedral at six miles an hour, no disturbance was recorded. But at twelve miles an hour, the vibration was marked. Both verticle and horizontal movements were noted.

Plans for a system of steel supports have already been found necessary for St. Paul's, owing to the disintegrating effects of a traffic on which Sir Christopher Wren did not reckon.

Our George in London.

Some Englishmen do not take kindly to the suggestion that a monument to George Washington should be placed in Westminster abbey. "Are we," asks the London Outlook, "to have a monument of Washington in the abbey, but none to the men and women and children who were his victims? Then let us be logical for once and erect another monument to the late President Kruger. Equally with Washington, he had the two necessary qualifications—he was the mortal enemy of England, and he persecuted a British population. What more is requisite?"

War's Mark on the Candy Trade.

Certain toothsome confections known as "Mexican kisses" were favorite bargain day candies in New York for a long time. Recently the signs in the shops carrying these sweets were changed to read "Pecan Maple Kisses."

"Why?" asked a lady shopper.

The salesgirl raised her eyebrows as she answered, "Because of the trouble in Mexico, of course."

"That really made a difference?"

"You'd be surprised to know how much."

Longest Telephone Cable.

The telephone cable which is to connect Aldeburgh, England, with Walcheren, Netherlands, is to be seventy-nine nautical miles in length, making it the longest submarine telephone cable in the world. It will furnish telephone communication between London and Berlin. The cable is to be of the four core Pupin loaded type.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

It is a question whether waiting deserves anything or not, but it sometimes wins.

Time, tide and scorching automobiles wait for no man.

Sometimes it is merely force of habit that keeps a man from paying his debts.

While an idealist is looking for his ideal some sordid minded relative is slaving to pay for the idealist's meal ticket.

One reason why we don't like to mention our vices is because it is obviously superfluous.

When they begin to act as if you were one of the family it will be safe to look out for some other loafing place.

When a man is a guy he does not call attention to his condition. That does so itself.

There are people who would rather work than starve, and as long as they continue to multiply the world is comparatively safe.

There are a great many commendable actions that the ordinary man would rather commend that perform.

It is hard to understand when we aren't hungry how anybody can starve to death.

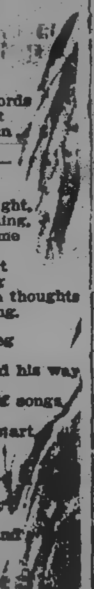
Being optimistic is easy when the conditions are right.



The Lowly Singer.

The humble poet goes about
In very modest raiment.
If he could coin his tuneful words
He'd gladly make a payment
On rags that glisten as the sun
And raise an awful holler,
But now he has to be content—
He hasn't got a dollar.

For him the sun unfolds its light,
For him the stars are gleaming,
And so he cannot waste his time
On profit bearing scheming.
He must remain content to get
The robin's morning greeting
And not disturb his high flown thoughts
With vulgar things like eating.

Were he disposed to drop a peg
And lower his profession
Things might be drifting round his way
In quite a long procession.
Would he write ads. instead of songs,
Extolling pills or bacon
He'd rake in coin; but, oh, his art
Would have to be forsaken!

No; he will go along his way,
Wrapped in his inspiration.
Let sordid poets sing of soap;
His theme is all creation.
So take him gently by the hand
And lead him to the table,
And then the poet's appetite
You'll find was but a fable.

His Dreadful Price.

"I have just had some swell photographs taken."

"I hope that they do you justice."

"Thanks, awfully, but that's not what's troubling me."

"What is?"

"How I am ever going to do the photographer justice?"

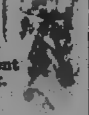
An Oversight.

"The constitution is a grand old document."

"Yes, but they wrote it too soon."

"Why so?"

"They should have waited until automobiles had been invented and made it unconstitutional to run a fellow down."



Coming.

When flying is perfected
And man is on the wing
A Wilbur Wright elopement
Will be the proper thing.

Man From City Hall.

"Why does the man scrutinize his features so closely in the mirror?"

"Perhaps he is trying to detect the flight of time."

"What for?"

"Doubtless he desires to arrest it."

Her Opinion.

"Mr. Footprint, you are the most graceful dancer in the room," said the sweet young girl to the awkward guy who was falling all over her.

"A fine compliment, I am sure."

"No; just a knock on the other dancers."

Like Play.

"Going to send your son to art school?"

"What do they do there?"

"Just make pictures."

"I should say not. I want him to learn something."

An Oversight.

"Seen anything of a horse thief going by here?"

"I don't know. Several men have gone by, but I didn't think to ask any of them if they were horse thieves."

No Satisfaction.

"I am afraid I will have to give up smoking."

"The doctor order it?"

"No; my wife is beginning to like the odor of a good cigar."

UP AGAINST IT

Why the Chinese Don't Go In For Modern Improvements.

In China if a family desires to take advantage of the modern improvements and ideas, it has countless obstacles to overcome. First of all, there is the conservative traditional ruling of the Chinese family clan to be surmounted. The members of the clan may number several thousands, and no family is supposed to adopt an innovation unless the entire clan agree to the procedure. These native clans are presided over by certain elders, who possess arbitrary authority to dictate the policy of the clan. Their powers extend even to capital punishment. When they deem any project unwise or unnecessary for one or two families of their entire clan, the matter is usually settled and "sat upon" by their arbitrary rulings.

As these clan elders are among the aged type of the Celestial, with astrophied mental processes as well as an utterly withered spirit of youth, they are always counted upon to remain on the side of well-seasoned Chinese precedent.

The traditions of the native clans, like those of the family unit, are not considered matters of mere convenience. These traditions, in reality, possess the sanctity of a religion. It is simply another form of the ever-present ancestor worship. It is this latter which forms such a tremendously effective barrier against innovation and change among the Mongolians.

When the parent of a family dies, it is not so much a matter of reverence for parental memory that keeps the living family members in the paths of righteousness which the parent was supposed to tread. It is rather a fear which the children possess of offending the evil spirits if one lone native should dare depart from the ways approved by his clan, the elders immediately work upon the superstitious fears of the more ignorant members. These latter are fed with malicious insinuations to the effect that the erring one who dares adopt anything new will surely bring a curse down upon the whole community. Thus it has been that the constraint of one generation has been handed down unchanged to those of successive generations.

As you travel about and observe the yellow man in his native environment and see conditions at first hand, you are not surprised at the astounding and archaic conservatism of the Chinaman. It is indeed time for a great awakening, and our missionaries, as usual, are in the vanguard promoting the doctrine of modern education. But the modernizing of China is a tremendously hard nut to crack.

About one of the most powerful levers to give China another jolt would be to introduce, by some method, several hundred millions of bathtubs, with running water systems attached. This invitation to wash their filthy bodies would give some of the old clan fossils such a severe shock that they could not possibly recover. It would be a great thing in China if a lot of these withered clan elders could be induced to die from fright brought on by fear of a good, healthy, cleansing bath. They wouldn't continue to block progress as they now do.

PARISIAN BEGGARS.

Clever Rogues Who Study the Weak Points of Their Victims.

An accomplished mendicant, like a clever salesman, studies his customers, discovers their weak points if he can and trades upon them. In this relation it is of interest to note the skillful methods whereby a certain class of Parisian beggars play upon the superstitions of their victims.

There is a common saying in France that giving alms brings good fortune, a saying that has not been overlooked by the Parisian beggar. If one visits the Sorbonne on the days of examination for the bachelor's degree he will see an interesting sight. The collegians approach, each with his dictionary under his arm, on his way to make the famous Latin version, on the success of which all his future depends. A crowd of beggars surround them.

"A sou, monsieur; a morsel of bread," the beggar will say to a collegian. "It will bring you happiness."

The candidate hurries on. "You will be blackballed, monsieur," the beggar continues.

This sinister prediction always takes effect. The collegian pulls out his purse, and the beggar turns away, chuckling.

A similar scene may be witnessed at the Hotel de Ville on the days of examination for certificate of ability for teaching. When there are no examinations in progress there may be races, and to them go the beggars, for gamesters and sporting men are notoriously superstitious.—Washington Star.

TRAGIC BRAVERY.

Sublime Act of a Hero Who Went to a Watery Grave.

In the chapel at Glenalmond school in Perthshire, Scotland, there is a marble slab with this stirring story recorded upon it:

There was once in the school a pupil named Alexander Cumine Russell, who became an officer in the Seventy-fourth highlanders when only a lad of seventeen. In connection with the memorable loss of the Birkenhead he won immortal glory. The troopship struck upon a rock; the soldiers were formed in ranks upon the deck to die; the women and children were being saved in boats.

Russell was ordered into one of the boats to command it, and a little way off he watched with dimmed eyes the doomed ship. When she went down he saw creatures of the deep contending for his beloved comrades. Then he saw a sailor's form rise up close to the boat and a hand strive to grasp the side.

A woman in the craft called out in agony: "Save him! Oh, save him, sir! He is my husband," but there was no room for another, and the boat was laboring heavily as it was. Russell looked at the woman and then at her children, then at those beseeching eyes in the deep, and, rising in the stern, he plunged into the water and helped the sailor into what had been his own place. Then amid a chorus of "God bless you" from every one in the boat the brave young officer turned to meet his death.—Pearson's Weekly.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

The Outlook in Canada

TRULY, it is an ill-wind that blows nobody good. One Continent's "down" is another Continent's "up." The industries of Europe are, generally speaking, at a standstill, and matters will be worse before they can be better.

The whole world is looking to the North American Continent—to Canada and the United States—for much of its provisions, machinery, textiles, boots and shoes, beverages, vehicles, cement, brick, earthenware, fancy goods, furs, glass, garments, paper, soap, tobacco, wood products, and much else. Canada must get ready to meet the demand made upon her. We have continued prosperity ahead of us if our manufacturers and merchants rise quickly to take advantage of their opportunity.

VOLUNTEERS LEAVE LATE THIS AFTERNOON AND TONIGHT

57th Regiment and Band Will Escort Them to the Stations --- No Orders Yet for 57th Volunteers

The first local men leaving direct for Valcartier will depart this evening, some time between five and six o'clock, when the 3rd Prince of Wales Canadian Dragoons, who have volunteered as artillerymen, will board the special C. P. R. train, running from London to the scene of mobilization.

Some twenty-five men, many of whom are from this city, will compose the contingent. The officers in charge are Col. C. H. Rogers; Major A. E. Loughlin, of Bowmanville; Capt. G. G. Greer, Lt. R. W. F. Jones, Lt. T. D. Johnston, Lt. R. B. Brook, Lt. E. Hughes.

The 57th Regiment, accompanied by the band will escort the volunteers to the station and give them a send off and will also be present at the departure of the battery volunteers, for Cobourg, via G.T.R. tonight.

The trip of the 57th Regiment to Windsor was called off a few weeks ago owing to the war and today the money was paid to the members of the regiment. It is generally the custom to deduct from each man's share according to the number of drills from which he was absent but the full amount was given the volunteers whether they missed drills or not.

The Temple Band will parade to the armouries tonight and take part in the send off to the battery volunteers.

Col. Sert[illegible] Dodds of "F" Company joined the volunteers when first called for but the order of the Militia Department forcing married men to get the written consent of their wives has shattered his hopes of seeing active service. It may yet be possible that Sergt. Dodds will leave.

No orders to report have been received for the 57th volunteers.

OTTAWA, Aug. 20. — The camp staff at Valcartier was announced last night as follows: Camp commandant, Col. Victor A. S. Williams, adjutant general; general staff officers, Lieut.-Col. H. E. Burstall, Lieut.-Col. R. A. Helmer, Major H. Kommis Betty; administrative staff, Col. R. E. W. Turner, Major G. B. Hughes, Major T. F. Homer Dixon, Capt. G. T. Hamilton; camp engineer, Major A. P. Deroche; supply officer, Lieut.-Col. J. N. R. Guay; transport officer, Lieut.-Col. W. Cowan; director medical services, Lieut.-Col. H. H. Duff; chief ordnance officer, Major W. Hallick; paymaster, Major C. N. Shanley; chief veterinary officer, Lieut.-Col. W. J. Neill.

The water supply seems to be the main question at Valcartier camp at present. The water powerhouse, in which will be installed an immense pump, has almost been completed, and the electric dynamo by which the pump will be operated is practically ready.

The work on the permanent buildings still progresses favorably, but it will be several days before they are ready for occupation.

Many targets have been erected, and it will not be very long before a splendid rifle range will have been laid out.

Transport Arranged For.

OTTAWA, Aug. 20—Arrangements were completed yesterday for the transport of the Canadian troops across the Atlantic. The entire corps, consisting of over 22,000 men, will be transported in one huge fleet of ocean liners convoyed by British men-of-war. The transports and cruisers will form a fleet which will spread over 120 miles.

Twelve Chaplains To Go.

OTTAWA, Aug. 20.—Twelve chaplains are to be sent with the Canadian troops to the war, and Col. Sam Hughes has called a meeting of the heads of the various Canadian churches to arrange what clergymen will go.

THE FIELD IS LEFT TO THE LADIES

Citizens Committee Decide to Withdraw for the Present

So successful were the efforts of the women of Peterboro to raise money for the hospital ship and war fund, that the meeting of the committee, appointed at the meeting of the citizens of Peterboro on Monday evening, decided last night to withdraw from the field and leave everything in the hands of the ladies. In accordance with this, the check of J. F. Daly for $25 and the donation of ten cords of wood by J. S. Bell, have been turned over to the Charity Board.

Those present at the meeting were Adjutant McElhiney, Canon Davidson, G. A. Gillespie, M.L.A., Mayor Buller, Ald. Stratton and representatives of the Trades and Labor Council. Ald. Stratton made a few timely remarks in reference to the few men, who were displaying interest in the idea and expressed himself as being in favor of having another general meeting of the citizens and starting a relief fund to assist the poor during the coming winter.

When the war fund collection over, it is altogether likely that some movement along the suggestion will be commenced.

Despatches From Capital of Belgium Show That the Belgians Have Narrowed Their Line of Defence and Next Move of Kaiser's Forces is Eagerly Awaited.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 20.—It was the turn of the Germans to-day to move forward. The enemy in considerable force appeared at several points on our front and, pressed in overwhelming numbers, the allies gave ground slowly, evacuating advanced positions which they had occupied as a result of Wednesday's cavalry drive.

The Germans fired several shells into Tirlemont without doing any damage, and the allies now narrowed the extended line occupied in a new defensive position close to the capital. The next move on the part of the invaders is eagerly awaited.

Louvain is occupied. We are now faced by a large army, and the next twenty-four hours should witness important developments.

After the loss of much time and a great number of men, besides important war material the Prussian right wing has succeeded in gaining on both banks of the Meuse the ground to bring them into contact with the allies' armies.

The German troops on the north bank of the Meuse comprise sections of various army corps, whose efforts have been directed toward the capture of Liege, and who are now disengaged. There also are bodies of cavalry, thanks to which the Germans have been able to make considerable disturbance and extend themselves north and south.

On the south the allied Belgian and French armies have been able to repulse them, but on the north, on the contrary, they have had a free field and could penetrate in small bodies far into the country.

In a word, the Germans have taken a number of our positions, but have wasted fifteen days in arriving at this result, which is greatly to the honor of our army. It is not a question of single battle evolution or character of some parts of the country or of towns. These matters are secondary in regard to the object assigned our troops in the general disposition. This aim cannot be revealed, and the most penetrating minds will be unable to discover it on account of the necessarily vague particulars furnished concerning the operations.

Fighting is proceeding on the whole front, extending from Basle, Switzerland, to Diest, Belgium, and in these numerous contacts the more the opposing armies approach each other and the nearer come the deciding battles, the more one must expect to hear of an advantage on this side and of yielding on that.

In operations so vast and with those engaged using modern arms too great attention must not be paid to the operations in our immediate vicinity. Evolutions ordered in a particularly previously determined aim is not necessarily a retreat. The engagements of the last few days have had the result of rendering our adversaries very circumspect. The delay of the enemy's advance is to the advantage of our own plan of operation.

There is no need for us to play into the hands of the Germans. That is the motive of the movement now being carried out. Far from being beaten, we are making arrangements for beating the enemy under the best possible conditions.

A Big Semi-Circle.

LONDON, Aug. 20. — The Chronicle says that the present indications are that the great battle in Belgium, for which the scene has been set, and which is now probably being waged, will be decided on the ground extending in a great semi-circle from Diest to Namur, curving by way of Quatre Bras and Wavre, close to the historic field of Waterloo.

The advance of German troops around and above Brussels, and even into what are practically the suburbs of Antwerp, is indicated in Reuter despatches from Antwerp, which report that German cavalry have been encountered near Herenthals, 15 miles east of Antwerp, and also near Turnhout, which is 24 miles north-east of Antwerp, and close to the Dutch frontier.

SUMMARY OF MILITARY AND NAVAL SITUATION

British Embassy at Washington is Notified by Foreign Office.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Washington, Aug. 20.—The British Embassy here today received from its foreign office a summary of the naval and military situation to date. Colville Barclay, the charge sent a copy to Secretary Bryan as follows; "Since the declaration of war, the fleet has been responsible for the safety of the expeditionary force which completed its disembarkation in France, August eighteenth, which was effected in perfect order and without casualty.

The work of the army in the Atlantic and elsewhere in safeguarding trade routes is best exemplified by the fact that at Lloyds yesterday, the war risk rate fell to forty shillings per cent. for almost any voyages of British vessels whereas the rate to insure freights of corn, paid by steamers from United States to a British port is thirty shillings, per cent.

A German fleet outside the Baltic is confined to the harbors. English commerce is almost normal. German seaborn commerce is paralyzed. The only casualty is the loss of the cruiser Amphion, which was blown up by a mine, after having sunk the German mine layer Koenigin Luise.

One German submarine has been sunk in the North Sea. The military position is as follows: "German forces at present extend from the north of the neighborhood of Basle through Liege to a point in Belgium to the east of Antwerp and near the Dutch frontier. The outstanding features of operations up to the present have been delay caused to the contemplated German offensive across the Meuse, by the defense of Liege where the forts are still intact. It has permitted orderly mobilization and concentration of the French army and the British expeditionary forces. German troops have now crossed the Meuse both above and below Liege and are gaining some ground slowly westward but their advance cavalry has been continually checked by the Belgians.

"In the south where the German armies are apparently on the defensive the French are advancing on a line into Alsace and Lorraine the great extent of which they now occupy after driving back in several engagements, troops oposed to them.

OFFICIALNOTICE.

Bishop O'Brien, received this afternoon, a telegram giving official notice of the death of Pope Pius.

Last Moments of Pope Pius

Canadian Press Despatch.

Rome, Aug. 20.—"Together in one, all things in Christ." These words, adopted as his motto ten years ago, were on the lips of Pope Pius as he entered the valley of death.

The end which came at one-twenty this morning was cheerful. At 10 o'clock the Pontiff experienced an attack of distressing coughing and the struggle to breath was painful to witness but as the supreme moment appeared, the coughing ceased and the features resumed their normal expression save for an increasing pallor.

Those at the bedside recognized the calm of approaching rest. The Pope's sisters and his secretaries could not restrain their sobs which aroused the patient from his coma. His eyes opened, and the lips moved and it was plain he was making an effort to impart a final blessing. The lips moved again, "together in one, all things in Christ," he whispered.

Dr. Marchiafava bent over the bed listening for the beating of the heart.

"It is all over," he said, and reverently kissed the Pontiff's hand. Father Francis Xavier Wernz, general of the Society of Jesus, died almost simultaneously with the Pope.

RE-OCCUPATION OF MUELHAUSEN BY THE FRENCH

Victors Also Took Cannon and Ammunition Wagons

Canadian Press Despatch.

Paris, Aug. 20.—The re-occupation of Muelhausen, Alsace, by French troops is announced today. Re-occupation was preceded by a very severe battle during which French troops took one of the suburbs at the point of the bayonet. They also took as a result of their victory, six more cannon and six ammunition wagons.

An official note says the situation in the Vosges Mountains is unchanged. In Upper Alsace, the French have occupied Guebwiller, fourteen miles south-west of Colmar.

NOTABLE SPEECHES ARE MADE BY THE PREMIER AND LIBERAL LEADER

Sir Robert Borden and Sir Wilfrid Laurier Express Solidarity of Canada in the Present Crisis—Premier Outlines Steps Taken Thus Far by the Government.

OTTAWA, Aug. 20.—The galleries of the House were crowded yesterday afternoon almost to suffocation with the great throng anxious to hear the opening debate of the session. Nearly every member was in his seat, and all seemed conscious that they were taking a historic part in the most momentous chapter of Canadian history. Donald Sutherland (South Oxford), who moved, and D. O. Lesperance (Montmagny) who seconded the address, dwelt upon the duty of the country to care for the families of the men who were about to risk their lives in battle for Canada and the Empire, and upon the wonderful unanimity of sentiment which had united all the states of the Empire.

When Sir Wilfrid Laurier rose in his place as leader of the Opposition he was greeted with tumultuous applause by his party followers, in which the members of the Government joined heartily. He at once declared that in the presence of a great national peril and danger to the Empire, all party differences must be forgotten.

"I say now what I have often said before," he asserted, "that when England is in danger—not in danger but when her strength is tested—Canada must stand by her to the death. We are British subjects and we must accept the responsibility and even the perils of that citizenship, as we have for so many years accepted its benefits."

Sir Wilfrid warned the House that the issue of war was always uncertain and that while Canada was in no danger of invasion, that her maritime ports were subject to the raids of audacious corsairs. Very delicately, but unmistakably, he suggested that some provision should have been made before now for the more adequate defence of our coasts and harbors.

Sir Wilfrid's speech was largely devoted to an indictment of the German Kaiser and his lust for conquest and power. The war now in progress, he declared, to be the struggle of liberty against oppression, of democracy against autocracy, and of civilization against that return to barbarous times when the mad ambition of one man could drive a great nation of intelligent people into a cruel and unjust war. The opposition would not quarrel with the methods of the Government, but would give these measures most hearty acquiescence and support. The answer of united Canada to the appeal of the Mother Country was, "Ready, aye, ready."

Prolonged applause welcomed the Prime Minister when he rose to reply. He spoke with deep feeling and earnestness, pleading the justice of Britain's cause in the present contest, which he characterized as "the first general European war in a century, and the most appalling war in the history of the world." No Government, he declared, had ever labored more sincerely for disarmament and peace than had the present British Government since The Hague conference of 1907, to the last moment before the outbreak of hostilities.

Sir Robert then reviewed the steps which had been taken by the Dominion Government to meet the sudden emergency of war. They had immediately purchased two submarines, had equipped the Rainbow and put the Niobe into commisison. A military contingent had also been offered.

A reply had been received expressing the appreciation of His Majesty's Government, but suggesting that the discussion of the details of Canada's aid be postponed for the moment. Even then it was evident that the British Government still hoped to prevent the outbreak of hostilities.

Sir Robert then referred to the gift of a million bags of flour to the British people. He said that the Dominion Government, with the sanction of Parliament, intended to establish in France a hospital of 50 beds for the care and succor of wounded soldiers.

In closing his speech Premier Borden said: "As to our duty all are agreed; we stand shoulder to shoulder with Britain and the other British Dominions in this quarrel. And that duty we shall not fail to fulfill as the honor of Canada demands, not for love of battle, not for lust of conquest, nor for greed of possessions, but for the cause of honor, to maintain solemn pledges to uphold principles of liberty, to withstand forces that would convert the world into an armed camp, yea, in the very name that we sought peace at any cost, save that of dishonor, we have entered into this war, and while gravely couscious of the tremendous issues involved, and of all the sacrifices that may entail, we do not shrink from them, but with firm hearts we abide the event."

The Canadian Senate yesterday declared its loyal adherence to the measures of defence proposed by the Government and to the aid which the Dominion will send to Great Britain. There was not a jarring note in any of the six speeches delivered, and all the members spoke briefly and emphatically. The address in reply to the speech from the throne was moved at 3 o'clock and carried unanimously just an hour and a quarter later.

BELGIANS RETIRE TOWARD ANTWERP

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 20.—A despatch to the Times from Brussels says: "Germans in strong force, mostly cavalry and artillery, entered Tirlemont early this afternoon, Tuesday. Big guns shelled the place, while cavalry played at war by attacking the flying panic-stricken populace, shooting and sticking them at random. The city is in flames."

London, Aug. 20. — A despatch to the Express from Hague says: "Japan's ultimatum to Germany has been the cause of some grave thinking on the part of many Dutchmen, who wonder whether there is likely to be any danger to the Dutch colonies, in the event of a great shuffle of the Asiatic possessions."

Paris, Aug. 20.—A portion of the Belgian army has begun to retire in the direction of Antwerp, according to an official announcement this morning concerning the situation at Belgium east of Namur. Germans have attained a line between Dinant and Neufchateau. Large German forces continue to cross the river Meuse between Liege and Namur. German outposts have occupied Dyle.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 20. — A body of Russian troops, according to an official communication given out to-day, has occupied Gumbinnen, 20 miles from the Russian frontier of East Prussia, capturing 12 German guns and a large number of prisoners.

Paris, Aug. 20.—There is a persistent rumor here that the Germans have occupied Brussels but it cannot be confirmed.

London. — The Brussels' correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, telegraphing Tuesday night says: "The Germans seem to be moving in the direction of Antwerp. Any Belgian backward movement in that direction may therefore be explained as strategic manoeuvering which points to the early discomfiture of the enemy.

ATTACK ON DIEST.

Brussels. — The Germans made a new attack on Diest in the afternoon, date not given, according to press despatches. After pillaging the railway depot they bombarded the town from which all inhabitants had fled. Their artillery also appears to be bombarding Tierlement.

RUMORED FALL OF BRUSSELS HAS NOT BEEN CONFIRMED

Rumors that Brussels has fallen into German hands are current in Paris, but there is not confirmation. The Belgian capital is known to be threatened by German cavalry and all approaching roads have been barricaded and entrenched. An official communication from Brussels says Germans have gained ground on both banks of the Meuse and are in contact with allies and adds that Belgians have done all that could be expected by holding invaders in check fifteen days and their strategy will now be merged into the general plan of the allied armies.

It adds that the retrogade movement does not mean defeat. Germans are reported moving steadily towards Antwerp and a battle at Charleroi in which the invaders lost heavily, is reported in Brussels but not confirmed. In many quarters today it was reported that Germany will not accept Japan's demands to evacuate China and China waters.

News of military movements becomes more brief as the great mass of Germans and Austrians approach the opposing forces of Belgians, French and British and indications of the position occupied, are entirely suppressed. This morning's note sent out by the French war office merely mentions that important events are occurring in Belgium and that there is nothing new along the frontier in Alsace.

London, 4.20 p.m. — The almost complete absence of news from the theatre of war today is the best evidence that big things are in progress and events which will testify real calibre of the battalions today engaged in "New Waterloo" or "New Sedan."

That the great German advance is being pushed with vigor and determination can be safely asserted judging from intelligence permitted to the outside world. On both banks of the Meuse, Prussians are crowding southward. The French army is waiting to stem their progress toward Sedan and Paris. The invaders already have reached a line between Dinant and Neufchateau, the latter point being less than twenty-five miles from Sedan as the crow flies. Northward their advance troops have reached the river Dyle near Malines almost midway between Brussels and Antwerp. Before this northward rush Belgians are retiring on Antwerp. In Brussels they call this a strategic retreat. Whether the movement is strategic or forced, the Germans have gained much ground in the direction of Brussels. Should they however take advantage of this tempting opening for a raid on the Belgian capital, they may find the now retreating Belgian army sweeping down on them from behind.

"All is going well for our arms," continues to be the tenor of official French despatches concerning the situation in Alsace-Lorraine. The official information bureau this afternoon announced that communication with Brussels since early this morning has been difficult.

PETERBOROUGH, THURSDAY, AUGUST 20, 1914

FOOD PRICES IN CANADA.

THERE APPEARS to be a good deal of ignorance of economic laws regarding changes in food prices at the present time. The resolution passed the other evening at the citizens' meeting was doubtless well meant, but unfortunate in its wording. The resolution states that prices have risen because of an increased demand, and asks Mr. Burnham to get legislation passed to remedy this condition, that is, obviously, to lower prices. Nothing could be more hopeless to attempt. The simplest, most general, and inexorable of economic laws is that increased demand raises prices. To try and alter such a condition by legislation is to command the mountain to come to Mahomet. It won't come.

Some people apparently fail to realize that Canada is in a state of war. War increases prices by increasing demand, and by withdrawing large bodies of men from producing goods which keep up supply. With increasing demand for goods and smaller supplies to meet that demand, prices must rise. Canadians must be prepared to experience a period of rising prices, for that cannot be helped.

While we must expect rises in prices, much can be done to prevent abnormal changes, and that is where the Government can take action. It can make it illegal to keep large quantities of meat in cold storage, large quantities of grain in elevators, or other food products in wholesale houses for an unreasonable length of time. These sources of supply for retail stores may require regulation, but, as for changing the condition mentioned in the resolution, it seems quite hopeless. Appeal should be made to the patriotism of the wealthy not to buy unduly, but, if persons in considerable numbers wish to stock up beyond normal, prices will naturally rise and cannot be helped.

At the opening of a great war, like the present, where trade conditions are much upset all over the world, there will be considerable fluctuation in prices, but, so far as Canada is concerned there is every indication that business will shortly resume a great deal more settled condition. In view of this expectation, it would not be wise to buy food stuffs in the expectation of a continual increase, for prices may drop as suddenly as rise in a time of uncertainty. What the public should remember is that there is no cause for alarm, and for providing against a seven-year famine. Price changes will occur with an upward tendency, but they will undoubtedly not increase to such an extent that food will be beyond the reach of poor people.

Exactly the same situation has arisen in England and has brought forth just such complaints as were made at the citizens' meeting. The British Government has fixed a maximum price for certain articles of food, and which leaves below the figures set, a margin for competition between the different provision companies. All that the plan involves is that nobody will be allowed to charge more than the prices stated. English papers, like the Westminster Gazette, say that prices may be varied at intervals of a few days, but there is no reason why there should be any considerable rise. There are ample supplies of all classes of food in the English docks, and the stocks are larger than they were at this time last year, while as yet there is no evidence of a serious interruption to shipping. The sudden upsetting of trade and the extra buying of unthinking persons, have raised prices temporarily beyond the point necessity normally requires, and the large stocks of food on hand in both England and Canada will likely restore prices to the level that prevailing conditions demand. Mr. Burnham will certainly act as far as he has power, and so will the Canadian Government, but if the people will buy more than they need there can be little control of prices. The public should face the situation calmly, not buy what they don't need, and prices will take care of themselves.

THE MEANING OF ENTENTE.

HAVING BEEN ASKED the meaning of Entente, we offer the following explanation: Literally it is a French word meaning agreement or understanding. In its diplomatic sense it is crystalized usually into a treaty between two or more nations, which agree to act together under certain international conditions for mutual interests. Thus, the Triple Entente is a diplomatic contract between Russia, France and England, making their interests common in such questions as preserving the balance of power, resisting the aggression of another nation, preserving peace, and enforcing treaties of neutrality. Diplomatic support is first given, and then, in case of an open rupture, war support when unavoidable. It thus causes a union of naval and military forces for war, which is only undertaken as a last resort.

During the existence of the Triple Entente, its power has been used diplomatically on several occasions and war prevented. The most notable occasion occurred about three years ago, when the Asquith Government stated emphatically that in case of war between France and Germany, Britain would support France. Germany backed down then, and peace was maintained. This time Germany had prepared for such an emergency, and defied the combination that thwarted her before.

Sometimes these diplomatic contracts are made more for show than force. German and Austrian diplomacy are notorious for being devoid of moral obligations and for being actuated by purely national or selfish interests. Britain has on more than one occasion been at a disadvantage because her outspoken regard for truth has been misunderstood. It is recognized that these contracts are not to be followed through thick and thin, but there must be a certain amount of common action, even to the extent of going to war to make them effective. This common action usually involves national honour, for the pledge or contract or entente, as it may be called, is usually made as definite as international politics will permit. There are, of course, loopholes, of necessity, but under certain exigencies decisive action is imperative. Italy's neutrality, in the case of the Triple Alliance, illustrates a loop-hole in such contracts. Britain's participation in the conflict illustrates grounds on which the contract is binding and its consequences unavoidable.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

IT MIGHT BE WELL for the City Council to take immediate steps to protect the families of the volunteers who go to the front, in the way that other places are doing. The Town Council of Oshawa has insured the lives of the 78 volunteers going from that place for one thousand dollars apiece, and a Peterborough man did the business. The City Council should not lose any time in taking up this matter.

THE PRIME MINISTER of Canada stated to the House on Wednesday that the Government of Canada would provide for those left behind by volunteers, and for the complete welfare of those volunteering. This has nothing to do with what may be done by municipal bodies to protect the men who go from the municipality.

This war is being fought on land, by guns; on the water, by ships; under the land, by mines; under the water, by mines, submarines, and torpedoes; in the air, by aeroplanes and dirigible balloons. And if there were any other place to go, they'd be there.

Macaulay says: "The evils produced by his wickedness were felt in lands where the name of Prussia was unknown; and, in order that he (Frederick) might rob a neighbor whom he had promised to defend, black men fought on the coast of Coromandel, and red men scalped each other by the Great Lakes of North America." The ruin now being wrought in Prussia's name by Frederick's descendant is still more widespread and still more frightful in its hideous ramifications. Nor has William displayed less perfidy in his reckless disregad of treaty obligations and the rights of neighbors.

HEADACHE

By Walt Mason

I wrap a rag around my brow, and say, "I have the headache now, when some renowned, acknowledged bore, comes knocking blithely at the door. The bore is told of my distress, and goes away, but thinks, I guess, that all my fierce, convenient ache, would strike the doctors as a fake. My frau announces that the place needs cleaning up, it's a disgrace. "Go out," she begs, "and take away, those old tin cans and bricks and hay, and make the whole blamed place appear as though white folks were living here." Whereat I heave a hefty sigh, and wipe some briny from my eye, and say, "Ah, naught would please me more! I dearly love just such a chore! But I am feeling half way dead—I have a headache in my head." The headache has its daily use; it is the finest old excuse! Without it life would be so blue! We couldn't dodge things as we do. But now, when things unpleasant come, with anguish we pretend we're dumb, and to our chambers we repair, and nurse our giltedge headaches there.

Big Emigration Drop.

The main feature of the British emigration return just issued is a remarkable drop in the Canadian figures during June and the first six months of the year.

The figure in June last year was 26,202; last month it dropped to 7,852. During the first six months of this year the number of emigrants totalled 53,200 against 123,496 in the corresponding period in 1913.

Immigration Decreases.

A heavy falling off of 53 per cent. is shown in the Canadian immigration figures for the months of April and May, which have just been issued. The falling off is general, and is the result of the Government discouraging for the present the entry of any immigrants but farm laborers and agriculturists and domestics. The total for the two months was 68,153, as against 146,423 for the corresponding period last year. The heaviest falling off is in the arrivals from Britain, where there is a decrease from 56,940 last year to 20,375 this year.

There were 20,713 from the United States as against 33,507, a decrease of 12,794. From continental and other countries there were 27,065, as against 55,976, a decrease of 28,911.

FRENCH ARE NEAR METZ

Southern Force Only 19 Miles From Stronghold

PARIS, Aug. 20. — The following official statement was given out last night:

"Latest advices are to the effect that the French army has reached Morhange (Morchinge), in Alsace-Lorraine, 19 miles southeast of Metz. Our advance was very rapid in the afternoon beyond the River Seille, especially the central part of our line. At the end of the day we reached Delme on one side, and Morhange on the other.

"There is little change in the situation in Upper Alsace. We continue to advance in Vosges. The Germans have retaken the village of Ville, where we had an outpost. Our troops, debouching on the Seille, have occupied Chateau Salins and Dieuse, but face well-fortified and strongly held positions. Our progress at first was necessarily slow.

"Our cavalry has had a successful encounter with the Germans at Florenville, Belgium. Very large German forces, it is announced, are crossing the Meuse between Liege and Namur.

"One of the French brigadiers has asked the commander-in-chief to make public the following fact: A French Hussar, made prisoner, was dragged by German soldiers into an Alsatian village and his throat cut before the villagers, who testify to the deed."

Russian Marriages.

The celebration of a Russian marriage sometimes extends over three days. At the wedding festivities the bride is expected to dance with the men one after another until she drops with sheer fatigue. It is a matter of pride with her to keep going as long as possible, and it is not unusual to find a bride dancing gayly after three days and three nights of vigorous frolic. When a girl is dancing with a man she always holds his pipe. It would be regarded as extremely rude if a man should continue to smoke his pipe in such circumstances.—Tit-Bits.

Insects In the Ear.

Should an insect get into the ear of a child or an adult immediately pour in a little olive oil, slightly warmed. This at once suffocates the insect, and it can then be extracted by some one who knows how. The buzzing of the tiniest possible gnat is horrible torture that need not be endured if there is any kind of grease to be had. Melted lard will answer or even butter, although the latter having salt in it is not so good.

Hot water will sometimes wash out an insect, but the greatest care should be taken to have it barely hot enough to feel pleasant. The idea is to drown the buzzing intruder as quickly as possible, but the delicate inner membrane should not be burned in the process.

Simple Jewelry.

Only the simplest of jewelry should be worn by the tiny girl. She may have an enamel locket swinging from a slender gold or silver chain or a platinum pendant on a platinum chain. She may wear a set of bar sash pins in striped enamel or platinum, surrounded with seed pearls, but she should not wear rings on her fingers, nor bracelets. No sort of ornament should be seen on her hair bow. Boys do not wear jewelry while in the short trousered stage.

A Rainy Day Closet.

It is a good idea for the mother of a family of children to have a rainy day closet. Into this closet she can put all manner of odds and ends of interest to children. On rainy days they may be taken out for the amusement of the little ones.

She Posed as the Buddha.

Regularly every year during the carnival the writer on Chinese subjects, Mme. Judith Gauthier, gives a little party in her wonderful house in the Rue Washington in Paris. The house is a museum of Chinese art, and Mme Gauthier's guests always find something new to interest them.

At this year's party when the guests arrived their hostess was not there to receive them. The servants told them madame would come presently and called their attention to her latest treasure, a magnificent life size Buddha with a painted face and covered with a wonderful cloth of gold. The Buddha sat on the piano, and the guests were admiring it when it sneezed and coughed. It was Mme. Judith Gauthier herself.—Paris Cor. New York Sun.

WOMEN'S SUMMER PASTIME

No Special Knowledge Necessary to Enter

While many women readers are following the Summer Pastime with interest there is occasionally to be found one who asks: "How can I enter; what do I know about—lacrosse or baseball or hockey?"

Such a remark is almost foolish, considering what has been stated so plainly in the announcements. The names of players of various sports are used because they represent a large and somewhat picturesque list, but the fact that they are players makes no more difference than if they were names taken from a list of taxpayers or from a city directory.

The Summer Pastime Handbook gives a list of 2,500 names and it is guaranteed that those in the rebus picture series may be found in this book. Thus it becomes as easy for an invalid grandmother to participate as for a sportive grandson.

There will be complete fairness and the valuable rewards will positively be given. Apart from the prize that is being sought there is a fund of amusement for every participant.

LONG-LIVED JUDGES

The Ontario Bench Seems to Supply Conditions for Longevity

At one of the clubs much favored of the legal fraternity, the illness which prompted the late S. H. Blake to retire from private practice for a nine-year occupancy of the Bench, was being discussed, and the fact that he was then moved to take up firm work again, and so long continued it in good health. Much interesting matter concerning the seeming wholesomeness of judicial life was evoked among the legal groups. The great Canadian counsel and chancellor, recently called away, achieved the good age of 79.

Judge Morgan, though billed for retiral from County Court activities by the generous age limit of 75, is only 76 and good for a long time at his Surrogate duties. Judges McLaren and Garrow of the High Court are 72 and 71, respectively. Chief Justice Meredith—whose amused eye upon recent provincial events would make a live newspaper picture, if enlarged, for judges have no politics, you know—is 74 and capable of the best work of his life, as witness his burdensome task on the Workmen's Compensation Act. Chief Justice R. M. Meredith, is 67, but looks a decade less. Chief Justice Falconbridge is a year older. In January next Sir William Mulock will be 71. Sir John Boyd, Chancellor of Ontario, is yet another proof that the Bench atmosphere really is a longevity tonic—being 77. Then there is Mr. Justice Britton—81 upon his birthday next September—"still going strong."

In fact, long lives are not unusual in Ontario court annals. Further attestation to this becomes patent from a casual glance through Osgoode Hall records. Sir John Robinson, who lived 72 years, was for 33 years Chief Justice of Ontario. Sir Henry Strong was as long on the Bench as vice-chancellor, judge or chief justice. Mr. Justice Gwynne, at the age of 88, had also served the like period. If Chief Justice Spragge's judicial service were counted from his appointment as Master, June 2, 1837, until his decease, April 20. 1884, at 76, it would exceed the above by 13 years. Chief Justice McLean was on the Bench from March, 1837, until 1868, and lived 74 years. Chief Justice Campbell also attained the same age, but only 18 of it was on the Bench. Chief Justice Draper lived 76 years and held judicial office from 1847 till 1877. Sir John Hagarty from 1856 until his resignation in 1897 gave service, and reached 82. Chief Justice Armour presided in our courts from 1877 until his promotion to the Supreme Court, 1902, 25 years thereafter. Senator Gowan, styled by the literary Davin, "one of the noblest and most interesting figures in our political life," served 41 years on the County Court Bench prior to that. Judge Wm. Elliott of Middlesex County, who retired in 1904, had completed 35 years of honorable achievement.

Perhaps fittingly after the recent "spirited" spell, the list may be closed with the late Hon. Sir Oliver Mowat. When he passed away April 19, 1903, he was 83 years old, and, since his call in Trinity term, 1841, had been a barrister, judge, or crown officer for a period nearly equal to two ordinary generations. His history is interwoven with that of Ontario's development.

What They Cut Out.

"I understand you had to undergo a surgical operation?"

"Yep, some operation."

"Doctors cut anything out?"

"Yep, cut out the auto I had planned to get."

Had Been Stung.

The teacher, who was giving the primary class a nature talk, inquired: "Johnnie, how does a bee sting?" Johnnie, a graduate from the school of experience, replied with emphasis, "Awful!"

ANY DYSPEPTIC CAN GET WELL

By Taking "Fruit-a-tives" Says Capt. Swan

Life is very miserable to those who suffer with Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Sour Stomach and Biliousness. This letter from Captain Swan (one of the best known skippers on the Great Lakes) tells how to get quick relief from Stomach Trouble.

PORT BURWELL, ONT., May 8th, 1913.

"A man has a poor chance of living and enjoying life when he cannot eat. That was what was wrong with me. Loss of appetite and indigestion was brought on by Constipation. I have had trouble with these diseases for years. I lost a great deal of flesh and suffered constantly. For the last couple of years, I have taken "Fruit-a-tives" and have been so pleased with the results that I have recommended them on many occasions to friends and acquaintances. I am sure that "Fruit-a-tives" have helped me greatly. By following the diet rules and taking "Fruit-a-tives" according to directions, any person with Dyspepsia will get benefit". H. SWAN.

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold by all dealers at 50c. a box 6 for $2.50, or trial size 25c. or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Another Canadian Woman Doctor

Word has been received of the signal success of one of Ontario's native-born, Miss Agatha Doherty, M.D., of Eglinton. Miss Doherty, who matriculated from Loretto Abbey and graduated from the University of Toronto, went to England a year and a half ago to spend six months in Great Orme Street Hospital as nurse in-training.

Being tiny and distinctly feminine, however, Miss Doherty changed her mind, or, rather, made it up differently, and decided to go and study for some medical examination. As a result, she has just emerged with the letters, M.R.C.S. Eng., L.R.C.P., London, after her name — the third woman in Canada to achieve them.

So charmed is Miss Doherty with England and its people that she will stay on there for some time paying visits to old and new friends.

Miss Doherty comes of a family with healing as its hobby. Two brothers are doctors in British Columbia, one of them, Dr. Charles Doherty, being superintendent of New Westminster Hospital for the Insane.

Homemade Barometer.

Those who love experimentation may try the following method of making a cheap barometer practiced in France: Take eight grams of pulverized camphor, four grams of pulverized nitrate of potassium, two grams of pulverized nitrate of ammonia and dissolve in sixty grams of alcohol. Put the whole in a long, slender bottle closed at the top with a piece of bladder containing a pinhole to admit the air. When rain is coming the solid particles will tend gradually to mount, little star crystals forming in the liquid, which otherwise remains clear. If high winds are approaching the liquid will become thick, as if fermenting, while a film of solid particles forms on the surface. During fair weather the liquid will remain clear and the solid particles will rest at the bottom.

Reading Music.

The literary man, writes a correspondent, may very well, when he is lying on his back, console himself with literature. But what is the scientific man, with no particular interest in literature, to do? A certain professor of my acquaintance once got through a month of painful convalescence by the aid of another kind of reading. He read through the scores of his favorite composers. He had no ear for the rhythms of literature, but a fine ear for the rhythms of music, and he assured me that he heard the music as he read the scores. He said that during that month he really came to understand Beethoven and that no performance of his work ever satisfied him afterward.—London Spectator.

RESIN IN COAL.

How It Gets There and Adds to Heating Power.

To the head of the family who has been shoveling coal during the long winter it matters not what his coal is made from as long as it gives a reasonable amount of heat and is paid for. And yet this question of the ingredient matter and the geologic processes to which peat from which coal is formed, is considered so important by those who are not simply shovelers of coal that the United States Geological Survey has made a study of the subject of the effects of resins in coals. Resins, under which is included the resin of commerce, the copal from which varnish is made, the amber used in jewelry, and many other similar materials, are secretions generated in some of the cells or vessels in plants of many different kinds. One of the most familiar resin-producing trees is the pitch pine, in which pitch is a resin.

Resins contain very much more hydrogen and carbon compared to the amount of oxygen than ordinary wood, so that, other things being equal, the resinous woods make much hotter fires than those containing no resins, the hydrogen and carbon being sources of the heat. The larger the amount of heat the hotter the fire. Many a Mississippi river steamboat was blown up in the oil days when, in order to win a race, the barrels of resin in the cargo were broached to feed the fires. Resin adds heat power not only to the woods which contain it, but also to the coals.

This is why there is resin in coal. Being more resistant to decay under water than the wood cells and other tissues of the plants and trees from which the peats of bogs and coal-forming swamps are produced, the resin lumps and particles are generally left to be buried in the peat deposits, even when most of the surrounding wood has rotted away and disappeared. In his way they are sometimes concentrated in quantity so that, together with waxes, likewise of heat value, they form considerable portions of the vegetable debris in the peat. Peat is the mother substance which, after deep burial on the crust of the earth, has been converted into coal. The kind of the peat largely determines the type of the coal.

The Secret.

Sparks—I wonder why it is a woman lets out everything you tell her.

Parks—My dear boy, a woman has only two views of a secret, either it is not worth keeping or it is too good to keep.

He Knew.

Bacon—Why, he's even put a mortgage on his bedclothes.

Egbert—You must be mistaken.

Bacon—No; I'm not. I heard today he's got some money on a blanket mortgage.

The Ambiguous Phonetic.

Phonetic spelling has many recommendations, but if you spell by speech and ear you may print ambiguously. For instance, Mr. Escott, in his "Club Makers and Club Members," gives the history of White's club "till it reached its present proprietor and analyst." Now "annalist" and "analyst" are pronounced alike, but printing would lose in clearness if they were spelled alike. —London Standard.

Stone Age Love Letters.

"What do you suppose a rejected suitor did in the stone age when a young woman sent back all his love letters?"

"If he was a sensible sort of fellow he probably built a house with them and put another woman in it."—Baltimore Sun.

Canada Ranks High In Art.

In the world of art the opinion of Mr. E. Rimbault Dibdin, curator of the Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool, England, counts for a good deal, for he is in the front rank of art critics. Mr. Dibdin gives high praise to Canadian ideals in art, and to the work of Canadian artists.

"The most striking feature of Canadian art," he says, "is a sincere observation and love of nature. Canadian artists aim high, and while the very eminence of their ideals renders their task difficult, their work impresses me by its earnestness and idealism."

On his visit to Canada he was surprised to find how rich Montreal was in private collections of paintings, and to note the fine sense of discrimination of the owners. In Toronto, too, he found remarkably good collections.

DEATH OF POPE PIUS

Ill-Health Had Been the Pontiff's Lot For Many Years.

ROME, Aug. 20.—The Pope died at an early hour yesterday morning.

Grief over the war in Europe caused the Pope much depression from the first outbreak, and several days ago symptoms of the old bronchial affection with which the pontiff had suffered in times past.

On Tuesday Machiafava announced that the Pope was suffering from a simple cold and that possibly complete rest for a week would restore him to his usual health. The bronchial condition, however, spread, and on Wednesday, it was announced that the Pope's condition was serious.

A bulletin issued at 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoon signed by Dr. Marchiefava and Dr. Amici, said he was sinking.

Ill-health had been the pontiff's lot for many years, and intermittently the attacks have been so serious that the world was prepared several times to hear of his passing. During the summer there had been numerous denials from the Vatican that his indisposition was serious. As late as Aug. 10 last, upon the occasion of the 11th anniversary of his coronation, Pope Pius granted numerous audiences. Two days later it became known that he was unable to work, and that he sat listless and silent for hours, evidently brooding over the great clash of arms in Europe.

POPE PIUS X.

Arrangements were made by which Cardinal Merry Del Val, the papal secretary of state, would render his holiness a daily report of the war situation. The Pope desired to see some way in which he might exert his influence to check the bloodshed and was more affected because any action seemed useless.

The break between Austria and Servia from the first became a source of great grief to him, for the Vatican was most friendly toward both nations. He was inexpressably shocked, he said, at the assassination of Archduke Francis Ferdinand, the heir to the Austrian throne, who, like all the Hapsburgs, was an ardent Catholic and was sympathetic toward little Servia, with which the Vatcian had but recently concluded a friendly concordat.

Unnecessary to Kill

In Modern Warfare an Opponent Need Only be "Stopped"

In theory, there is no particular need to kill anybody in war; it is only necessary to stop a foeman from reaching a certain point, but he must be stopped; and ever since war began killing has been incidental to the stopping.

The latest type of bullet is constructed on a principle which gives it a pronounced tendency to turn immediately after impact, thus plowing its way sideways through its living target and inflicting a terrible wound.

The rifle of to-day is capable of delivering 28 rounds of aimed fire in a minute. Years ago, an infantryman had to aim at a point twice the height of a man above his body. Now the trajectory of a magazine rifle is so flat that, with the latest type of bullet up to 600 yards' range, there is not enough curve to render any alteration in the back sight necessary

The modern bullet is a compound consisting of a core and two parts—the front portion being an alloy of aluminum 90 per cent., zinc 10 per cent., and the rear portion being an alloy of 90 per cent., lead and 10 per cent. antimony.

The bullet is enclosed in an envelope of 80 per cent. copper and 20 per cent. nickel. As many as 6,000 bullets of this type can be fired from a service rifle without wearing the weapon out.

If you would prevent vegetables from boiling over, drop a piece of dripping the size of a walnut in the centre of them.

APPLICATION OF CITY AND DECISION OF HEALTH BOARD

OUTFALL SEWER THROUGH NORTH MONAGHAN

Below will be found the application of the city in regard to the outfall sewer through North Monaghan and the decision of the Provincial Board of Health.

The City of Peterborough makes application under sub-section 7 and 8 of section 94 of the Public Health Act for authority to construct a sewer into and through certain streets of the Township of North Monaghan, according to the description and may be prepared by R. H. Parsons, City Engineer, for the purpose of carrying the City's sewage to a proposed disposal plant across the Otonabee River.

The sewage has heretofore been disposed of in the Otonabee River and to this the Township has for years been very properly objecting and has gone so far as to take action against the City for polluting the stream.

The Township is agreeable to the use of its street for the purpose mentioned under certain restrictions agreed to by the city (see paragraph A), but seeks to have the City agree to provide sewerage connection at reasonable cost to the urban portion of the Township adjacent to the sewer in question, and it also asks that any changes made in this sewer in the future be made subject to the decision of the County Judge. It asks also that the City pay the costs of this application.

The City urges that in respect to this question the Board should consider objections to the location of the said sewer only; that questions of sewerage, etc., being under the control of the Provincial Board of Health can only be decided by that body; and that the Board has no jurisdiction in the matter of rates, costs, etc.

The Decision.

The Board is of the opinion that the point made in respect to objections as to location of the sewer is well taken, and that the question of location is the only one properly before the Board. As there appears to be no objection as to the location of the said sewer and since the City Engineer and the Board's Engineer agree that the proposed location is the proper one, the Board allows the application of the City, provided that—

(a) The City do the necessary excavation work and laying of pipes, etc., with as little delay as possible leaving the roads in as good a condition as before, and indemnify the Township and its rate-payers against all loss or damage which may be sustained in the users of the streets as a result of the city's occupation of the said streets.

(b) The costs of the application are borne by the City.

The plans and specifications for this work will, if satisfactory, be approved upon presentation.

AVOID GERMANY

Tourists in Switzerland Are Given Warning

LONDON, Aug. 20.—A despatch to The Daily Telegraph from Geneva says:

"It is estimated that there are nearly a million foreigners at present in Switzerland. Food, which is entering Switzerland over every frontier except that of Germany, is plentiful but very expensive.

"The German Consul-General has issued a warning to foreigners that any person found on Germany's southern frontier, especially in Baden or in Alsace-Lorraine, without passports, is liable to be shot as a spy.

"Four Russians, alleged to have been officers, were shot yesterday at Friedrichshafen, on the west shore of Lake Constance, in Wurtemburg, Germany."

HUERTA IN LONDON

Cares Nothing About St. Paul's or the Abbey

LONDON, Aug. 20.—Marooned in London because of the war and the consequent interruption to travel, Victoriano Huerta, former President of Mexico, and his family, made a brief sightseeing tour about London yesterday.

Loading his party into two automobiles, Gen. Huerta instructed the driver to go to Trafalgar Square and Buckingham Palace. Suggestions that he might also care to see Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's Cathedral were dismissed by Gen. Huerta with an impatient "only Trafalgar Square and Buckingham Palace."

Gen. Huerta and family slipped into London unannounced and secured apartments in an obscure hotel, where they have rested quietly for two days, worn out by the trip from Jamaica.

BRITISH HONOR

The following is an editorial from The Detroit News: "A little while ago a large number of Americans were sneering at our Government because it thought it ought to keep faith with Great Britain in a little business matter concerning the Panama Canal. This was called truckling to England, bowing down to crowns and baubles. It was said that Great Britain would pretty soon throw the hooks into us if she got the chance, and that all this talk about 'national honor' was bosh anyway. Honor between nations? Pooh!

"Well, just the other day a question of national honor was put up to Great Britain. It did not concern a cent or two way or another on a ton of freight. It concerned the lives of men, the expenditure of fabulous sums of money—it meant the casting of the Empire into the seething pot of war as a precious stake. Great Britain had given her word—her promise—no more binding whatever than was our canal promise to her—that in the event of trouble she would stand by one of her neighbors. For a moment cautious statesmen considered how to back out of that promise. But other statesmen cried 'Great Britain go back on her word! Every nation on the earth would for ever distrust us if we did that.' Then the people took up the cry 'England keeps her promises.' And one night under the waters of the channel, flashed the message to a distraught people 'England will keep her promise.'

"There is such a thing as national honor—and it is a good thing to keep bright and untarnished."

JAP ULTIMATUM WILL BE REJECTED

Times Correspondent Learns From Official Sources

London, Aug. 20. — The Rotterdam correspondent of the Times says he has learned from official sources in Berlin that Germany will reject the Japanese ultimatum.

Despatches from Brussels to the London papers announce that the British, French and Russian Ministers with their staffs have left for Antwerp.

The Brussels correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Co. says it is certain that a tremendous battle is in progress between the allied armies and the Germans on the entire battle front from the Swiss border north to Diest, Belgium, a distance of approximately 250 miles. It is admitted that the Germans gained ground on both the north and south banks of the Meuse River.

Telegraphing from St. Petersburg, the correspondent of the Daily Telegraph sent a communication issued by the Russian general staff reporting a prolonged engagement about thirty miles north-west of Kamenez, the capital of Padolia.

"At noon Monday," the communication says, "an Austrian cavalry division with artillery and machine guns reached the line of the small town of Kusmin where they engaged Russian cavalry. After stubborn fighting which lasted until seven o'clock in the evening the Austrians were beaten back with heavy casualties. The Russian casualties were small."

According to a Rome despatch, the Province of Trent, Austria, has been requisitioned so thoroughly that the population fears starvation.

Policyholders should notify the Company upon entering foreign service.

The Cost of the War

It has been estimated by army and navy officers that the daily cost of the European war—exclusive of the loss of property and lives—will run to $10,000,000 a day, or $18,250,000,000 should the conflict last for a year. The loss of men needed to carry on the great industries, commerce and farming of Russia, France, Germany, Austria, Great Britain and other warring nations will be in proportion to that in money.

When it is considered that, in thirteen years, the cost of maintenance of the armies and navies of the countries at war, as well as the cost of naval construction, has exceeded $20,000,000,000, some idea may be had of the expense attached to war and the preparations of European countries for just such contingencies as arose in Europe.

The cost of the Panama Canal, one of the most useful aids to the commerce of the world, was approximately $370,000,000, but the expense of the preparations for war in Europe during the time it took to build the canal exceeded the cost of this gigantic undertaking nearly sixty to one.

The wealth of the five nations at war is estimated at $270,000,000,000, and in thirteen years the cost of maintenance of armies and navies naval construction and the like exceeded $20.000,000,000, or about 13 per cent. of the total wealth of the countries involved. The same money, if spent in the construction of railroads and extensions of a merchant marine would have made any of these nations commercially the most powerful in the world.

England's great navy of 579 warships, of which 58 are battleships, and 51 cruisers, with 14 dreadnoughts now under construction, was built at a cost of many billions of dollars.

Naval construction in the last 25 years has undergone a sweeping revolution, so that year by year the British Government was compelled to replace its obsolete warships with fighting machines which embraced all the latest ideas suggested by experience and approved by the naval experts.

The expense of construction was enormous, and from 1900 when $48,040,000 was voted for new construction and armament, the expense increased gradually year by year until $80,505,000 was voted for the fiscal year 1913-14.

It is expected that the taxes to meet the extraordinary expenses of the war will be quadrupled in Germany and France within the next six weeks. As business is at a standstill throughout Europe and every port of entry blocked, experts are wondering where the money is to come from. All agree that, when peace is declared and the figures are all in, the result fiancially will be staggering and that the heaviest burdens it has ever borne will rest upon Europe for fifty years to come.

Every girl on earth imagines that she would make an ideal wife.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

WAR PROCLAMATIONS.

Editor Review,

Dear Sir,—While our hearts are heavy and our minds are rightly anxious about our British Isles, could we not easily and heartily proclaim a day of fasting and humiliation for our sins and of supplication for dear lads and many married men soon to be in the heat of this great and unparalleled battle.

If it were a civic holiday, it would be no trouble to call a halt to all stores and works; then surely it would be becoming to acknowledge the King of kings, by whom kings reign and princes decree judgment. Instead of so much time being used up with giving glory to man let our world wide song be

"All people that on earth do dwell
"Sing to the Lord with cheerful voice
Him serve with mirth His praise forth tell
Come ye before Him and rejoice.

Then we have the dear old 124 Psalm and the 148 Psalm.

These dear lads and men would feel strengthened to go forward, feeling, that the God has promised to be a covering for them in the day of war, if such a preliminary as this fast day were enforced.

Peterboro could lead off, and such a lead would be imitated and echoed from shore to shore over the whole world.

Trusting you will kindly give this suggestion publicity in your valuable paper and with thanks, I am, etc.,

A HUMBLE SCOTTIE.

When boiling a ham, leave it in the water in which it has been cooked until it is cool. This will make it tender and juicy.

IN THE LAND OF THE NINETEEN HOUR DAY

and copper ores, and some gold. The ancient geological distribution placed the richest ores away up the sides of the mountains. Ores from 4,000 feet up will, and do, assay over $100 to the ton. Lower down the low grade ores are in abundance. The higher locations are esteemed, for transportation from such to a shipping point can be done by gravity, over aerial lines and cable ways. It all goes to the smelter at Traill, B. C., or to Granby, further up the Coast. The genesis of the mine is in the work of the prospector. He prowls about, finds what looks like a bed of pay ore. It is investigated. If promising, some development work is undertaken to try the spot out. If it stands up then further work follows. What is esteemed is that there be a large body of ore in prospect to warrant the putting up of plant, drifting of tunnels, etc. The work of bringing in the appliances to handle the mine is incredibly heavy. From many high elevations the ore is brought out on pack horses, 250 pounds to a load. There is no doubt there is ample workable mineral here to warrant large expenditure in getting it out.

What of the men who are doing things up here. A cosmopolitan crowd. Personal appearance counts for nothing as an indication. All impressions gathered from observations go astray. They come from all quarters of the globe and from all walks of life. I have been surprised at the high standard of education among them. Not only well informed, but graduates of famous colleges. I, with the assistance of a friend, made a brief enumeration of the men grouped in the hotel public room one wet evening. A quiet, plainly dressed man, patting the head of a dog, is Duncan Ross, at one time active in Ontario politics, now a successful and important railroad contractor and doing big things. A small, quiet and reserved man is Daniel McLeod, who handles over 5,000 men for the Foley, Welch & Stewart interests. Reading a paper seven days old is a famous stroke oar of a famous Oxford eight. The man in khaki leggings and a generally unkempt air is a celebrated mining engineer, up here to prove out a proposition. His say-so may mean the expenditure of large sums. A man in a brown suit and a most disreputable hat is the chief mineralogist of the province, and his word is law. He is vastly skilled in rocks, seams, leads, and all the lingo of the mines. Beside him is the principal of the famous Sabine Lakes fish hatcheries, where the province is trying to provide for a re-stocking of the rivers with salmon against such time as Nature calls a halt. Many of these men standing about could truthfully write titles after their names that had been earned in college and university, for this is the field of the specialist.

As to habits. I have never seen a community so absolutely, rigidly and perpendicularly sober as this is. It is almost incredible. I have travelled 800 miles along the coast and inside, and in pretty rough places, and I have yet to see one man whose appearance, — let alone his breath, — indicated the use of liquor. It may be consumed, under the surface, but it must be pretty deep down. Mr. Rowells policy to abolish the bar would have no assistance. Sir James' anti-treating view is out of court. For one thing, a drink costs 25 cents. That is a deterrent, for all drinks are cash. One thing that strikes me is a dead earnestness. Every one is apparently too much concerned in business to indulge in levity. I notice with approval the absolutely general courtesy and carefulness with regard to women. They receive every consideration, apparently more so than in the East. There is a friendly helpfulness, one to another, among the men that is good to see. There is no poverty, so far. It is not a land for the idler. It is not a good place to get a living, but a bully one in which to earn one.

I may mention a sort of index finger, as it were — a common-place one it is true — to the status of this community. The women of this place are the most inveterate and indefatigable washers I have ever seen. At it in and out of season. Now any community that flaunts the family wash in the breeze early and often is fundamentally all right. Cleanliness, we are told, is next to godliness, and if so, then soap must be considered as a means to grace. And when all is said and done, we unite in the masculine belief that woman's best gift to man is a clean shirt. Why, here they offer prizes at picnics to the woman or girl who may in the shortest time put on a clothesline the largest number of spring clothes pins. Isn't that encouraging home industry? I saw one excellent and expert young housekeeper slap on twenty-two in half a minute. It was positively wierd. I told her — being of the press, I am free to give advice where it is not needed — that she, with her manual dexterity should quit housekeeping and take up typewriting. She said she preferred housekeeping, having tried both. She admitted afterwards, in confidence, that it was not so much a change of occupation as a change of bosses. Isn't that woman all over?

While on this subject I may as well tell of one on Nicholas Flood Davin, of excellent memory. Davin had engaged to go from Pile-on-Bones, as it was as called (now Regina), where he was publishing a paper, and deliver at Winnipeg one of his lectures. Morning of the day things intervened as the railroad was hung up. He telegraphed to the committee: "Can't make it. Washout on the line." The committee promptly wired back: "Don't let a little thing like that bluff you. Borrow a shirt and come on."

In certain ways this country hath customs all its own. Consider the matter of dogs. These are many and often. Two kinds, the domestic and the infuriated. The first white man's, the latter Indian. Both are hungry, but the Indian ravenous. They will upset a refrigerator, open a corn beef can with their teeth, tunnel under a hen house and come up inside and astonish the natives. The town dogs hate them, and both do battle. Now, the custom—it may be the law for all I know—is that if you find a dog on your premises killing your hens you may shoot him on the spot. You may not follow him home and pot him on his native heath. Home, for the dog, is a house of refuge. The chain of circumstantial evidence must be unbroken. Growing out of a quasi violation of this time-honored custom, the local parson got him into a fix, rather. He observed an Indian dog killing a neighbor's chickens on the highway. He got his firearm and shot the dog very dead. I did not see the slaying, but I viewed the smoke and the carcass. Now the parson, like all parsons who meddle in politics or other serious affairs of life, had exceeded the bounds of prudence. The Indians appealed to the agent, who is a sort of tribal Poo Ba, for redress, the dog being one of a team of freights. The fine would be $50. So far it has not been collected, for the true patriot rises above the mere conventionalities of life. I call your attention to the fine public spirit that exists in this community. The Indian has to produce the body in order to make good. Both the undertaker and those who attended the funeral, among them a few of the most expert and exhilarating liars (on occasion) that I have ever had the pleasure of meeting, won't tell. In fact, it would not be prudent to do so. Is not this instance of fraternal fellowship to be much admired?

I have come on an astonishing fact. It is most distressing. I may say, first, by way of extenuation for the vagaries of the moon, that the sun goes down at 10.40 p.m., but rises most inconsiderately, at about 3.15 a.m. So the moon only follows a bad example. I may say, first, by way of extenuation for the vagaries of the moon, that the sun goes down at 10.40 p.m., but rises, most inconsiderately, at about 3.15 a.m. So the moon only follows a bad example. I am going to call the attention of the authorities to these lapses from decent usages and have the thing rectified. It seems that the apparent path of the moon, at night, is that of a very much flattened parabola, like a half-circle squashed nearly flat. This keeps the moon down below the horizon. In addition, when it does come up it falls to doing stunts behind the mountains, and at this time of the year the natives only get a glimpse when they go south. This, I am told, is remedied in winter. The whole thing is all wrong. I would not consent to live in a country where I could not have a decent moon on hand. Even the poorest man is entitled to his moon. I understand that its absence may be a hindrance to courtship, something that should be encouraged, and obstacles may not be intruded. I questioned a couple of young ladies in the matter and their answers were not entirely satisfactory. They admitted being hampered, but said they did the best they could without it. But there was an air of wistfulness, sort of reluctance, in the way they said it. I sympathized, of course. At my time of life I am so permitted to do without my motives being misconstrued.

Up here they play baseball. Good ball, too. Scores of 2 to 1 are the rule. That shows that the machine guns are well served and that the range-finders are working properly. These concussions are played off, as often as not, on a Sunday. Out here they do not slam the umpire. They have got over that. The parson that I referred to a few sentences back is the captain of the local team, only he never plays on Sunday. He is a good example of the church triumphant. The last man that assaulted an umpire, the parson caught him and threw him into a swamp, and they did not find him for half an hour. There is, as Jimmy Lynch might say, nothing like a little judicious roughness to suppress violence.

They have a scheme here to which I would respectfully direct the attention of those connected with the funds of our hospitals. It is this. Based on the idea, which is pretty certain to bear fruit, that those who are well are sure to be sick at some time, they issue tickets for admission to the hospital. Monthly tickets cost $1 per month. Six tickets for $5. The holder pays. If he does not require the services of the hospital, the institution is just that much ahead. If the holder fall sick, say he should require an operation for appendicitis (which any gentleman is liable to fall heir to), the monthly ticket covers all expense for the month. If a six months' ticket, then for six months. It is a gambler's chance applied to that institution. I am told that in the long run it is profitable to the hospital. Pretty much like accident insurance of which it is an offshoot. Suppose we try it on?

Prices always interest the housekeeper. Here are a few. Beef, 40c. lb.; pork, the same; eggs, 75c. per doz.; potatoes, 5c. per lb., which is at the rate of $2.50 per bushel; bread, 25c. for what we call the large loaf; milk, 25c. per quart; cream, 60c. per quart; butter (New Zealand), 45c. per lb. Fish are cheap. A salmon about two feet long and as thick as a hitching post, say 75c. Take any size you like, all the same price. Turkey (the last man that bought one was run out of town for setting an example of reckless extravagance), say $4.75 for the bird, on foot.

ADVANCE SHOWING of NEW FALL STYLES

Fashion's First Favorites in Suits for Fall

Diversity of styles is the main feature of the Cressman showing of new fall suits. Literally scores of styles are shown, each distinctive, individual and beautiful—and, above all, new in every detail. The materials brought into use include chinchillas, wool poplin, broadcloths, basket cloths, serges and various pile effects. The colors are mainly olive, bronze and new greens, plum, amethyst, copper, biscuit brown, navy and midnight blues, and, of course, black. Regarding the styles, the skirts are slightly wider at the bottom; some flare from the knee, others are shown with inverted pleats. Shorter lengths are prevailing. The suit coats vary in length. Amongst them you will notice the cape, redingote, postillion and military effects, the latter closing at the front. The sleeves are chiefly set in, with large armhole, giving a decided drooping appearance, whilst many flare at the wrist. The collars are really most interesting, showing the tendency of being high at the back, with a decided flare at the front. The trimmings are chiefly formed of plain, striped and Oriental velvets, bead embroidery; then the use of braid seems more than popular. Surely a visit to our mantle department just now, when the stocks are complete, should prove more than interesting. Why not call in and look over all these new style features?

THE TREND OF FASHION IN THE NEW FALL COATS

One would indeed find it difficult to name a new effect that is not included in our showing of new Fall Coats; the styles are extremely smart and dressy, and on seeing them you will be quite as enthusiastic about them as we are. Madame La Mode decrees that the lengths shall vary from 40 to 51 inches. The materials chiefly used are plaids, mannish tweed effects, teddy bear cloths, Ural lamb, plain and plaid zibelines and blanket cloths, in colors of greens, crimson, navy and mottled effects; black is particularly strong. The styles are many and varied, featuring the cape, Balmacaan, raglan and Russian blouse styles. Some very smart models are shown in the cape or tunic coats; these have the adjustable cape and when off give a smart Balmacaan effect of mannish appearance. Belts are very much in evidence and one notices that they are sometimes ingeniously combined with the pockets.

A COMPLETE SHOWING OF NEW FALL DRESS GOODS AND SUITINGS

Our Dress Goods Department is more than ready to meet your every demand for fall fabrics; many have already taken advantage of our early showing by selecting their material and getting it made up before the rush, and thus preventing disappointment, so rife at later dates. Germany, France and England have all contributed to our extensive showing—direct importations. You will be agreeably surprised at the wonderful variety awaiting your inspection, for our showing includes the most corect and most clever style features of fall of 1914. Amongst the showing you will find an immense display of plaids, tartans and checks. These promise to be very popular. Also a host of other fabric—serges, tweeds, tricords, permo crepes, etc., in many new effects. Price moderation is a ruling feature in our Dress Goods Department.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson VIII.—Third Quarter, For Aug. 23, 1914.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. xxii, 1-14. Memory Verses, 8, 9—Golden Text. Luke xiii, 34—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

This parable of the marriage of the king's son is found only in the gospel by Matthew and sets before us both the present phase of a rejection of the invitation and also a glimpse of the consummation, but chiefly the former. Miss Habershon says in her book on the parables that they cover the whole period from the first advent of our Lord Jesus Christ in incarnation to His second advent in glory. His incarnation is implied; His life, ministry and rejection are described, and His death is prophesied, but most of the pictures represent the time of His absence or the epoch of His return. They were not merely the words of the man Christ Jesus, a great teacher and a God sent prophet. They were, like all that He said, the words of His Father given Him to speak, for He said, "Whatsoever I speak, therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak" (John xii, 50). He taught also "through the Holy Spirit" (Acts i, 2; x, 38), so that in all His teaching we have the Trinity, even as in the parable of Luke xv we see the love of the Son, the Spirit and the Father.

Some aspects of the lesson today, such as the treatment of the invitations, are similar to those of the great supper of Luke xiv, 16-24. The king and His Son and the servants are suggestive of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. The words "Behold, I have prepared, * * * and all things are ready," of verse 4 indicate that "salvation is of the Lord" (Jonah ii, 9), from first to last. Just as in Gen. iii, 21, the Lord God provided redemption clothing without any help from Adam and Eve, as neither Noah nor Moses nor David nor Solomon had any say whatever in the design or construction of ark or tabernacle or temple, as the disciples helped nothing in providing the food for the five thousand, so the purpose and the working of it out in the whole matter of redemption and the kingdom are wholly of God. Nothing can be added to the full preparation which He has made. See also Isa. lix, 16. It is ours to heed the invitation, "Come unto the marriage" (verse 4), and to accept thankfully all that the king has so bountifully provided. The abundance of the King's table which we are privileged continually to enjoy will fill us with joy and peace if we are only believing (II Sam. ix, 13; Rom. xv, 13).

The story of a marriage takes us back to Gen. ii, 22-24, and on to the marriage of the Lamb (Rev. xix, 7, 8), the former in Eden being a type of the latter, according to Eph. v, 31, 32. The brides of Scripture are most suggestive also, as Rebekah, Rachel, Asenath, Zipporath, Ruth and Abigail. The story of Rebekah, being obtained by the servant for the only son of his master, who had given all his wealth to Isaac, is wonderfully suggestive. The question put to her, "Wilt thou go with this man?" (Gen. xxiv, 58) is like the "Come" of our lesson, and all the other "comes," such as Gen. vii, 1; Isa. i, 18; lv, 1; Matt. xi, 28; Rev. xxii, 17. We do not read of any of these disdaining the invitation or making any excuses nor of their being sorry that they accepted. Contrast the conduct of those in our lesson who were invited: "They would not come. * * * They made light of it and went their ways. * * * They took his servants and entreated them spitefully and slew them" (verses 3, 5, 6). What ignorance, what blindness! How often we are reminded of the pathetic words in John i, 10, 11: "He was in the world, and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not. He came unto His own, and His own received Him not." It seems almost unbelievable that men should despise or make light of the love and grace of God and the offer of His kingdom and glory, but the wicked adversary, the god of this world, is always doing his utmost to blind people's minds, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them (II Cor. iv, 4). The carnal mind is also enmity against God (Rom. viii, 7), and none but the Holy Spirit can break it down and convince of sin.

The burning up of the city (verse 7) may refer to its destruction by Nebuchadnezzar at the time of the captivity in Babylon or the destruction by Titus some forty years after the time of our lesson—probably the latter. The highway message may cover the whole of this age, when from all the world the guests are being gathered for the marriage of the Lamb.

The bad and good remind us of the net of Matt. xiii, 47-50, and the end of the age, when there shall be the separation. We are to gather all who seem willing and leave it to Him to prove who are really His and who are mere professors, who really have and who only seem to have.

In one place we read of the queen and also of the virgins, her companions (Ps. xlv, 9, 14). In Matt. xxv, 1 (Syriac and Vulgate), we read of the Bridegroom and the Bride and the virgins. In Rev. xix, 7, 9, we read of the Lamb's wife and also of those who are called to the marriage supper. In Luke xii, 36, we read of those who wait for the return from the wedding. All will be made plain in due time. Now the great question is, Have I cordially accepted His invitation?

Merit wins or it isn't merit.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 19.—A further substantial rise took place in wheat prices this morning, opening 2½c to 2¾c higher and advancing further 1⅝c on both October and December by noon. The influence supporting the higher values is the better export outlook and the fact that Europe will ultimately require the surplus wheat, possibly at war prices, all exporting countries being deficient at this season's crop excepting the States. Exporters were buying futures in a limited way.

Toward the close values eased off from the high points, closing at an advance of 2¼c to 2⅜c.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 19.—There continues to be a good enquiry from London for oats for nearby shipment, and sales of 50,000 bushels were made at 28s 6d per quarter. Exporters here were in the market for supplies, but owing to the small offerings no large sales were reported. The tone of the market is strong and prices have scored another advance of 1c per bushel, with sales of No. 2 C.W. in carlots at 60c. There is also considerable enquiry for Manitoba barley for export account. The demand for boiling peas is good and sales of two carlots were made at $1.75 per bushel. There is no change in flour, for which the demand is good at firm prices. The demand for baled hay is good. Mill feed active and firm. Butter rather quiet.

CHEESE MARKETS.

MADOC, Ont., Aug. 19.—There were 415 boxes of cheese boarded, and 2.. sold at 12⅞c. Balance refused.

PETERBORO, Ont., Aug. 19. Boarded, 493 July; all sold, 13c; 1025 Aug. boarded; 565 sold at 13¼c, and 440 sold at 13 3-16c.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Aug. 19.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 60 cars, comprising 758 cattle, 865 hogs, 1054 sheep and lambs and 314 calves.

Butchers' Cattle.

Good butchers sold at $8.25 to $8.50; medium to good, $7.75 to $8.15; common to medium at $7.25 to $7.60; common, light, inferior, at $7; cows, choice, at $7 to $7.25; good cows at $6.50 to $6.75; medium cows at $5.75 to $6; common cows at $5 to $5.50; canners and cutters at $3 to $4.50; bulls at $5 to $7.50.

Stockers and Feeders.

Deliveries were moderate and demand fair. Prices were about steady on a slow market, as buyers as a rule wanted better quality. Choice steers, $7 to $7.40; medium steers at $6.75 to $7; stockers, $5.50 to $6.50.

Milkers and Springers.

Milkers and springers were slow sale at $45 to $85 each, the bulk selling from $65 to $75 each.

Veal Calves.

Receipts moderate and values practically unchanged. Choice veal calves $10 to $10.50; good, $9.50 to $9.50; medium, $7.50 to $8.50; common, $6.50 to $7.50; inferior at $5.50 to $6.50.

Sheep and Lambs.

Receipts were not large and values remained steady.

Sheep, ewes, sold at $6 to $6.50; heavy ewes and rams, $4 to $5.50; yearlings, $7 to $8; lambs, $8.50 to $9.50; culls, $6.50 to $7.50.

Hogs.

Receipts of hogs were light and prices firm. Selects fed and watered, $9.65 to $9.70; and $9.90 weighed off cars; and $9.30 f.o.b. cars country points.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, August 19. — At the Canadian Pacific Live Stock Market the receipts of live stock for the week ending August 15 were 2200 cattle, 2100 sheep and lambs, 1550 hogs and 1300 calves. Offerings on the market for sale this morning were 1700 cattle, 700 sheep and lambs, 1250 hogs and 500 calves.

In sympathy with the decline in the Toronto market Tuesday of 45c to 50c per 100 lbs. in the prices for choice butchers' cattle and the larger offerings than were generally expected here by the trade a weaker feeling developed in the market and prices declined 25c per 100 lbs. At this reduction there was a fairly good demand for good to choice stock, but there was little or no demand for the medium class, consequently trade in whole was rather slow. There continues a good inquiry for canning stock, offerings of which today were light. Choice steers sold at $8.50 to $8.75; good at $8 to $8.25; fair at $7 to $7.50, and medium at $6.50 to $6.75, while butchers' cows brought from $4.50 to $7, and bulls from $4.75 to $6.75 per 100 lbs. There were no really choice cows or bulls in the market. There was no further change in the condition of the market for hogs.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, Aug. 19.—Cattle—Receipts, 19,000; market steady; beeves, $7 to $10.90; Texas steers, $6.30 to $9.30; stockers and feeders, $5.40 to $8.10; cows and heifers, $3.60 to $9.20; calves, $7.75 to $10.75.

Hogs—Receipts, 14,000; market higher; light, $8.90 to $9.45; mixed, $8.65 to $9.40; heavy, $8.50 to $9.30; rough, $8.50 to $8.65; pigs, $7 to $8.85; bulk of sales, $8.85 to $9.25.

Sheep—Receipts, 15,000; market steady; native, $5.10 to $6; yearlings, $6 to $7; lambs, native, $6.50 to $8.45.

Now It's Matches.

MONTREAL, Aug. 20. — Matches are up. The small retailer has advanced the price of the old five cent boxes of "silent parlor" and others to six cents and in some cases seven cents.

The E. B. Eddy Co. state that, owing to cables from Europe announcing a difficulty in despatching the chemicals for the heads of matches, the company had been obliged to advance the wholesale price.

PARIS, Aug. 20.—Joseph Caillaux, the former Premier and Minister of Finance, who had the rank of sergeant in the reserves, has been promoted to subaltern lieutenant. He is serving in the financial inspection department of the army.

ABOUT GIBRALTAR

Commands Absolutely Western Entrance to the Mediterranean.

Seen at a distance the famous rock of Gibraltar that rises out of a sandy plain at the extreme southern point of Spain is not as imposing as one who has recently read about it might expect, but on nearer view it appears to be what it is, an impregnable fortress.

The highest point of the rock is 1,439 feet above sea level. It is three miles long and about three-fourths of a mile wide. Natural and artificial caverns and tunnels run through it in every direction. Little is known to the outside world concerning these underground galleries, but they are said to be tier upon tier and many miles in extent. In the interior of the mountain are many chambers filled with ammunition and war supplies. Bristling on all sides, extending from almost the bottom level to the top are hidden batteries of artillery, each equipped with guns said to be capable of commanding the strait of Gibraltar, which forms the western entrance to the Mediterranean. The strait ranges in width from 15 to 20 miles, and it is claimed that these guns could disable any war vessel of an enemy trying to make the passage.

The garrison ordinarily comprises about 7,000 British troops—1,500 artillerymen and the remainder infantry. It is said that there are enough food supplies in protected warehouses to withstand a siege of seven years. The fresh water is obtained from the rainfall.

Solid John Bull

The Britisher does not seek war, nor evade it. He indulges neither in heroics nor hysterics. John Bull sits down and thinks. First of all he says, "Confound these foreigners!" Then he works out the matter in plain addition and subtraction, and leaves the higher mathematics to take care of themselves. He considers his obligations, and he recalls that he has not done so badly in the past. Moreover, he intends to do the right thing in the future. He goes to the other powers, and he says, "Look here! have a little respect for the price of consols, and if this thing can be settled out of court, why then I'll help settle it. If it can't be done well, I keep my obligations to the letter?" And he does it. He throws all his big heart into the game, and he tugs John Bull does not talk much of his patriotism or his honor; he defends them.

A Prophetic Vision

"When and how will it all end? Unless the Great States agree to call a halt . . . war is the only issue I can perceive. And when I say War, I mean a conflict which will surpass in horror the most brutally armed conflicts known to human history, and will entail distress more widespread and more terrible than living man can realize."—Count de Witte, the well known Russian statesman, speaking on armaments five months before the war started.

KIAO-CHAU WILL RESIST.

German Colony In China Prepares To Meet Attack.

PEKIN, China, Aug. 20. — The governor of Kiao-Chau, the German colony in China, yesterday issued a proclamation saying that an attack was imminent.

The majority of the non-combatants have already left, and the American legislation is advising the State Department to withdraw Willis R. Beck, the American consul, his presence being unnecessary because American interests temporarily are terminated. Mr. Beck, however, decided to remain.

Although the garrison of Kiao-Chau is under 4,000, the fortifications are believed to be formidable. Since the war began, the harbor has been mined and the land defences strengthened with wire entanglements, earth-works and mined zones.

Ultimatum Rejected.

BERLIN, Aug. 20.—It was authoritatively announced last evening that the German Government has decided to reject the ultimatum delivered by Japan that Germany restore to China Kiau-Chau and Tsingtao before next Sunday or suffer the consequences of such steps as Japan may deem necessary to take in the event of a refusal.

Recruit Run Over By Train.

FORT WILLIAM, Aug. 20.—Ralph Thornton, a recruit for active service, who had only taken the oath of allegiance to His Majesty Tuesday night, was struck by a C. P. R. train while crossing the tracks in Port Arthur shortly after nine o'clock Tuesday night and had both legs cut off.

Japs Arrested In Berlin.

LONDON, Aug. 20.—Some eighty Japanese students who arrived in England yesterday from Germany say some of their compatriots were arrested, charged with espionage. Those arriving here declare they experienced considerable discomfort and that all of them lost their baggage.

Before Great Britain declared war on Germany, the students say, the idea prevailed in Germany that Japan would attack Russia and the Japanese were well treated, but when it became clear that Japan, as Great Britain's ally, would not do so, the attitude of the people toward the Japanese underwent a marked change.

German Soldiers Starving.

LONDON, Aug. 20. — "There appears to be very little exaggeration in the accounts of the bad commissariat arrangements in the Germany army," says the Brussels correspondent of The Times. "Prisoners brought in by the French Tuesday had beet root and carrots in their knapsacks. They had been living on these for several days. On the other hand, the French commissariat is working splendidly."

WILL INCREASE CURRENCY.

Hon. W. T. White Gives Notice of an Important Resolution.

OTTAWA, Aug. 20.—The Minister of Finance has given notice of an important resolution authorizing an increased issue of Dominion notes on the gold security now held in the Treasury. This will enable the Government to a considerable extent to finance the $50,000,000 appropriation for war purposes. The resolution provides that Dominion notes may be issued up to $50,000,000 with only 25 per cent. of this amount held in gold in the treasury.

At present the act provides that a total issue of thirty millions only shall be against a treasury holding of 25 per cent. of the this amount in gold. Above an issue of $50,000,000 of Dominion notes the amount held in gold must be equal to all such excesses under the amending bill. If Parliament passes the bill the Dominion will be able to issue $20,000,000 in Dominion notes by placing $5,000,000 in gold in the treasury and this will mean an extension of the Dominion credit by $15,000,000.

Quebec Gives Cheese To Britain.

QUEBEC, Aug. 20.—At a special session of the Quebec Provincial Cabinet, held at noon yesterday, the Gouin Government has decided to offer the Imperial military authorities four million pounds of Canadian cheese, for the use of the armies. The gift is valued at about $800,000.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

Will Canada Carry Her Burden?

GREAT Britain and Europe, where productive industry has been paralyzed, have mouths to feed, bodies to clothe, constructive operations to carry through, and a thousand-and-one wants and needs to be satisfied—and Great Britain and Europe look to Canada in confidence for much of the needed supplies.

It were folly for Canadian manufacturers and merchants to be down-hearted during these terrible times in Europe. A great burden—a great duty—a great responsibility—has been imposed on Canadian manufacturers, merchants, bankers and workers. Shall Canada and Canadians shirk this burden, this duty, this responsibility?

What's the Answer?

GOOD AND BAD HURLING WITH PETES THE LOSERS

Umps Miller Has Some Trouble With Byrne and King — Score 8-4

St. Thomas, Ont., Aug. 20.—The Saints took the last game of the series with Peterboro yesterday by an 8 to 4 score. Hughey worked for St. Thomas and had a no-hit game for seven innings. Sterling started well for the Petes, but went bad in spots and was hit hard. Eight of the Saints were struck out by him, however.

In the eighth Byrne claimed Hughey hit him with the first ball pitched, but Miller couldn't see it that way and after some forcible language, Byrne was ordered from the game and grounds. Miller had to pull his watch and give him time before he would get out. Belring batted for him and Kelly played third. In the last half of the eighth King was also put out. Kopp stole second cleanly, but King thought not and said some nasty things to Miller and was ejected. He wanted to fight, but Curley Blount cooled him down. Score:—

FEDERAL LEAGUE MAP WILL BE REMODELLED NEXT YEAR

St. Louis and Kansas City Will Probably Not be Included in Circuit Next Season — Cincinnati and Cleveland May Take Franchises

If the young and ambitious Federal Baseball League is around doing business again as usual next year—and there are many who believe that it will not be—it is a particularly sure bet that said business will be carried on in some new fields. In other words, the "outlaw" circuit is due for a change in makeup. Its complexion is going to be mussed up considerable before the sounding of the gong sends the clubs away in the case for the 1915 race—if it ever clangs at all.

In some cities the new circuit has gone over with a bang and a hurrah. In Baltimore it went over with such a smash that it put the International club in that city on the bink for fair. It practically put Jack Dunn's Orioles clear out of commission. Against the Feds, Dunn's gang didn't draw enough to keep the gatekeepers. Conditions around the circuit, however, were not so roseate. In St. Louis the Feds started off with a big rush, slowed down quickly and in a month or two the scribes were counting the attendance from the press box every day — and they didn't take adding machines along with them, either.

Conditions Bar Feds.

Psychological conditions — whatever they are—figured importantly in the woe of the St. Louis club. It just "happened" this year the Browns and Cardinals are going wild, playing bang-up ball and keeping within shouting distance of the leaders in their respective leagues. It was the first time in several years that St. Louis fans had been treated to the spectacle of seeing the Browns and Cardinals win consistently and they couldn't pass it up. The Feds St. Louis club is at the bottom in the percentage column. Tail-enders are no attraction in St. Louis—there have been too many of them there.

Kansas City is not particularly a Fed stronghold. The Feds, there have never done any better than break even with the American association team on conflicting dates. And when the Kansas City attendance is split, neither club is going to get rich. Judging from talk the Fed magnates have let slip now and then, Kansas City is due to be dropped sometime during the next winter. It's a far cry, too, from Baltimore to Kansas City and the magnates realize they will have to have a more compact organisation to succeed.

Feds in Cinci.

Persistent rumors are heard that Cincinnati will have a berth in 1915 "outlaw circuit. The Feds were represented there when they first sprang up last year. The club was in Covington, across the river, however, and the fans wouldn't journey that far to see the class of ball then being dished up in the Fed circuit. It is declared that a downtown site has been obtained and that the Feds will have a team battling the Reds for patronage on even terms in 1915. Cleveland is also almost certain of a team.

Chicago, Brooklyn and Pittsburg, while they haven't made oceans of coin, are pretty sure to stick. Buffalo is a dubious location. The Feds have done little better than break even there, and they had expected to coin a lot of money. Summing it up, Kansas City is almost certain to lose its franchise and Buffalo and St. Louis are very dubious points. Indianapolis seems sure of a berth, as the Hoosier club has done better than break even most of the season.

COMMENT

As You Like It

Twice this season one of the rarest possible freaks of baseball has been recorded: a box score where one team, using only nine men, made exactly one hit, no more no less, for each and every member of the nine. Louisville and Nashville did it. When you remember that few teams go through a game with only nine men; that a team record of nine hits will usually have two or three for some one fellow, and none at all for a couple more, especially the battery artists; when you consider, too, the way in which a mans one-hit chance can be removed by passes or sacrifices, the scarcity of such games can be appreciated.

Any time a club, with nine men in line, gets just one hit, no more, no less, for each of the nine, its a freak if there ever was one.

The London team may receive an additional advantage in the pennant race as a result of negotiations between London and St. Thomas clubs to transfer the games scheduled for St. Thomas on August 31, September 1 and 2 to this city. The London team has two postponed games to play off with St. Thomas in the railway city, anf if this series is transferred here, it is likely five games will be played in the three days. The fans in St. Thomas are not supporting the team there and the management is losing money every day. With London fighting to hold first plase the games should attract big crowds. It is for this reason that they will be transferred to Tecumseh Park.

The St. Thomas directors are greatly discouraged and it is doubtful if that city will be again represented in the Canadian League. The team has been little better than a second division one all season, and the fans have long since lost all interest in the league race. The present owners of the franchise have been making an effort to transfer the club to Youngstown, Ohio, and it is altogether likely the Canadian League will be reorganized during the winter and a couple of the weaker clubs transferred.—London Advertiser.

The Boston Braves downed Cinncy and McGraw's Giants were beaten, thereby making the race all the more tighter in the Tener circuit. The New Uork sport writers claim that Shafer's absence is the real cause of the Giant's slump. They claim that with Tilly's brains and ability on the club it would walk home. McGraw has no one but himself to blame for Shafer's departure from the game. It is the McGraw policy to have his players in mechanical form and to leave the brains to the manager. Shafer thought he knew enough to use his own grey matter once and a while. He refused to be ridden.

A Matter of Nerve.

Arthur Ellis, the official executioner, presided in a most calm and efficient manner at the taking-off of a young Italian murderer in Montreal a few weeks ago, the execution taking place at Montreal's fine new jail at Bordeaux, about seven miles from the city. An hour later, while standing on the station platform awaiting the train, which would take him back to the city, Ellis observed a man walk leisurely across the track while the incoming train was some fifty or seventy-five feet away. After watching the pedestrian until assured that he was out of danger, Ellis turned away with something like a shudder, and exclaimed: "By Jove, that fellow has nerve! Now, I wouldn't dare do a thing like that!"

BASS FISHING

The Largest of the Tribe Are Often Caught In Rivers.

Some of the largest black bass are caught in Ontario rivers every year—not all in Georgian Bay or the inland lakes. An outlet of some good-sized lake is a pet spot. Clear, cold water, rocky bottom, the river a series of shallows and deeps—foamy torrents tumbling over stones and tree-reflecting quiet reaches intervening—wherever there is lots of sun and plenty of shade, you may be sure it's a natural home of black bass. Try every sheltered pool, casting 20 or 30 feet ahead. Settling places at the foot of foamy falls generally are where the bass wait for their natural prey. Remember: Keep out of sight, make little noise, let your baited hook strike water gently. Use a light rod, a multiplying reel, 25 yards of fine line, a 9-foot leader of silkworm gut, and a supply of hooks (on snells) into the bend of which a quarter would nearly fit. For, big hooks, like what Mark Twain called a "good job" of bait, alone catch prize fish.

Lake fishing is simpler. Requisites are a comfortable boat, a good rod and reel, 50 yards of line, a 9-foot leader, a supply of hooks on snells, a small spoon-hook or spinner, and a pail of lively minnows. On the tail end of the leader tie the spinner. At intervals of 3 feet upward, attach two snell-hooks and bait them with minnows. On the line, just above the leader, place a sinker weighing not more than an ounce. Throw this equipment into the water, pay out 60 or 100 feet of line, meanwhile rowing slowly enough just to keep the bait 2 or 3 feet off bottom. If you are on the right ground—rocky or bouldery bottom—all you want is a slight breeze to ruffle the water, a sky more or less cloudy, hazy atmosphere and warm. The boat, being 60 or 80 feet ahead of the bait, does not frighten the bass, and the slow rowing gives the minnows opportunity to swim as if they liked it. Then it's up to your patience and dexterity—from those boulder-strewn depths—to cozen His Freshwater Majesty off his cool shady throne, ten to thirty feet below.

The above practically lays bare bass fishing as a science. There is hope for the veriest tyro, however, for the expert responsible for the pointers confesses that the biggest bass he ever saw caught was by a Penetanguishene Indian, sitting at the end of a slab-dock. Perhaps $150 dollars worth of classy tackle was represented on that dock, the same afternoon, in the hands of tourists. Most of their elaborate baskets went back empty to the hotel. The Indian had a potato sack full of beauties. Every time his hook dropped in—the solution—it looked like a mass of wreathing worms, heaps of wriggling ends. Never spare your bait.

The same Indian had cut a boatload of bass-wise expectants next day, all expensively accoutred and carrying about every known kind of bait. Even then the only successful ones were those who got the Indian to do the baiting. Every now and then he would cut open the last fish caught to try and discover the day's strange gastronomic preferences among the bass tribe. Even that usually effective expedient was fruitless. The party were for starting home. A bite per hour lacked excitement. Anyway, to prove there were lots of fish in the neighborhood, the Indian flourished his alder sapling with a hunk of a pike's gill. He landed Exhibit A in under three minutes, amidst a salvo of paleface warwhoops. Then all betook themselves to business again—and success—proving black bass to have as many whims as bones.—Toronto Star Weekly.

AUSTRIANS SUFFER.

Both Servians and Russians Announce Victory Over the Enemy.

LONDON, Aug. 20. — An official communication received here from Paris declares that confirmation is at hand of previous reports of a Servian victory at Shabts over 80,000 Austrians. Sbabts is in Servia, 40 miles west of Belgrade.

The Austrians suffered a severe defeat, with very heavy losses in men and munitions. According to advice from Rome, their casualties amounted to 3,000 men killed and 5,000 wounded.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Reuter Telegram Co. says that a Russian official communication relates a repulse of Austrian attacks on the town of Vladimir, with heavy Austrian casualties, and a renewed German attack on Eydtkuhnen with a division of infantry and 36 guns.

Anticipating Samson.

An amusing incident occurred at a French theatre on the first night of the opera "Samson and Delilah."

A ballet dancer having fallen ill, the second trombone's wife acted as substitute. Of ample proportions, the woman, owing to a false movement, lurched heavily against one of the main supports of the temple and in an instant precipitated the collapse of the edifice which Samson should have brought about half an hour later. Samson and the Philistines and the members of the ballet were entombed in the debris of the temple. The audience applauded tumultuously. Two members of the chorus were badly injured.

"Well, of all things!" exclaimed Mrs. Gabb. "It says here that an all night marriage license bureau has been established in Chicago. I wonder what reason there can be for that?"

CLAN CAMPBELL.

The "Crooked Mouths" Have Had an Adventurous History.

The name Campbell in Gaelic means "Wry mouth," and it is an interesting fact that the facial characteristic which originally inspired the name continued down through the centuries, the late Duke of Argyll having a slight twist in his mouth.

The Campbells have had a romantice history running far back in the annals of Scotland and England.

Nine centuries ago Gillespie Campbell acquired, by marriage, the lordship of Lochnow, in Argyllshire. Sir Colin Campbell, the next in descent, was a renowned and gallant chieftain, and was a nominee in 1291 on the part of Robert Bruce in the contest for the crown of Scotland. He was slain in a conflict with his powerful neighbor, the Lord of Lorne, where a cairn is erected over his grave. The event occasioned continued feuds for a series of years between the two houses, which terminated at last by the marriage of the first Earl of Argyll with the heiress of Lorne.

The duke who died the other day was not the first in his family to marry the relative of a sovereign. The son of the Sir Colin mentioned above fought by the side of Robert Bruce in almost every field from the battle of Methven to that of Bannockburn. The King appreciated his services so highly that he gave him his sister Mary in marriage.

Sir Duncan Campbell, three generations later, was raised to the dignity of a Lord of Parliament in 1445 by the title of Lord Campbell. He was one of the hostages for the redemption of James I. in 1424, for whom he collected the ransom, taking it to Windsor.

The first Earl of Argyll was a Lord High Chancellor of Scotland, the second earl fell at Flodden, the fourth earl was the first person of importance in Scotland who embraced the Protestant religion; the fifth earl at the breaking out of the civil wars in Scotland espoused the cause of Queen Mary and commanded Her Majesty's forces at the battle of Langside; the seventh earl distinguished himself in arms at home and afterward obtained renown in the wars of Philip II. of Spain against the States of Holland.

The first Marquis of Argyll, who was born in 1597, placed the crown upon the head of Charles I. at Scone. Subsequently, however, he assisted in the ceremony of proclaiming Cromwell as Protector. On the restoration of the monarchy he hurried to London to congratulate the King, who refused to see him, and sent him to the Tower. He was afterward sent back to Scotland by sea, and narrowly escaped shipwreck. In 1661 he was condemned to death for high treason.

His son also was executed. After the revolution his successor was made first Duke of Argyll. The second duke's qualifications are immortalized by Pope:

> "Argyll, the State's whole thunder,
> born to wield,
> And shake alike the Senate and the > field."

He was field marshal of all the King's forces.

The eighth duke, father of the late Duke of Argyll, was Postmaster-general, Lord Privy Seal and Secretary of State for India. He was also a brilliant essayist, and a writer on scientific matters of great popularity. He died in 1900.

Languages of the World.

A very precise computation has been made by Adelung, representing the number of languages in the world at 3,424—937 Asiatic, 587 European, 276 African and 1,624 American. This number is far too small. It is impossible as yet to reckon the number exactly until we are sure that each unknown tribe of savage man has been brought within the knowledge of the world, but it is not an overstatement to estimate the languages of the world at more than 5,000.

Local Corps Making Preparations for Observance

The Salvation Army Harvest Festival, a world wide effort, will be celebrated Sept. 19 to 26, and preparations are bing made to have quite a local celebration.

Adjutant and Mrs. McElhiney and the local Corps are a bit anxious about the result of the canvas but have every confidence in the people, knowing of the work done by the Army will come to the assistance at this particular time.

While special demands are being made on everybody just now, that of the ordinary cannot be overlooked and any gift of money or goods will be thankfully received by any of the members of the Army who will have individua: responsibility put on them in the effort. Special meetings will be arranged, announcement of which will be made later. There will very likely be a sale of goods and produce also. The Temple Band boys will assist in some way tonight in giving the boys who are off to Cobourg, a good send off and only are sorry they did not know of the departure of some of the volunteers on Monday night or they could have done something for them too.

Arrangements for Peace Centenary Will Continue

Ottawa, Aug. 20.—The Canadian Peace Centenary Association has decided to continue their arrangements for the celebration of the hundred years of peace between Canada and the United States, but agreed that, "having regard for the serious nature of events arising out of the war, it would be inexpedient to attempt any present definite arrangements as to time and place of a commemoration of an international character. With this exception the association will proceed with its educational and other work.'

The postmaster-general indicated that the government was considering reciprocal action with the United States as regards the special issue of stamps.

Sir Hugh Graham, of Montreal, and Hon. Robert Jaffray, Toronto, have been included in the list of vice-presidents of the Canadian Patriotic fund.

Would Make "O' Canada" Hymn of Whole Dominion

Canadian Club President Wants Standardized Version

Mr. J. A. Valquette, president of the Canadian Club of Calgary, is the moving spirit in a propositon to secure a standardized version of "O Canada," the Canadian national anthem, for use throughout the Dominion. At present there are some dozen versions that widely differ with respect to the words — the music being the same — and it is by no means uncommon at a public meeting or gathering of such sort as a school closing to hear persons side by side singing different words to the music.

Objections Answered

Practically every one has thought of "O Canada" as a natonal anthem with words the same from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Some objection has been met in certain quarters to there being a Canadian anthem at all, some saying "We have 'God Save the King,' and that is enough." To this, Mr. Valiquette, in his report to the Association of Canadian Clubs, makes the following reply:

"It was suggested that the national anthem, 'God Save the King,' is all sufficient, and that no proper purpose is to be served in having a Canadian anthem. Our members feel strongly that there is no lessening of the deep-rooted enthusiasm which moves the Canadian people to sing 'God Save the King,' when we seek the expression of Canadian sentiment in a Canadian anthem." But cases of objection were far in the minority and it rather appeared that the majority favoured the adoption of a Canadian anthem which will reflect the common heartbeat of a great Canadian people.

It is interesting to note that the song "O Canada" was originally written in French by the Hon. Adam Routhier of Quebec. There have been several English versions that have been adaptations rather than translations, but the music that is almost universally accepted was written by C. Lavalee.

Recorder Weir's Version

Here are the first stanzas of the four better known versions. That by the Hon. Stanley Weir, D.C.L., recorder of the city of Montreal, is as follows:

O Canada, our home, our native land,
True patriot love in us thou dost command.
We see the rising, fair, dear land,
The true North strong and free;
And stand on guard, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
Defend our rights, forfend this nation's thrall.

Dr. Richardson's Interpretation.

The first stanza of Dr. T. B. Richardson's version is:

O Canada! Our fathers' land of old.
Thy brow is crowned with leaves of red and gold,
Beneath the shade of the Holy Cross
Thy children own thy birth.
No stains thy glorious annals gloss
Since valour shields thy hearth.
Almighty God: on Thee we call,
Defend our rights, forfend this nation's thrall.

General Buchanan's Contribution

In military circles the version by Brigadier General Lawrence Buchanan, C.V.O., C.M.G., is generally accepted. There is only one stanza and it is as follows:

O Canada, our heritage, our love,
Thy worth we praise all other lands above.
From sea to sea throughout thy length, from pole to borderland,
At Britain's side whate'er betide, unflinchingly we stand,
And as we sing "God Save the King,"
"Guide thou the Empire wide," do we implore,
And prosper Canada from shore to shore.

Grant Balfour's Stanza

There are some others that have been adopted by different Canadian Clubs in the Dominion, and as an instance of these the following by Grant Balfour is given:

O Canada, Dominion of the North
How vast the path whereon thy sun rises forth.
His sweep from stern Atlantic flood
To far Pacific main
Proclaims the bounteous hand of God
Upon thy great domain.
O daughter blest.
Peace, peace be thine,
May wisdom wreath thy brow with light divine,
And in thy law and council ever shine.

NOTES OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY

It will be of interest to many people to know that they can obtain some very valuable information at the Public Library in regard to the various causes that have led up to the present deplorable condition in Europe. In the "Cambridge Modern History," vols. IX to XII, a clear view is given of the history relating to the event. Needless to say, it is altogether too long for the general reader, but everyone can obtain by judicious picking a fair grasp of the matter. The work in question also contains a whole volume of maps presenting to the student the various changes in Europe that have occurred during the last housand years. Every volume also has a full bibliography in reference to matters contained therein.

With regard to Germany there is also a very full account in the history named and also in regard to Holland, Belgium and Luxemburg. A full discussion of the origins and characters of the treaties regarding these countries will be found in the same work, in the following places: Chapter 16 of vol. X, chapter 23 of vol. XI, and chapter 9 of vol. XII.

There is a very excellent account of Holland in the "Story of the Nations" series, but, unfortunately, the account stops at 1813. In vol. XI of the Cambridge Modern History p. 674-5, there is a concise account of Luxemburg.

The library has also just received a map showing the new boundaries caused by the late Balkan war. This is to be found in pamphlet case No. 60 and can be obtained for reference on application to the librarian.

There are very many other historical works that will be of great value to the student of present day happenings, which can be easily obtained either by reference to the catalogue or by personal request to those in charge.

IN THE LAND OF THE NINETEEN HOUR DAY

Life in the Mining Districts of British Columbia —Some Notes of Things as They Seem to a Tenderfoot

LETTERS coming to me ask that I tell something of this part of the Province (British Columbia). One wishes to know if the climate is fine, and if the section is the garden of Canada, as we hear it expressed in the East. An excellent lady enquires if the Indians are very wild and fierce. Both enquiries are inside the point of view.

The climate is one all its own. The fellow who wrote the descriptive part of Morse's geography, used in the schools of sixty years ago, put down when at a loss for definite information, that the climate of any country was "moist but pleasant." That about describes the climate here. This season is, I am told, very wet. The growth is most luxuriant, but I can see that many grains would not ripen before frost. Vegetables, fruits and flowers are magnificent, and so soon as access may be had to markets offering adequate consumption, will be a profitable undertaking to go into. At present freight rates are prohibitive. It is only recently that freight has been handled from Vancouver to this point at less than $50 per ton.

The Indians are kind and gentle, and broken to harness, single or double, so to speak, and because they have to be. They still regard the white man as an interloper, but expression of such feeling they find does not pay. The Indian knows which side of the bread is buttered, but prefers that some one else put it on. He is a nearly self-supporting ward of the Government. Well housed, as houses go. Finds fishing profitable, that is, fishing for himself. He is of no use whatever in the industries and occupations. Raises considerable truck, and on the whole lives quietly. It is a crime here to supply drink to an Indian. No white man, be he ever so reckless, will, in self-protection, break this rule. Up here, after you photograph an Indian squaw, you have to go and get a new lens for the camera. The one used on the squaw is distorted so as to be of little further use.

This is the most northerly point reached by any railroad on the continent having conections. It is on the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific and inland from the coast, (Prince Rupert), 200 miles. Has been headquarters for big contracting firms building the line of the G. T. P. All the activities that group about a big railroad construction head-works are here. Immense storehouses, large and roomy offices, ample plant. This will go over the line to be used in building the connecting road from Fort George to Vancouver. They are at it now.

Outside of the railway work, the business is almost wholly that of mining. The mountains are of the Coast Range, as distinct from other ranges. From where I write I can see the tops of twenty-one big peaks, the summits snow-capped and shining in the sun. Real big fellows. Anywhere else they would be of continental distinction. Back of the office is the Rocheur de Boule, "Mount of the Rolling Stone," as named by the Indians. Down the sides are many landslides, hence its name. The summit is fully 8,000 feet above the level of the village. The mountains form a galaxy of never-ending beauty. Clothed with tall timber up to the tree line, then masses of shrubs above, followed by a dense fringe of mosses, and the summits bare to the peak. Snow covered at all times, but especially so in winter.

All the way to the Coast the mountains hem in the valley of the Skeena river, blue-green and intensely cold because fed by the mountain snows for hundreds of miles. Navigable for nearly two hundred miles from where it meets the ocean. This is the famous salmon water of the West. Renowned in the canning and food trade. I followed its course for nearly 240 miles, and I take it to be a bigger river, in breadth and velocity of flow, than the St. Lawrence. But that is only personal opinion. The fishing extends for fifty miles up, the influence of the tides being negligible above that point. The shores are dotted with canneries, where the fish are prepared and packed. I have seen these canneries, and until I have experienced a season of abstinence, have done with salmon. I prowled about the wharf at a fishing point and saw a schooner come in and unload 378,000 pounds of halibut, the result of a week's fishing. Curiously the manager told me that these were sorted, sending only the large ones to the East, keeping the small ones for home consumption. Out here they would not dream of eating the big fish. So the old arrangement of Jack Spratt and his wife holds good.

But as to the mining. Possibly three years time has elapsed since the first efforts were made in this section. The mountains are full of silver

Canadians at War To be Seen on Films

Montreal, Aug. 20—Arrangements are being completed by the Dominion government to have three camera men accompany the Canadian trops to Europe and take moving pictures there of the troops in the war zone.

These camera records will be kept at Ottawa as part of the archives. They will also be placed on view in Montreal by the Dominion General Film Co., of this city, under whose direction the pictures will be taken.

The idea has been favored by Colonel the Hon. Sam Hughes from the first. It is proposed to have full records of the Canadian contingent in field manoeuvres wherever the men go. The interest taken in them when they are exhibited is expected to justify the outlay made by the government in this connection.

Every facility will be given to the camera men to take the finest pictures of the Canadian troops just prior to going into action, with their war kit and campaign equipment.

200 NURSES TO JOIN BRITISH WAR SERVICE

Montreal, Aug. 20.—Although no official intimation has been received at militia headquarters that nurser will be sent to the front, it was learned from an authentic source that about 200 Canadian nurses will be sent to England to merge with the British contingent.

These nurses will not be specially attached to Canadian regiments, but will be placed entirely at the disposal of the British war office. They will be selected, and their salaries paid by the Canadian government, and they must all be fully trained graduates. Seventy-seven women have already registered in Montreal alone, and their names forwarded to Ottawa. Several society women have also placed their services at the disposal of the government, in the hope that their services could be used for organization or other work.

Roman Catholic girls of all ages from 17 upwards are joining the Roman Catholic ambulance classes. The majority have signified their desire for active service.

The funeral will take place Saturday afternoon from the family residence to Dawson's burying grounds. Service at the house at 2 o'clock.

Tribute to Militia.

Col. Lord Brooke, who commanded the camp at Petawawa, where all arms of the service were in training for the first time on a large scale, and who has since completed a tour of inspection of training camps in the Maritime Provinces with the Minister of Militia, has sailed again.

"The Canadian soldier leads a more strenuous life, and therefore can adapt himself more quickly to the conditions of military service than the European soldier," he says.

Speaking of the mobilization of 12,000 troops within so short a time at Petawawa, he said that it could not have been possible except for the complete harmony existing between the railways and the Canadian mobilization staff.

Russian Statesman Predicts End of War in Two or Three Months

PARIS, Aug. 20.—A news despatch from Tarbes quotes Count Witte, the Russian statesman, who is on his way from Marritz to Russia, as declaring that the European war would not last more than two or three months.

It was bound to end, he said, in the downfall of Germany. The moment had come when Russia should intervene. Her mobilization had been carried out slowly but surely, and her army was certain to vanquish Germany, whatever might happen.

THE GAY GORDONS

Darghal, October 20th, 1897.

Who's for the gathering, who's for the fair?
(Gay goes the Gordon to a fight.)
The bravest of the brave are at deadlock there,
(Highlanders! March! By the right!)
There are bullets by the hundred buzzing in the air.
There are bony lads lying on the hillside bare;
But the Gordons know what the Gordons dare
When they hear the pipers playing!

The happiest English heart to-day
(Gay goes the Gordon to a fight).
Is the heart of the Colonel, hide it as he may,
(Steady there! Steady on the right!)
He sees his work and he sees the way,
He knows his time and the word to say,
And he's thinking of the tune that the Gordons play
When he sets the pipers playing!
Rising, roaring, rushing like the tide,
(Gay goes the Gordon to a fight).
They're up through the fire-zone, not to be denied;
(Bayonets! and charge! By the right!)
Thirty bullets straight where the rest went wide,
And thirty lads are lying on the bare hillside;
But they passed in the hour of the Gordon's pride,
To the skirl of the pipers' playing.
—Henry Newbolt.

Too Much For Quebec.

The Sunday laws of the Province of Quebec are not nearly so strict as those of Ontario, but they have a limit, and this was reached when an enterprising Montreal dealer in a horizon subdivision announced an auction sale of five hundred lots for Sunday afternoon, prospective purchasers being transported to the scene by special train. The crowd was assembled, and the auctioneer was just stepping upon the block when a telegram forbidding the sale was received from the Assistant Attorney-General of the province, acting upon direct orders from Sir Lomer Gouin.

JAPAN WILL BE PREPARED TO ACT ON GERMANY'S ANSWER

Strict Censorship Exists and Little is Known Concerning Movements of Troops and Ships ---Germans Are Active Around Brussels

Canadian Press Despatch.

"The most formidable shock in history" will occur on Belgian soil, according to French military experts, when the great armies of Germans and Austrians on one side and the allied troops of Belgium, France and Britain on the other, come into close contact.

No definite information is permitted to get past the censor as to the place where the decisive encounter is to occur, but the general staff of the French army declares itself confident of fighting under the best auspices for its own forces. Not a shot was fired by Belgians when the entry into Brussels was made yesterday by an advance guard of German cavalry, who, it was reported, were to be followed to-day by a strong column of German troops encamped in the vicinity.

After the departure of Belgian troops from the capital, communication was cut off between that city and other parts of Belgium and abroad. Antwerp, whither Belgians have retired, is understood to be very strongly fortified, and military correspondents declare preparations for its defence extend over an enormous area, while it has been provisioned for a long siege.

An Anglo-American Rough Riders corps has been formed in Paris and its services have been accepted by the French ministry of war.

Tokio, Aug. 21. — Japan is quietly preparing for eventualities, following the expiration next Sunday of her ultimatum to Germany demanding the withdrawal of German warships from the Orient and the evacuation of Kiao Chow.

The strictest prohibition has been placed on the publication of any information concerning the movements of Japanese ships and troops. The correspondence is censored and the newspapers are closely watched.

Bloody Battles for the Germans

London, Aug. 21.—A despatch to the Havas agency from Belfort, by way of Paris, says the battles around Muelhausen have been particularly bloody for the Germans, who, knowing that the French would share as much as possible with the Alsatians and their property, hid themselves in houses protected by the Red Cross, whence they fired on the French.

The French directed a violent rifle and artillery fire on their assailants, causing veritable carnage. Every German leaving these houses was shot down.

Antwerp Reports Situation Unchanged

Antwerp, Aug. 21.—An official statement says that the situation is unchanged. German cavalry patrols are circling around Brussels, severing communication between the capital and Antwerp, and between these cities and the central part of the country.

London, Aug. 21.—Despatches to the Central Telegraph Co. from Ghent, under yesterday's date, say the Germans arrived at Brussels Thursday morning.

Final Call to Austrian Colors

ARE THE MEN ALL DEAD ASKS MR. BURNHAM

Everything Should not be Left to the Women

In regard to the decision of the citizens' committee to leave the field in favor of the women, Mr. J. H. Burnham M.P., wires the Review, expressing himself as being sorry to see everything left to the women. Are the men all dead? he asks. Mr. Burnham says the British government has declined the offer of a hospital ship, and in his opinion it is unwise to take burdens off the government which it is willing to assume. He suggests that efforts in Peterboro should be directed toward the welfare of those indirectly affected at home, as well as those directly.

He hopes the city as a city will take chief command of the situation. "We must rise to the occasion," Mr. Burnham concludes.

WANT MORE MEN FOR THE BATTERY

Enlisting to Continue at the Armouries Till Saturday Night

Sergt. Major Guerin returned from Cobourg this morning and is endeavoring to get 40 more recruits for the battery. The 24th Battery of this city and the 14th of Cobourg go to make up the left half of the 10th Brigade but it has fallen to the lot of Peterboro to supply all the men. In speaking to The Review this morning Sergt. Major Guerin stated that enlisting would take place up till Saturday evening, when the men would be transferred to Cobourg. The boys at present in the Horse Show town are all feeling fine after the effect of the inoculation which took place Wednesday.

All Canadian battery contingents will be known as the 9th Brigade.

SOLDIER BOYS OFF TO WAR

Volunteers of the Battery and Dragoons, Are Accorded a Fitting Send Off

All thought was centred on Jack Canuck last night, when volunteers of the Third Prince of Wales Dragoons and the 24th Battery C.F.A., left the two stations, bound for the scene of mobilization.

It was a splendid spectacle. The sight must have thrilled the hearts of the thousands of citizens and country folk, who lined the streets and packed the station platforms, to cheer the boys on their journey.

At the Armouries, Canon Davidson, chaplain of the 57th Regiment, addressed the Dragoons and recited the paryer used in time of war and the prayer for soldiers, after which the Lord's Prayer was said in unison. Next, the band struck up the National Anthem, in which soldiers and civilians joined heartily. Then followed the usual cheers.

A unique feature in the parade to the station was the presence of the Salvation Army flag, carried in advance of the parade by William Wainwright, a veteran member of the Army. Many people thought it a very fine thing. The stalwart and soldierlike figure of Adjutant McElhiney was also conspicuous in the parade. Members of the Temple Band joined with the regimental band, and the stirring music of The Red, White and Blue and other patriotic selections was simply great. Following the regimental and bugle bands came the heroes of the hour—twenty-three of them, including officers and men. A steady volley of cheers greeted the volunteers all along the street, and on arrival at the station the cheering of the great gathering, togethr weith the music, must have affected the boys.

The 57th volunteers, the senior troop of Boy Scouts, regimental officers, and men in civilian clothes brought up the rear.

Who could not be touched by the demonstraions of loyalty! Time after time four thousand voices took up the strains of "God Save the King" and concluded with cheers for the "Canadian Boys." Many people in the vast assemblage had a vivid picture of one evening in the summer of 1900, when a departure, in many respects of a similar nature, took place. It was the departure of Canadian boys to the rugged land of South Africa, where more than a few shed their blood and died in protecting the Union Jack.

When the special, with other volunteers from the west, pulled in at 8.33, a lusty cheer rent the air and entirely drowned the puffing of the big mogul. For fifteen minutes the train remained, while the band played the national anthem and the crowd swayed with human emotion. Then the tolling of the bell, so like a funeral knell that for a few seconds almost everyone was enveloped with thought most serious, brought the people face to face with the fact that Peterboro boys were leaving to fight for the cause of Britain.

A few miles ahead of the special an engine and van rushed into the silent night, as a watchman and sentry in the event of any defects in tracks or bridges. Eight coaches made up the train, which was in charge of Conductor H. Davidson, of Toronto. Engine No. 2233 drew the uniformed passengers, and it was driven by the careful hand of Engineer W. H. Blevins, also of the Queen City. Fireman L. Rowat, of Toronto, was the second man in the cab.

In the meantime part of the band and regiment had paraded to the Grand Trunk depot, where some two thousand five hundred people were thronged to give the Batterymen an appropriate send-off. The enthusiastic scene was repeated. Canon Davidson spoke a few words on the loyalty of the people of Canada for Britain, and then all joined in singing one verse of "O Canada' 'and "God Save the King." The train rolled noiselessly in, and when pulling out the volunteers lined the windows, shouting back a fond good-bye and taking a farewell look, perhaps the last, at the faces of their loved ones.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Paris, Aug. 21.—An official news bulletin issued by the French war office today, was : "Up to the twentieth day of the French mobilization despite assurances of German writers, and even those of German general staff, the Germans have not obtained any of the decisive advantages they counted upon.

Moreover the enemy has not been able to carry the war on to our territory. This advantage has at least a moral value which is worth noticing."

Paris, Aug. 21.—A French official note says : "A French dirigible last night threw a number of projectiles upon two German cavalry camps in Belgium, causing great excitement.

Despite the fire of the enemy, the air craft returned safely to the French lines."

By some reson or other, a Union Jack was missing from the parade to the C.P.R. station las night, when the armouries were left behind and the flag of the Salvation Army was brought into commission.

As the parade reached the factory of J. J. Turner and Sons, Adjutant McElhiney sent one of his men to Mr. J. J. Turner, Jr., who was standing at the office door, and a large Union Jack was secured and tacked to the Army flag pole.

POPE'S SISTER IS NOT DEAD

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 21.—An error in transmission of a telegram from Rome last night, caused it to be cabled all over the world that Anna Sarte, sister of Pope Pius Tenth, had died from shock caused by the Pontiff's death. She is not dead. The message should have said she was suffering from shock.

PRAYERS FOR ALL WARRING NATIONS

Special Interceseion for Success of British Arms

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 21. — Intercessory services were held in practically every Church in England today on behalf of the nations engaged in war, with a special prayer for the success of the British arms.

King George and Queen Mary with Princess Mary were present at the service in Westminster Abbey. The national relief fund today reached a total of $7,500,000.

French Troops in Southern Alsace Have, However, Recaptured Muhlhausen After Repeated Charges—Engagements in Lorraine Section of Battle Front Favor Germans.

PARIS, Aug. 21. — The German cavalry have occupied Brussels. This official announcement was made last night. Strong columns are following up this movement. The Belgian army is retiring on Antwerp without having been engaged by the Germans.

Along with the announcement of the fall of Brussels, the official statement says:

"Our troops have met with brilliant successes in Alsace, especially between Muhlhausen and at Altkirch. The Germans retraining on the Rhine left in our hands many prisoners and 24 guns, six of which were captured after a sharp struggle by our infantry.

"In Lorraine, the day was less fortunate for us. Our advanced troops found themselves faced by exceptionally strong positions. They were forced by a counter attack to fall back in a body, which is solidly established on the Seille and along the canal from the Merne to the Rhine."

Fighting at the point of the bayonet after repeated charges against the entrenched Germans, the French army of Alsace-Lorraine yesterday reoccupied Muhlhausen after a siege that has been in progress since Monday.

The Germans were compelled to exacuate after the French artillery had been placed at a point of vantage and began shelling their position. Finally the French lines were massed at a western point of the town, and a few minutes later the final charge that resulted in the German defeat resulted. The retreat of the Germans under fire was so precipitate that they were compelled to leave behind six cannon and six ammunition wagons fully loaded. Hundreds were killed and wounded in the hand-to-hand encounters with bayonets, the soldiers of both armies fighting viciously.

In a report given out by the French War Office, it is declared that the fighting between the opposing forces was not only prolonged but furious for the entire two days. The Germans, the report declares, were firmly entrenched, and it was only with considerable difficulty that they were driven from their points of vantage. The War Office also claims several other important victories at other points.

In Upper Lorraine, the Germans are reported to be fiercely resisting the advance of the French troops, and have even pressed them back at a number of points where cavalry detachments were assembled. It is asserted, however, that the general advance on Strassburg is preceeding rapidly, and that the Germans are retiring without making serious resistance.

Despatches declare that the Germans crossed the frontier at Circy and took up positions menacing Nancy, but were dislodged on Tuesday. The German column was comprised of cavalry and mounted machine gun detachments. These bodies as they moved burned and sacked numerous villages. When the Germans reached Badenviller, a column of French cavalry made a stand, but the German guns finally drove them away. The village was nearly destroyed by shelling, and it is reported not a few women, children and other noncombatants were killed.

The Germans have retaken the town of Ville in a battle lasting five hours, the Teutons charging the French in the face of a withering fire from the batteries posted about on the hills. The French finally retired, leaving the Germans on the field.

Official Explanation.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21.—An official explanation of the Belgian field army's backward movement towards Antwerp was given last night in the following cablegram from London, made public by the British embassy:

"The Belgian field army, being based on Antwerp, has fallen back in that direction in order to cover its communication with that fortress. In anticipation that this might become necessary, the seat of government had already been transferred from Brussels to Antwerp. As Brussels is an undefended city and no longer the seat of government, the fact that the Germans may have occupied it is not of great importance. Moreover, the present position of the Belgian field army is a menace to the right flank of any further German advance westward."

Soldiers Have Revolted.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 21.—The Czech soldiers in Bohemia are reported to have revolted and shot their Austrian officers. The mutineers are reported to have terrorized Prague all day. Reprisals at once were begun by the Austrian troops, who are said to have shot down even women and children in their frenzy.

PETERBOROUGH, FRIDAY, AUGUST 21, 1914

SIR ROBERT BORDEN'S CLOSING WORDS.

IN CLOSING a notable speech, Premier Borden said: "As to our duty, all are agreed; we stand shoulder to shoulder with Britain and the other British dominions in this quarrel. And that duty we shall not fail to fulfill as the honour of Canada demands, not for love of battle, not for lust of conquest, nor for greed of possessions, but for the cause of honour, to maintain solemn pledges, to uphold principles of liberty, to withstand forces that would convert the world into an armed camp, yea, in the very name that we sought peace at any cost, save that of dishonour, we have entered into this war, and while gravely conscious of the tremendous issues involved, and of all the sacrifices that may entail, we do not shrink from them, but with firm hearts we abide the event."

DEATH VISITS THE VATICAN.

THE DEATH of Pope Pius X. is a serious matter in the present titanic war struggle in Europe. As head of the Roman Church, he was one of the great princes of Europe, happily a prince that sought by every means to conciliate the opposing nations and to avert war, at a time when failing health made his difficult task extremely hard. It is sad that his last hour should be disturbed by the clamour of great battles, but they were not of his doing, and he passes from a world at war, happy in the consciousness that he did what he could to prevent a clash of arms. Whom his successor will be or when he will be elected we know not; but he will be a strong man that equals the one who has just put aside the highest dignity in the Roman Church—the Papal Crown.

ONTARIO'S GIFT.

THE ST. THOMAS TIMES (Conservative) protests against the Toronto World's suggestion that Ontario should present a battleship to the British Navy as her aid to the Empire. The Times says:

> "With this suggestion the Times is not at all in accord. Anything in the shape of strengthening the British navy should come from the Dominion Government as the offering of the whole Canadian people. There should be no competition by provinces in the matter of naval contribution in any shape or form. "Too many cooks spoil the broth." Instead of 'butting in' independently, Ontario should do all she possibly can in co-operation with the Dominion and in conformity with Federal plans."

We think the objection is well taken. In view of the fact that there is a marked difference between Conservative and Liberal policies of Empire aid, and that some provincial governments are Conservative and others Liberal, it would not tend to make the provinces united by one province adopting the policy of Sir Robert Borden. The matter of contributing a battleship would be better left to Dominion politics. We do not want rivalry among the provinces in this matter, but co-operation. British Columbia has offered 100,000 boxes of apples, Alberta half a million bags of oats, Quebec four million pounds of cheese. These are representative of the resources of the provinces from which they come, do not conflict with party policies of naval aid, show the spirit of the people, and are as much sinews of war as battleships and battalions. If Ontario wants to give a battleship, it should not be done independently of the Federal Government, but we think a gift after the nature of what three other provinces have given would be more appropriate and quite as acceptable.

QUEBEC IS ALL RIGHT.

THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC is to be greatly commended for the action of its government. At a special session of the Quebec Provincial Cabinet the Gouin Government has decided to offer the Imperial military authorities four million pounds of Canadian cheese, for the use of the armies.

As cheese costs the consumer about 20 cents per pound, this gift may be said to be worth about $800,000, though, buying in large quantities, the Government will get it for much less. This fine sum from the French-Canadian province is significant of Empire unity in the present crisis. Quebec, especially the Eastern Townships, has a large yearly output of cheese, and will probably make, as well as pay for, the gift.

In view of this excellent proof of the attitude of Quebec, it is time for Le Devoir and its following of Nationalists to run to cover. Here is what Le Devoir said a day or so ago:

> "The intervention which is proposed today proceeds on the theory that Canada — in addition to the duty of territorial defence, which has always been recognized as ours, and to which all Canadian political military tradition limits our military obligations — has the duty to participate in the general defence of the Empire. Let there be no illusion on this point and on the consequences of this theory. If we have the duty to interfere in the present conflict, outside of the defence of Canadian territory, we shall have to intervene in all the other conflicts in which England may be involved, whether they be in Europe, in Asia, or in Africa, and no matter who may be the enemies or the allies of the metropolis."

Such disloyal sentiments are finding less and less support, and the action of the French-Canadian Government speaks loudly in disapproval of such an attitude as Le Devoir advances. The safety of Canada, and its largest margin for progress are to be found in hearty support of Great Britain. All Canada recognizes that fact, French no less than English Canadian.

GROWTH OF NATIONAL WEALTH.

AT THE PRESENT TIME, when war is vitiating national wealth and trade to a great degree, the growth of national wealth in the last hundred years of nations deeply concerned is of interest. The London Statist, in an analysis of this problem, says that the wealth of the United Kingdom in 1814 was computed at about £2,500,000,000, while a conservative estimate would place it now at about £17,000,000,000; a six-fold increase, while population has grown by only 130 per cent. The income of the British people in this period has increased about eight-fold, from £300,000,000 to £2,400,000,000. The wealth of France has expanded five-fold, from under £2,000,000,000 to nearly £10,000,000,000, while her income has risen from £250,000,000 to about £1,200,000,000, with only a one-third-fold (33 per cent.) increase in population. The progress of Germany has been equally remarkable. A century ago there was no Germany—only a number of German states by no means over-burdened with income or with riches. Their aggregate wealth and income were probably less than France's. Now united Germany is estimated to possess an income of nearly £2,000,000,000 and accumulated wealth about £16,000,000,000. During the century Germany's population has grown from 24 millions to over 67 millions, or 180 per cent.

But if the economic welfare of the older countries has improved in this remarkable manner, what of the younger states, which have attracted vast numbers of persons from the densely populated districts of Europe? The progress of the new countries is still more noteworthy, and the advance in the well-being of their citizens still more marked. For the most part, the persons who migrated to them were inconceivably poor and destitute, and these have attained incomes and wealth much greater, on the average, than persons who elected to remain in the older countries. During the last hundred years the wealth of the United States has increased from about £350,000,000 to something like £30,000,000,000, or nearly ninety-fold; and the income has risen from less than £100,000,000 to about £7,000,000,000 a year, while the population has grown from 8,000,000 to 98,000,000, a twelve-fold expansion. The progress of the other young countries has been small in comparison with the growth of wealth in the United States; nevertheless, when one remembers the meagreness of the populations of Canada, of Australia, of the Cape and of South America, and the smallness of their incomes in the early part of the last century, the really wonderful advance in their economic well-being becomes apparent.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

SIR LOMER GOUIN, who arrived at Quebec on the Royal George the other day, said that the Province of Quebec would not be behind any of the others when it was a question of helping the Motherland.

A LONDON PAPER estimates that 200 German prizes worth $300,000,000 have been captured. Britain has certainly been assiduous in collecting a big part of her war credit from her enemies.

THIS YEAR, 1914, will likely be the most wonderful year for a long period. The sinking of the Empress of Ireland, the assassination of the Crown Prince of Austria and his wife, the European war, the opening of the Panama Canal, the death of Pope Pius X. are a few of the outstanding features. The huge failure of the Claflin Company, the exposure of the Hartford Railway, the attack of the army worm are also of interest. Truly, there has been no lack of material for newspaper headlines.

Lines from Thanatopsis.

William Cullen Bryant.

So live that when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan which moves
To that mysterious realm, where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not like the quarry slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon; but sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
As one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him
And lies down to pleasant dreams.

The First Casualties.

Westminster Gazette.

We have today the first news of casualties in the war. The light cruiser Amphion has been sunk in the North Sea by running against a floating mine, and the Paymaster and 100 men have been killed by the explosion, which shattered the front part of the vessel. We honour the brave men who are the first to give their lives for their country in this struggle, and we admire the splendid discipline which enabled all the men on board who were not killed by the explosion to take to the boats in the few minutes which can have elapsed after the ship was destroyed. Twenty German prisoners were among the men lost. The public will, we are sure, accept the news with calmness and resignation. Casualties of an even more serious nature than this must be expected and be prepared for. Our honour and respect for the brave men who are lost is not less but higher, though the situation does not permit those expressions of grief which would be appropriate in time of peace.

CHARGE IT

By Walt Mason.

"Just chalk it down," the poor man said, when he had bought some boneless bread, and many costly things, his wife and brood of bairns to feed—the most of which they didn't need as much as you need wings. He buys the richest things in town, and always says, "Just chalk it down, I'll pay you soon, you bet;" and pay-day evening finds him broke, his hard earned plunks' gone up in smoke, and still he is in debt. The man who doesn't buy for cash lays in all kinds of costly trash, that he could do without; he spends his coin before it's earned, and roars about it when it's burned — is that your way, old scout? When comes the day of evil luck the war bag doesn't hold a buck to keep the wolf away; the "charge it" plan will work no more at any market, shop or store; no goods unless you pay. The poor man for his money sweats, and he should pay for what he gets, just when he gets the same; then, when he goes his prunes to buy, and sees how fast the nickels fly, he'll dodge the spendthrift game. If you begin to save your stamps, some day, with teardrops in your lamps, this writer you will thank; when man in grief and sickness groans, there's naught like having fifteen bones in some good savings bank.

Call For Corps of Amazons Has Been Issued In Berlin.

LONDON, Aug. 21. — The Times' correspondent at Rotterdam telegraphs a statement which he says was made to him by a party of Chinese medical men, who have arrived in Rotterdam from Berlin:

"When we left Berlin, Saturday night," says the statement, "the city was in the hands of old men and boys. Not an able-bodied man was to be seen. All the bridges were guarded by boys of about 14 years of age, who stood with fixed bayonets. A fortnight ago the Friedrichstrasse bridge was badly damaged by a Russian bomb. We ourselves saw the damage done.

Wintergreen Wafers.

Wintergreen wafers are delicious. To make them soak one-half box of gelatin in one-half cupful of cold water until soft; then dissolve in one and one-half cupfuls of boiling water and strain. Add confectioner's sugar until stiff, then a few drops of wintergreen essence. Roll out on a board dusted with powdered sugar. Cut in rounds as large as a quarter and lay on oiled paper and you have wholesome home-made candies.

Old Mission to Indians.

The New England Company, of London, organized for work among the North American aboriginals concentrated its energies in Canada mainly upon the Mohawk Indians on the Brantford Reserve in Ontario. The famous Indian institute there bears eloquent testimony to the value of its work. The society which is now over 250 years old keeps a superintendent at Brantford.

REGIMENTAL COLORS

Every British infantry battalion, with certain exceptions, carries two colors. These are officially known as the King's color and the regimental color. They are issued from the Royal Army Clothing Factory at Pimlico, and have to last for twenty years. To distinguish them is simple, since the first color shows a Union Jack on a blue field, with a crown in the centre, while the second color has a wreath of roses, shamrocks, and thistles, with the regiment's crest and motto and list of battle honors embroidered on it.

Infantry colors are always carried by the two senior second-lieutenants and are escorted by a guard of non-commissioned officers, termed color-sergeants. In barracks the colors are kept in the officers' mess, and whenever they appear on parade they are received with the highest honor, and all present have to salute them.

Cavalry regiments carry standards or guidons, instead of colors. These are made of crimson silk or damask with gold-embroidered tassels and cords, mounted on a lance.

Owing to the ready mark they offer the enemy's bullets, and the great sacrifice of valuable lives entailed in preserving them from possible capture, regimental colors are no longer taken into action. The last time they were carried in the field was during the Boer War of 1881. Nowadays, when a battalion proceeds on service, the colors are left behind at headquarters.

Forced Marches

There is still, and probably always will be, difference of opinion as to whether men should be forced to march on time or on condition. Some military men consider it is better to hold back a party of men ordered to take up a position rather than tire them out on the way to the scene of operations. They contend that a force held in check will reach destination in fighting condition and quite able to take the offensive against the enemy.

On the other hand, there are officers who believe in forcing men to the limit, so as to reach the position allotted them in the quickest time, and are willing to take the chances of leaving some of their men on the road and of the serviceability of the force on arrival at destination.

A Famous Servian Ruler

No rougher customer ever occupied a throne than King Peter's ancestor and Servia's first ruler, "Black George." Except when under the influence of wine or the smell of gunpowder he was habitually moody and dangerous to cross. When his aged father thwarted his wishes he drew a pistol and shot him through the head; when his mother tried to cheat him over a bee-hive he bonneted her with it, and stalked off regardless of her shrieks of pain. Yet Black George was admirable as an administrator, scrupulously just in all his dealings —outside of the family circle—and as brave and disinterested a patriot as ever lived. After brilliant victories he would return to his squalid home, empty-handed, and resume the uneventful life of a pig breeder.

No Paper Supply

With the "biggest story" in history at their front doors, newspapers in Paris and London may be forced to suspend before they can print it. The supply of paper is very limited. Paris papers print but two pages in small sizes and have cut out the margins in order to husband their resources. In London, the great Times cut from 4 to six pages and other papers reduced accordingly.

Woman's World

Mrs. Pennybacker, Women's Club Leader and Philanthropist.

MRS. PERCY V. PENNYBACKER.

Mrs. Pennybacker is a southern woman by birth. She first saw the light at Petersburg, Va. Her father was the Rev. J. B. Hardwicke, D. D. She was educated at the high school in Leavenworth, Kan., and at the State Normal school in Huntsville, Tex. She taught school for fourteen years, an experience that was the foundation for her great interest in educational work. She was married in 1884 to Percy V. Pennybacker, a leading educator of Texas. The marriage was a very happy one, but in 1899 he died. Administering her home affairs and looking after her children did not occupy her time to the exclusion of intellectual interests. She has always been an enthusiastic clubwoman. Through the woman's club she believes much educational work may be accomplished and wide social service rendered.

She is a gifted writer and speaker. Her history of Texas is a standard work on that subject. If a lady of such broad interests may be said to have a special fad it is in increasing the efficiency of the public schools and bringing the advantages of state universities and technical schools within the reach of poor boys and girls.

Her home is at Austin, Tex., where she is the center of a distinguished social and intellectual circle.

Platinum Rings.

The up to date bride is married with a band of platinum, which has taken the place at many fashionable weddings of the band of gold. To the bride who cherishes tradition the platinum wedding ring is not welcome. For generations the ring has been of gold, and, to the traditional bride's mind, for generations more it should be of gold. It is this sort of bride who prefers a solitaire diamond to everything else for an engagement ring.

In spite of her sentiment for the old and accepted, the platinum ring has advocates among the brides who are seeking change.

Dyeing White Shoes.

One way of prolonging the service of white shoes after they have been cleaned many times is to make them tan colored. They can be made a pretty brown by applying saffron. Mix ten drops of saffron with three teaspoonfuls of olive oil. Clean the shoes well before applying the mixture, as all dark spots will show. Apply with a piece of flannel, and after two coats they will look equal to new.

A Sanitary Grater.

The glass grater is new. It is a roughly pebbled slab of glass screwed to a flat back of wood, making it very convenient to handle, as the wood does not slip in holding it. It washes very easily and is pronounced much more sanitary than the old fashioned tin grater.

If, as scientists are now claiming, there really is life in the moon, how the folks there are enjoying the sights down below!

French peasants are moving into the cities, preferring motion pictures to posing for great painters as the men with the hoes.

One of the discouraging features of everyday life is to have to hurry a good story in order to allow a man time to catch a train.

ILLUSION IN WEIGHT.

Blunders That Simply Prove a Person's Good Judgment.

Take a sofa pillow in one hand, balance it carefully until you think you have a right sense of its weight. Hold a large glass in the other hand and have some one pour water into it until you think it weighs about as much as the pillow. Then weigh the two and see how far out of the way you are.

Or take a cap in one hand and put in the other as many coins as you think may be needed to balance it. You will find your judgment far from correct.

Take two stone jars. Fill one with hot water and the other with cold and ask a friend to say which is the heavier of the two. The bottle with hot water will seem 25 per cent heavier.

Take three articles weighing the same. Put one on the ground, one on a table and one on a high shelf. Ask a friend to lift them and determine which of the three is the heaviest. He will pick the one on the shelf as the one which weighs the most every time.

The laws of illusion in weight are quite exact, and it is marvelous to see what a large proportion of people will make exactly the same mistake in exactly the same way. Thus the pillow seems lighter than it is because its appearance suggests lightness. Of two similar weights the one that is the larger in size will always seem the lighter. That is why the weight of the cap will be underestimated in the experiment just described.

Any change from normal temperature, either hot or cold, will appear to increase the temperature. A piece of ice the same weight as a glass of water will seem to weigh twice as much.

The extra exertion needed to sustain the weight of an object either above or below our natural reach seems to make it heavier, and for this reason the weight on the shelf will seem to have the advantage.

Does this show what poor judges we are? Not at all. It only proves our good judgment. It is like the sad case of the college student in a class on optics who could see through the illusions, so that matters which appeared crooked to the rest of the class, although they were really straight, appeared straight to him. Instead of complimenting him on his discernment, the professor promptly expelled the student from the class on the ground that he was drunk. And he was!—New York American.

TRAGIC LAUGHTER.

Vibration and Nitroglycerin Form a Perilous Combination.

An accident, said to be the most extraordinary on record, occurred at some oil fields in the Baku district of Russia, on the borders of the Caspian sea. One of the big "gusher" oil wells became choked, and, with a view of blowing it clear, a number of iron drums full of nitroglycerin were brought down by rail from Derbend and deposited overnight in a large shed which was used by the men as a sort of canteen.

The steward of this establishment, a Greek named Darios, opened one of the drums for some reason best known to himself and decanted a small quantity of the dangerous liquid into a long, thin glass used for mixing vodka. This he placed on a shelf behind the bar. Shortly afterward there entered a workman named Borkovitch, who was famous for the boisterous hilarity of his manner and especially for his loud, resonant laughter.

The sight of nitroglycerin in a vodka tumbler so excited his risibility that he gave vent to a series of stentorian guffaws. This set the half filled glass "ringing," and the treacherous contents immediately exploded.

The concussion sufficed, in its turn, to explode the rest of the stuff in the drums, entirely demolishing the shed and killing five persons, all who were in it at the time. The barman escaped through having gone down into the cellar just previously, whence he distinctly heard the laughter, followed by the musical "ringing" of the thin tumbler and the two explosions.—Pearson's Weekly.

As Good as a Porter.

It is curious how many people are in ignorance of simple little facts in connection with every day life which would save them a large amount of unnecessary labor and fatigue. Take the case of carrying a heavy bag or portmanteau, for instance. We all know the annoying way in which it knocks against our legs and the almost intolerable ache in the arm that is supporting the burden. Few people are aware, however, that by folding a couple of newspapers and putting them under one's armpit a large amount of the strain and inconvenience is immediately removed. Try it next time you are hurrying to catch a train.

Summer Bathing.

Bathe with reason in summer as well as winter. Do not drop your warm baths and indulge only in cold plunges. You will be the more comfortable for an occasional hot bath. And remember that a very cold bath, either in ocean, still water or a tub, can bring on cramps and serious intestinal troubles if taken too soon after a hearty meal.

Another folly is depending upon sea bathing, when at the shore, for cleansing purposes. Sea or lake bathing is merely a sport, and the body should always be cleansed in still or fresh water after a dip of this sort.

The average man sponges off his body with the bucket of water left in each tiny bathhouse after his plunge. The average woman rubs off the salt water and dresses without bathing because she says fastidiously that she does not like the looks of that "nasty bucket." Continued bathing in salt water, unrelieved by a fresh sponge, is not good for the skin.

In summer a warm, not hot, bath at night is most cooling, and the bath in the morning should be only a quick sponge with cool, not cold, water. The woman who dresses in the middle of the afternoon or just before dinner and bathes then should not bathe just before retiring also. The quick morning sponge and the moderate afternoon or evening bath are quite sufficient for each twenty-four hours.

The Vacationist's Eyes.

If there is one time when the eyes are more severely taxed than at any other it is during summer months. Free from the whirl of business or social affairs, the fair vacationist grasps the long sought opportunity to indulge her love of reading or delicate embroidery.

Quite generally she reads while reclining in a comfortable hammock under the trees or stretched at full length on the porch or bedroom couch. "I know it's not right," says one independent girl, "but it's my vacation, and I'm going to be comfortable."

A noted oculist, who considers the happiness of a patient as well as her physical good, insists that there is no harm whatever in reading in a recumbent position if the head is well bolstered up and the light shines on the book over the left shoulder. Nothing is more fatiguing to the eyes than attempting to use them when a strong light is pouring straight into them. The habit of reading in the hazy light after sundown is equally injurious.

Refreshing the Vacationist.

For the woman vacationist who has no bathroom a huge bowl or, better still, an old fashioned foot bathtub is essential. With the aid of either of these she can sponge in cool water in the morning and in warm at night.

If her skin is sluggish and she has a generally rundown feeling in hot weather let her try the vinegar bath. For this allow a pint of pure cider or wine vinegar to two gallons, which is about what is needed for the average sponge bath.

Put this into the basin and stand in the tub. Use a large sponge and fill it sopping with the mixture of water and vinegar. Close your eyes and press this to your face.

Repeat this several times and then proceed the same way, pressing the sponge to the base of your brain and on your shoulders until your body has been literally showered with vinegar and water. The body is then patted, not rubbed, dry, and the patient should lie down and rest for awhile.

KITCHEN KINKS.

Try lemon and salt for ink stains on the fingers.

Ducks to be good must be young and fat. The underbill if the duck is young will break easily. The breast should be plump and fat.

By slipping stiff collars into a glass or tumbler after they are ironed and allowing them to dry thoroughly they can be made to keep their shape.

To make new potatoes scrape easily and to prevent the fingers becoming soiled while preparing soak the potatoes a little while in water in which a small piece of common soda has been dissolved.

A good way to strengthen the worn places in undergarments is to stitch them with the sewing machine back and forth in parallel lines and then turn the goods and run stitches at right angles to those already taken.

If olive oil is put on a burn immediately it will stop the burning and there will be no pain. Saturate a piece of bandage with the oil, then wrap the burn carefully and saturate again and again, keeping the bandage wet for some time.

New potatoes if soaked in water that has a little soda dissolved in it will scrape and clean beautifully.

CRUDE MINING IN COLOMBIA.

Natives Used To Pan the Streets of Quibdo For Platinum.

Under the primitive mining conditions of to-day the Choco district of Colombia stands second only to Russia as a producer of platinum. Most of the gold and platinum exported are obtained by native women, working two or three hours per day. They use the antiquated ground sluicing process as a preliminary to get rid of the coarser gravels and then with their "bateas" separate the metals from the sand and gravel.

The batea is a wooden pan, shaped like a very shallow inverted cone, eighteen inches in diameter and three inches deep at the centre, with two small handles or knobs on the rim. The women handle the bateas with great dexterity, throwing off the gravel and sand by a rotary motion and leaving the gold and platinum dust in the common centre.

Another method of mining that is extensively employed by these women is diving into three or four feet of water for the sand and gravel containing the metals and bringing it up in the bateas. This method is usually more remunerative than the sluicing process.

The gold workings have existed for centuries, but little has been done in the development of the district. The river gravels were being washed by the Indians long before the advent of the Spaniards, and this region furnished much of the gold that was carried back to Spain. In those days the value of platinum was unknown, and when the Indians brought the metal down to the Spanish headquarters in Quibdo the platinum was thrown away.

Large finds of this discarded metal have been made recently in Quibdo, and frequently the earth excavated for foundations has yielded sufficient quantities of platinum to pay for putting up the building. The natives were beginning to pan even the streets, thus uncovering large amounts of mud, which was injurious to health. A decree was therefore promulgated in 1913 prohibiting any further washing of earth in the streets of Quibdo.

Silent Auctions.

Japanese auctions are noiseless affairs. In many parts of Japan an odd little booth serves as such a room. The auctioneer holds aloft the object offered for sale in order that all may see it. To the stranger it appears that the object is not desired by anybody, although all seem to examine it closely. Not a word is said by any prospective customer but a number of them march off to a little box in the corner, wherein they deposit certain little slips. If one's curiosity be aroused by this procedure a Japanese will explain the method of conducting the sale. The bits of paper represent the bids and when all have been deposited the box is opened, and the highest amount offered buys the article. These noiseless auctions are much patronized by the Japanese.

For the Common Good.

Town planning, let it be understood, is not a movement to make towns beautiful in a superficial sense. Its purposes are fundamental. It aims consciously to provide those facilities that are for the common good, that concern everybody; it seeks to save waste, the almost incalculable waste due to unskillful and planless procedure, for by doing of things at the right time and in the right way comprehensive city planning saves far more than its cost. It endeavors also to establish the individuality of a city—to catch its peculiar spirit, to preserve its distinctive flavor, to accent its particular physical situation.—John Nolan.

Outreasoning Reason.

Little Raymond's mother had told him that she should put him to bed if he disobeyed her command in a certain matter. Temptation overcame him, and when his mother proceeded to fulfill her duty sobs of anguish filled the room.

"But, Raymond," said the mother gently, "I told you I should punish you in this way if you disobeyed, and mother must keep her word, you know."

Between muffled sobs Raymond managed to say, "You needn't break your word, mamma, but couldn't you change your mind?"

Forces a Discharge.

"The Japanese servant has many curious traits," said the man who keeps one, "besides his constant habit of eating raw fish, but he is inordinately polite, as a rule. For instance, he never will give you notice that he wishes to leave you. Instead his work will grow steadily worse and worse till you can't stand it any longer, and so you fire him. It's always done purposely to avoid the necessity of telling you outright that he is tired of you and wants to quit."

Lucky Will.

Amateur Actor (who has just concluded a performance of the part of Hamlet, to a friend who has been one of the audience) — Well, old fellow, don't you feel inclined to congratulate some one?

Friend—Indeed, I do.

Amateur (with vainglorious mien) —May I so far infringe on modesty as to ask his name?

Friend — Certainly. His name is Shakespeare, and I heartily congratulate him on his unavoidable absence.

Potential Incentive.

Nell—Do you think you could love him if he were rich?

Belle—I would try harder.

Lucky at That.

MANY CANADIANS SPENDING HOLIDAYS IN LOG CABIN CAMPS

The log cabin camp enterprise in Algonquin Provincial Park of Ontario, the first of their kind in Canada, are proving very popular this season. The Grand Trunk Railway officials are receiving many appreciations of the camps as ideal holiday resorts. Mr. H. A. Macdonell, Director of Colonization for the Ontario Government, with his family, has been staying at "Nominigan Camp."

"We are all delighted with the arrangements," he says. "It is up to the minute for a perfect summer home to holiday in."

Nominigan Camp is situated on the easterly shore of Smoke Lake. Like Camp Minnesing it has a large central lodge which is used as a general rendezvous and dining room. In close proximity is a series of individual log cabins, thoroughly in keeping with the natural beauty of their location, which furnish accommodation for families and parties.

Photographing Forest Kings.

A night with lions was the subject of Mr. A. Radclyffe Dugmore, when lecturing at the Royal Photographic Society recently. He said that on one night in British East Africa he saw twelve lions, and succeeded in photographing ten of them. His plan was to set up three cameras near the carcase of a zebra or hartebeest, and connect them up with a flashlight apparatus. He watched through the night in a hiding place, and when a lion appeared he pressed a button which opened the shutters of all three cameras and ignited the flash powder. Immediately after the flash the lions ran growling off, and it was then necessary for the photographer to go out with a hand lamp and reset the instruments. Until a man had done that he never knew what darkness was. Lions at night, added Mr. Dugmore, went by troops, of any number from three to four up to thirty or forty.

Revolving Ships.

The revolving ship is one of those inventions which, although they are obviously impracticable, seem to have a fascination for the inventor that is rather difficult to explain. Several years ago there was built and tried in this country a boat of the revolving type which reached a stage at which it was launched, and an attempt was made unsuccessfully to propel it. According to a dispatch from London, a Paris inventor is now busy on another of these craft, and, judging from the meager descriptions available, the designer is following along the lines that were proved to be altogether impracticable fully a dozen years ago.—Scientific American.

An Astor Family Custom.

It is said that, according to the custom of the Astor family, Mrs. Vincent Astor renounced her dower rights in the vast Astor estate before her marriage. This has been done for generations in lieu of a settlement. The settlement is seldom generous in proportion to the vast wealth of the family. Vincent Astor's grandmother, Mrs. William Astor, renounced her dower right; so did Mrs. Ava Willing Astor and Mrs. Madeleine Force Astor.—Exchange.

ATTEMPTED ABDUCTION

Foiled by Police and Woman is Sent to the Mercer

Sudbury, Aug. 21.—An attempted abduction was foiled by the smartness of Chief Walker, and as a result Mrs. G. R. Martin, of Poole, a small place on the C. N. R. near Sellwood Junction, will spend the next six months in Mercer reformatory.

Chief Walker received a wire Tuesday from Mr. Martin, stating that Mrs. Martin, in company with another man and a young girl, had skipped out. A few minutes later the chief received another wire from G. Charsley, of Sellwood Junction, stating that Mr. Martin had taken his daughter away, and asking that both be detained in Sudbury. Investigation revealed the fact that a Mr. and Mrs. Weber and daughter, of Toronto, had registered at a local hotel. The supposed Mr. Weber was missing, but Mrs. Weber turned out to be Mrs. Martin, who was placed under arrest, and appeared before Magistrate Stoddard in police court yesterday afternoon, charged with the "unlawful abduction of Irene Charsley, aged 12 years."

Mrs. Martin pleaded not guilty and said she had merely brought the girl to Sudbury for a visit, and intended to send her back on the next train to Sellwood.

Little Irene Charsley told a different tale, however. She said that Mrs. Martin asked her to go with her to a nice, big house in Toronto. Irene said she refused, whereupon Mrs. Martin gave her a drink of something and threatened that if she did not come along she would shoot her and throw her in the river. Terrified by threats, the little girl accompanied the woman and a man, whom she has not seen since.

G. R. Martin, of Poole, said he was married to the accused in Port Hope three years ago. Their married life had been a stormy one, and he had refused to live with her any longer. She had been drinking on Monday morning, when he went to his work as section foreman.

Magistrate Stoddart judged the prisoner guilty of the offence and sentenced her to six months in Mercer. Mrs. Martin was lead from the court weeping bitterly.

The mysterious "Mr. Weber" has not yet been placed under arrest, but Chief Walker expects that there will be further developments in the case shortly.

TAXES ON SUGAR, COFFEE SPIRITS AND TOBACCO

Fifty Millions For War and Defence Are Voted in a Minute But Liberal Members Question Expediency of Tariff and Excise Changes—Moratorium Proposal Rouses Opposition.

OTTAWA, Aug. 21. — The House devoted its entire sitting yesterday to discussing the budget and financial question. The tariff changes announced by Finance Minister White provide for increased taxation upon coffee, sugar, spirits and tobacco, and because certain brewers, distillers and dealers took large quantities of goods out of bond prematurely in expectation of such a tax the measure dates back to Aug. 7. The proposals were criticized by Dr. Clark, the free trade Liberal from Red Deer, who favored an income tax, while A. K. MacLean, the Opposition financial critic, thought food products should for the time at least be placed upon the free list.

The vote of $50,000,000 for war and defence passed the resolution stage in exactly one minute.

Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, spoke briefly in delivering his budget speech. He said that the customs receipts had fallen off so that for the first four months of the present fiscal year the decrease amounted to over ten million dollars. Some improvement had been noted during the first ten days of August, but as a result of the war Canada's imports from Europe would largely decrease, and he estimated that the total revenue from all sources for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1915, would not exceed $130,000,000, or $135,000,000 at most. The expenditures of the Government for the year chargeable to consolidated revenue would amount to about $130,000,000. Canada would therefore have to provide for capital and special expenditures and interest of about $30,000,000. Treasury bills would also have to be retired amounting to $8,500,000. The Government had asked Parliament to vote $50,000,000 for military and naval expenditures, of which at least $30,000,000 would be expended during the present fiscal year. This made the sum of $68,500,000 to be raised by borrowing and increased taxation.

Last June the Government had floated a loan of $25,000,000, which left about $43,000,000 to be provided. The time was not propitious, said Mr. White, for negotiating loans, so that at least part of this money would have to be raised by increased taxation, mainly levied upon coffee, sugar, spirits and tobacco.

The Minister then went on to say that the Dominion Notes Act would be amended so that notes to the amount of fifty million dollars could be issued upon a 25 per cent. gold reserve. As the law now stands, only thirty million dollars can be issued against such a reserve. The effect of the amendment would be a net gain to the Government of fifteen million dollars.

The increased customs duties are:

Green coffee—Now on the free list. Under British preferential tariff 2¼ cents per pound, under general tariff 3 cents per pound. Estimated revenue $500,000.

Raw sugar—Preferential increase from 48¾ cents per 100 pounds to $1.03¾. General from 57½ cents to $1.37½.

Refined sugar—Preferential from 83 cents to $1.63. General from $1.07 2-3 to $2.07 2-3. This increase will be at the rate of 4-5 of a cent per pound under the preferential tariff and one cent per pound under the general. The estimated increase in revenue from sugar will be over $5,000,000.

Whisky, brandy, gin and other spirits from $2.40 to $3 per proof gallon. Estimated increase in revenue $2,500,000.

Cigars and cigarettes — Increase from $3 to $3.50 per pound. This in addition to the present ad valorem duty of 25 per cent.

Manufactured tobacco — Increase from 50 to 60 cents per pound.

Manufactured tobacco—From 5 to 10 cents per pound.

The changes in the taxation of liquor become effective from Aug. 7.

All the Government resolutions upon the order paper went through committee stage yesterday afternoon and the House adjourned at 6 o'clock.

Some opposition developed to the resolution authorizing the governor in council to declare a moratorium. Hon. Dr. Pugsley, Mr. German (Welland), Mr. Nesbitt (North Oxford), Mr. Devlin (Wright), and other Liberal members questioned the legality and expediency of the proposed legislation.

In the House yesterday Judge Doherty's bill to confer certain powers upon the Governor-in-Council and to amend the Immigration Act was given second reading and referred to a special committee consisting of Sir Robert Borden, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir George Foster, and Messrs. Pelletier, Pugsley, Doherty and A. K. MacLean.

CRAFT RIDDLED

Aviator Returns to Paris for New Aeroplane

LONDON, Aug. 21.—Adolphe Pegoud, the noted French aviator, has returned to Paris from the war zone to get a new aeroplane. According to a Paris despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Co., the wings of Pegoud's old machine were riddled with 97 bullets and two shells when he made a flight with a military observer of 300 klometers (186 miles) into German territory.

Pegoud could not say just where he had been, except that he recrossed the Rhine and blew up by means of bombs two German convoys.

Capt. Finck, a military aviator, Pegoud said, had destroyed a hangar near Metz and wrecked a Zeppelin, and also destroyed three tube aeroplanes which were in the hangar.

METHOD NOT YET DECIDED

But Ontario Will Add Her Help Says Whitney

TORONTO, Aug. 21.—Sir James Whitney gave out the following statement yesterday:

The present is a supreme testing time for the people of the province; and calmness, courage and fortitude should be displayed by governments, corporations and individuals.

The Ontario Government has been carefully studying the situation since the outbreak of the war with a view to rendering aid in the most effective manner possible at the time when such aid shall be of the greatest benefit to the Motherland. With this object in view, the Government is in communication with the Dominion Government at Ottawa so as to ascertain the views of the Imperial Government, and when the proper time comes the people of Ontario can rely on the Government of the province doing its full duty and aiding the Empire in the most effective manner possible. Whether that aid should be given now or later, and whether directly or in co-operation with the Dominion Government remains to be determined.

BODY OF PONTIFF IN CHARGE OF CONFESSORS

Funeral Services Which Are to Last Nine Days Began Yesterday—Cardinal Merry Del Val Issues Summons For Conclave of Sacred College.

ROME, Aug. 21. — The body of Pope Pius X. lay in the chamber in which he died Wednesday evening, in charge of the confessors of the Vatican. Throngs stood with uncovered heads in St. Peter's square, while supplications were offered in the churches by thousands of devout Roman Catholics.

The conclave to elect the successor to the late Pope Pius X. will be held Aug. 30, according to announcement just made by the Vatican.

The Vatican withheld the announcement of the pontiff's death until 1.20 o'clock yesterday morning. It is pointed out that delay in the announcement of a pope's death is not unusual. This news is kept from the public until announcement has been made to the various governments. Premier Salanda ordered that measures be taken at once to guarantee the complete liberty of the provisional government of the Church of the Sacred College, which is the temporary custodian of the church's power during the interregnum, pending the election of a new pope.

The funeral ceremonies will occupy a period of nine days. They began yesterday.

It is said that a majority of the cardinals are in favor of holding the conclave in Rome, according to custom and because of the neutrality of Italy in the present war. Some have suggested that it be held in Holland.

Among the cardinals mentioned are: Cardinals Agliardi, Merri, Ferrari, De Lai, Pompili and Serafini. The latter is the ex-nuncio of Mexico.

The arrival of Cardinal Della Volpe, chamberlain of the church, from Imola to-day, was awaited with eagerness, since as chamberlain he will direct the Holy See for the time being. He also will conduct the traditional ceremony of pronouncing the Pope dead officially. Cardinal Merry Del Val has been perfecting these arrangements. In these rites the chamberlain raises the covering from the face of the dead, touches thrice the forehead with a silver hammer and pronounces the name of the dead each time.

As there is no response, he then announces, "The Pope is really dead."

This ceremony takes place in the presence of the cardinals, a few close friends of the late pontiff and the representatives of St. Peter's, who prepare the body for sepulchre. Thereafter the body is removed to another chamber and embalmed.

Governor General's Term Has Been Extended

OTTAWA, Aug. 21.—Upon the orders of the day it was announced by the Prime Minister that the term of His Royal Highness as Governor-General had been extended indefinitely so that Canada might have the value of his advice and experience during the continuance of the war.

Replying to a question, Sir Robert Borden stated that $100,000 had been placed by the Government with the acting High Commissioner in London for the relief and assistance of Canadians abroad.

AIRSHIP SEEN IN NORTH

NEW LISKEARD, Ont., Aug. 21.—A large airship sailed over a portion of Timiskaming yesterday. It came from the northwest and circled off in a northeasterly direction. It was seen at close range ten miles north of here. It is suggested that this airship may be part of the outfit of some German vessels which may be in James or Hudson Bay, less than 300 miles north of here.

PARIS SUFFERING

Six Hundred Thousand Persons Out of Work

PARIS, Aug. 21.—A warning issued by the French Government yesterday says that while one great struggle is in progress on the frontier another fight must be fought in the interior of the country against the misery which follows the disorder in its economic life.

The prefecture of police in Paris estimates that there are 600,000 out of work in the French capital and its suburbs, or nearly one-sixth of the total population of the department of the Seine.

Those who have savings find difficulty in getting hold of them, as they may only draw five per cent. of their deposits during the first two weeks, but beginning to-day they may draw ten per cent., and it is likely the Government will further liberate the deposits in the banks.

EMPRESS IS SLOWLY GIVING UP HER DEAD

Only Small Percentage of Bodies Have Been Identified

Rimouski, Aug. 21. — Last week one hundred and six bodies were recovered from the Empress of Ireland. Most of them were buried immediately in the cemetery purchased by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Only a few have been identified, and seven bodies upon which were scapulars or medals have been buried in the Roman Catholic Cemetery.

Eight divers have been working at the dread task of recovering the bodies. For the most part they are divers from Ontario and the United States.

The side of the Empress has been pierced, and even drilled far enough into the interior compartments to permit the hope that the strong-room of the vessel may be reached this week.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editor, Review:

Dear Sir,—I have at hand a newspaper from Germany, dated November 24th, 1913. In this paper is an article regarding the prophecies of Madam de Thebes, the celebrated French prophetess, fr the year March 21, 1913-March 21, 1914.

It reads as follows: The years come and pass, but every year the Pythia of the Parisians — Madame de Thebes — raises her voice to announce to the world the fate for the coming year, 1914. In 1912, the Parisian Pythia indeed foretold the Balkan war. In this year there will be a German-French war which will end with a mighty military triumph for the French arms. What will follow then? The world stands in the circle of Mars, however, in a constellation with Saturn, and not with the moon, so that very bloody times are coming; times that will overburden France with glory and success in spite of all the bloodshed and tears. The year 1914 will be a glorious year amongst glorious years that have passed; a year of discord and then of peace, a year of hate that ends in love; a year of slaughter among the nations of Europe that will end as a year of agreement. That means, translated to the language of mortals, the downfall of Germany. Italy, also, gets chastized with evil prophecies. The Pope will die, but far worse will it be for Austria—in short, the Triple Alliance should take caution.

There will bg ereat trouble in Germany and a sensational disappearing will take place in Austri. Only King Alphonso has nothing to fear. The Balkan war also ges on further.

A few of the prophecies are accomplished facts already, with the sensational disappearing of the Archduke of Austria and his wife; the now raging war, and the death of the Pope.

Every year in the Fall Madame de Thebes gives out her prophecies for the coming year, in the form of an almanac.

I hope this article will interest many of your readers.

Yours truly,
EMILE BAUMER.

F. C. WEBER HAS VERY FINE STORE

Is Handsomely Fitted and Right up to the Minute

Citizens of Peterborough will have the opportunity tomorrow of visting the best equipped and most modern drug store in this city and district, and one of the finest in Ontario, when the doors of F. C. Weber's new store on Charlotte street are thrown open. As soon as one steps inside of the store the impression formed is that of finish in every particular. The elegant floor finish of hardwood, the lighting, which is of the semi-indirect model, and the magnificent finish of interior circassean walnut, strike the customer at once. The lights were installed by the Graatan-Thorpe Co., of this city. The interior work contains leaded dome insets. The showcases are of the latest and most modern design, with special devices for showing perfumes, etc. Special arrangements have also been made for the display of imported goods and the cases are of the most modern American design. The show-cases have a marble base and are of the most recent invention. The glass cases lend a very striking assistance to the display of goods. The wall fixtures are also of the latest, and sliding doors insure service. The rear ground of glass gives a double case effect. The receipt system, which is of the latest National Cash Register Co. design, assures accuracy and service. The ceiling of the store is of metallic and the walls of stucco finish. In the centre of the store are numerous huge palms which add beauty to the scene.

MR. F. C. WEBER.

The dispensing department is of the latest, and its arrangement insures sanitary measures as well as dispatch in making up prescriptions.

Another feature of the store is the photographic department with a complete line of Eastman films and supplies. This should prove one of the most popular departments in the store.

The chocolate department will also demand patronage. Considerable space has been given over to that branch of the busines and a full and complete assortment will be stocked at all times.

Everything in the line of good smokes will also be carried. The best in cigars, tobaccos, and cigarettes will be supplied.

The soda fountain installed is the last word in such things. It contains an automatic and sanitary glass, bowl washer, spoons, etc. All the ice cream and the flavours are kept in insets. The fountain is of marble and metal, and all dishes are made up in full view of the purchaser. Tables have been installed on the east side of the store. The tables are of marble top and bronze support. Cleanliness is one of the features of the refreshment department. Hot drinks, such as chocolate, oyster bisques and bullions will be served. Afternoon tea will also be served.

A huge Victor victrola will dispense music throughout each day. For the big opening tomorrow a five-piece orchestra has been engaged. Tomorrow 1,000 boxes of chocolates and 500 bottles of perfume will be given away free.

The windows of the store offer great opportunity for display. They are lighted admirably, and the lighting effect is also carried out on the awnings.

A committee of the whole council is called for tonight to decide what the city will do for the men, volunteering for active service. WAS KNOCKED DOWN BY WAGON

As the crowds were coming away from the G. T. R. depot last evening a horse, driven by Cyril Sullivan was frightened by the noise and made a dash for liberty. As the animal bounded around the corner of the freight sheds, one of the wheels struck Bugler George Butcher and knocked him down.

It was thought at first that he was seriously injured, but in a few minutes he gathered himself together again and was able to take his place on the march to the armouries.

BUGLER MILLS IS WATCHED

Members of Bugle Band Gave Him a Surprise

A very pleasant time was spent at the Armouries last night when the members of the Bugle Band gathred around a popular bugler, "Dutch" Mills, who is leaving with the 57th for the front. The boys had a little surprise in store for "Dutch" which took the form of a presentation of a wrist watch. A very able address was read by "Billy" Sharpe, while "Bobby" Beach made the presentation.

Though taken totally by surprise "Dutch" made a very suitable reply, and thanked the boys very kindly for their little token, and said it would be always a constant reminder to him of the "old boys" back home.

SERIOUS MISHAP WAS AVERTED

One Horse of Farmer's Team Was Struck by Car

That the corner of Charlotte and George Street was not the scene of a bad accident today, about 1.30, is due to the quick work and presence of mind of Motorman Collins who was driving a C.G.E. car. The street car was coming east and travelling at a fairly fast rate when approaching Aylmer Street. Without a second's warning, and the car only a few feet from the crossing, a team of horses coming from the north on Aylmer Street, sprung into view. An elderly man and woman were in the buggy drawn by the team and it appeared as though the driver lost control of the animals for they dashed directly in front of the car.

The few passengers in the car jumped to their feet while Motorman Collins clamped on the brake in a manner that brought the car to a standstill in less than fifty feet. One horse was struck on the side with the car and shoved around so quickly that the vehicle all but upset. The animals then made a dash toward the west but luckily a couple of bystanders caught the animals and brought them to a standstill. Too much credit cannot be given Motorman Collins for his quick action.

LAID AT REST

The funeral took place this morning of the late Robt. Butler, of Cobourg, a well known, and highly respected resident of that town, who passed away last Wednesday morning. The body arrived on the morning train from Port Hope, and was met by a number of friends and acquaintances, who followed the remains to Little Lake Cemetery, where interment took place. Mrs. Dawson, Donegal St., city, is a daughter of the late Mr. Butler.

BELLS WERE TOLLED

When His Lordship Bishop O'Brien, D.D., received official notice of the death of Pope Pius, the Tenth, yesterday afternoon at three o'clock he forwarded the sam news to all the priests in the Peterboro Diocese and the bells were tolled. This morning every priest in the universe, acquainted with the fact that the sovereign Pontiff had passed away, celebrated Mass for the repose of his soul. Next week at the Cathedral and Church of the Sacred Heart a High Mass will be celebrated.

Daughters of Empire Gave Well Filled Lunch Boxes

Port Hope Guide.

The 46th Regiment overseas volunteers contingent, which has been quartered at the Drill Shed for the past three days left at noon today for Val Cartier. The Company was in charge of Lieutenant Watson of this town and Capt. Nasmith, of Janetville.

To the martial music of the 46th Regimental band, the boys marched through the mud to the station and were followed by a large crowd of enthusiastic citizens. The first real struggle for the boys to experience was at the station platform. Mothers and wives and sweethearts broke through the crowd to have a parting word and there were many touching scenes. The women were weeping and the eyes of the volunteers commenced to bulge under the strain of holding back the tears.

At the Drill Shed, just previous to leaving, Mayor Bush, on behalf of the town, presented each of the local volunteers with five dollars and wished them bon voyage and success, Mrs. R. A. Mulholland, on behalf of the Daughters of the Empire, presented each member of the contingent with a well filled lunch box, consisting of sandwiches, bread, cheese, cake, watermelon, oranges and iced tea.

Following is the list of volunteers: Lt. C. H. D. Watson, Fred Jamieson, W. Piper, Fred Milne, Thomas Peverelle, W. J. Wilson. Herbert Elliott, J. C. Ashman, A. Clarke, J. Lewis, E. Milne, F. J. THE MONTHLY CROP BULLETIN

Ottawa, August 21.—The usual monthly bulletin of the Census and Statistics Office on field crops in Canada has just been issued. The reports made by the correspondents on July 21 show that the condition of grain crops has undergone a marked change since the last reports for June 30, due to excessive heat and continuous drought during the month of July, especially in the Northwest provinces where the bulk of the grain crops is produced.

Measured by a standard of 100 representing the promise of a full crop the average condition for the whole of Canada is returned for fall wheat as 71.5, compared with 78 on June 30 and 77.7 on July 31, 1913, for spring wheat at 77.4 against 86.3 last month and 87.6 a year ago, for oats as 77.9 against 87.3 last month and 87.4 in 1913, for barley as 77.4 against 86.2 last month and 87.5 last year and for rye as 78.5 against 84.7 and 85. In the Maritime provinces conditions show excellent, and in Quebec and Ontario, though drought is reported as having shortened the straw, the grain was said to be filling well and the figures of condition, which for most of the grain crops exceed or approach 90 are not greatly different from those of a month ago. For spring wheat in Manitoba the condition is 68.2 against 82.4 a month ago, for oats it is 62 against 87.6, for barley 62 against 79.8 and for rye 68.5 against 100. In Saskatchewan the figures are on July 31 for spring wheat 66 against 90 on June 30, for oats 57.8 against 88.9, for barley 59.6 against 89.4 and for rye 74.4 against 92. In Alberta the condition is represented by 68 for fall wheat against 73 last month, 75.4 for spring wheat against 84.3, 71.5 for oats against 85, 71.5 for barley against 85.8 and 77 for rye against 83.7. In some cases western correspondents state that there was still time for rains to effect an improvement before harvest which would begin about the end of the first week in August. Crops after summer fallows are distinctly superior to those prepared by fall or spring ploughing. Converting the figures of the standard condition at July 31 into those of a scale wherein 100 represents the average condition at July 31 for the six years 1908 to 1913 the condition for fall wheat is 90, for spring wheat 93, for oats 89, for barley 92 and for rye 94. That is to say the yield per acre this year is expected to be for fall wheat 10, for spring wheat 7, for oats 11, for barley 8 and for rye 6 p.c. below the six year average.

Potatoes in the Maritime provinces give an excellent promise with figures of condition ranging from 93 to 96.

A preliminary estimate of the yield per acre of fall wheat gives 20.95 bushels as compared with 23.29 bushels in 1913. For the harvested area of fall wheat in the five provinces of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, amounting to 973,300 acres the estimated total yield is 20,394,000 bushels as compared with 22,592,000 bushels, the final estimate of 1913. The drought has naturally affected the yield of hay and clover, the yield per acre of which for all Canada is, according to the preliminary estimate, is 1.15 ton as against 1.33 ton the final estimate of 1913. The estimated total yield is 9,206,000 tons as compared with 10,859,000 tons, the final estimate of 1913. The yield of alfalfa is placed at 129,780 tons against 237,770 tons last year.

TRIED TO WRECK BRIDGE.

Miscreants In B. C. Also Ambushed Rocky Mountain Rangers.

REVELSTOKE, B.C., Aug. 21.—News has just reached the city that a guard of Rocky Mountain rangers stationed at Mountain Creek bridge, 50 miles east of Revelstoke, were fired on from ambush in what is believed to have been an attempt to wreck the bridge just previous to the passage of a troop train on Monday carrying sailors from the Shearwater and Algerine to man the Niobe. Wounded men dressing wounds were seen later, and it is believed that some of the attackers were hit by bullets from the guard, who replied to the fire. None of the soldiers were wounded, although bullets whistled close to their heads in the darkness.

Garibaldi's In War.

LONDON, Aug. 21.—The Exchange Telegraph's Paris correspondent says: "Captain Riciotti Garibaldi arrived in Paris yesterday and his brother, Gen. Giuseppi Garibaldi, is expected to-day. They are in command of 1,000 Italian volunteers fully armed from America. If the French Government does not accept their services they will try to join the British or the Belgian forces."

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, August 20.—Yesterday's gain in wheat was lost in profit-taking sales today, and the close was weak, 2c to 2¼c net lower. Corn dropped 3-4c to 7-8c, oats 5-8c and provisions 25c to 35c, the latter in January pork. The market was almost purely speculative.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 20.—With no buying power on the market wheat prices today eased off considerably. General sentiment prevails that while values may go much higher the advance for the present is high enough. A heavy movement is on the eve of starting, and this will depress prices to some extent.

Wheat opened unchanged to 1¼c lower and about noon had dropped from the opening point, ⅞c to 2c further.

Oats were lower by ¼c to ⅜c at the opening and held steady. Flax opened at an advance of 2c to 3c and held firm.

Wheat closed 3¼c to 3⅛c, cash wheat, 3½c to 5⅝c lower.

The cash demand for wheat was good, Ontario millers only being buyers. Prices are out of line for export and no business is being done.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 20.—There was no further change in the condition of the local grain market today, being very firm with a fair trade passing in car lots. The demand from London for oats is good and as high as 29c was bid for No. 2 Canadian western. The enquiry from the United Kingdom for spring wheat flour today was fair, but there were no firm bids and millers state that they are not in a position to make any offers at present. The local trade is active at firm prices. Demand for mill feed is good, and offerings are rather scarce. Old crop baled hay is in good demand at strong prices. The trade in butter is rather quiet, but there is more demand for cheese, and some round lots have been sold over the cable, which has tended to strengthen the market in the country and prices have advanced. Eggs active and firm.

War Insurance Move Succeeds.

OTTAWA, Aug. 21.—The Government has received word that during the last few days a very large amount of war insurance business has been done through Lloyds and other channels below the Government rate of 4 guineas per cent. This was expected by the framers of the Government's scheme, the object of which was to fix a maximum limit and not to absorb the whole business of war risk insurance. Cargoes across the north Atlantic has been covered in open market at 2 per cent. and cargoes from the United Kingdom to the far east at 3 per cent. The Government rate was lowered August 17th to 3 guineas per cent.

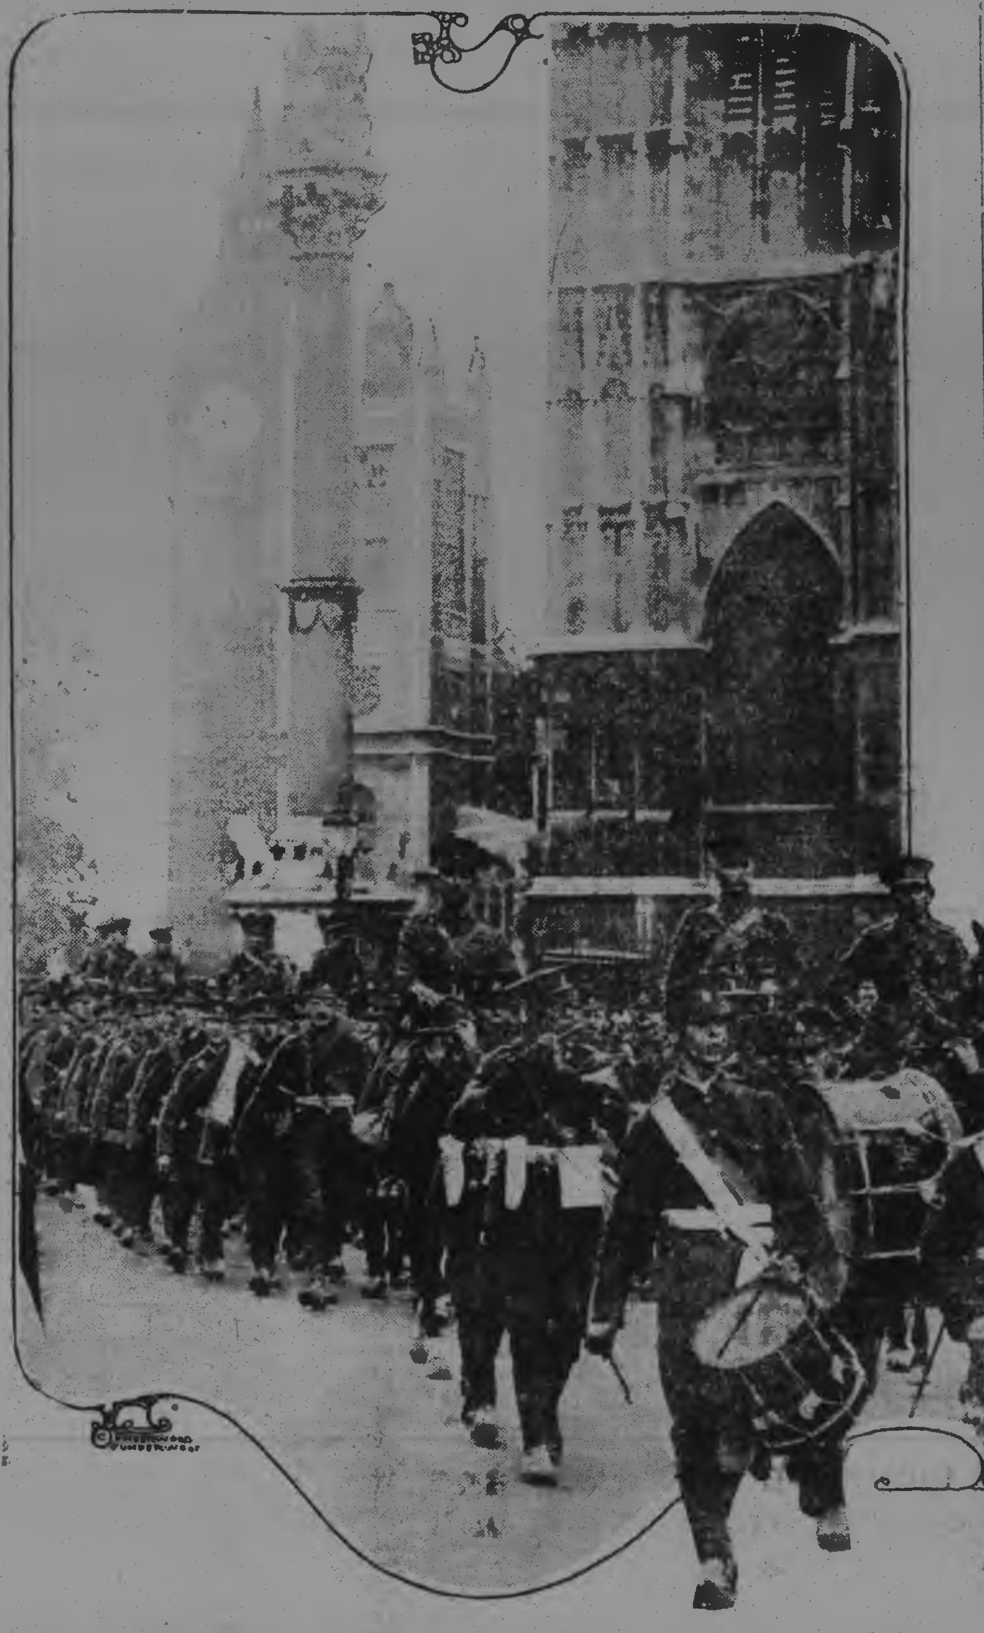
FIRST BRITISH SOLDIERS TO GO TO WAR



The first of Old England's warriors to cross the channel are here shown marching to Victoria Station, London, to entrain for the coast. Famous Westminster Abbey in the foreground, and in the background the clock of the House of Parliament.

The above is one of the first authentic war pictures to be received. It was taken after war had been declared, as the movement of troops was under way.

BLOOD-STAINED EUROPE

Take up the map of Europe.

Between the fortieth and the sixtieth parallels lie the central battlefields of the world. For thousands of years no fifty years have passed without some blood conflict in that great area, roughly twelve hundred by two thousand five hundred miles, harboring the many nations from which the greater new world has drawn [illegible], and of which Canada is a mighty unit. From St. Petersburg to Counstantinople, from Athens to Madrid, from Bordeaux to Aberdeen, Copenhagen to Christiania, within and around those lines the most sanguinary battles have raged—doubtless since the creation, and to them there is no end, despite civilization, science, the spread of education, and the influence of religion.

Great have been the battles on these great battle-grounds. Rivers of blood have flown, yet the land still thirsts. Like an old, abandoned toper it has become seasoned to the vintage of man, and drink of its fill it must seemingly until creation ends.

Necessity, the mother of invention, is the father of lies.

HEAD OF JESUITS DEAD.

Father Wernz, Known as "Black Pope," Passes Away at Rome.

ROME, Aug. 21.—(Via Paris.)—Father Francis Xavier Wernz, known as the "Black Pope," died early yesterday morning from diabetes. His fatal illness was superinduced by his anxiety over the war. He had constantly prayed, it is said, that victory should rest on the Austrian-German arms, but he was equally anxious as to the fate of the Jesuits in France, Germany and Austria.

Father Wernz was general of the Society of Jesus, and it is considered doubtful whether a conclave for the election of his successor can be held during the war, as the provincials of the different countries must come to Rome for that purpose. This would be exceedingly difficult, as they do not enjoy the same privileges as the cardinals.

Servians Congratulated.

LONDON, Aug. 21.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Co. says that Grand Duke Nicholas, commanding the Russian army, has sent a letter to Prince Alexander of Servia, saying: "Having received news of the brilliant victory of the Servian army I send on behalf of the pan-Slavic army cordial congratulations on the first victory which God has given us. The Russian army shouts to you a vigorous cheer in honor of the victorious Serbs."

Joined Servian Army.

LONDON, Aug. 21.—According to the Milan correspondent of The Chronicle the main body of the Montenegrin troops has been incorporated as an army corps in the Servian army. They have entered Hersegovina near Trebinje. The Albanian insurgents are moving forward rapidly. They occupy Fiera and are now marching south on Avlona, on the gulf of Avlona, in the Adriatic.

English Girl's Escapade.

BIJON, France, Aug. 21. — (Via Paris.)—French gendarmes yesterday stopped a young girl, who, disguised as a man, had left with a group of Pan aviators for the war. She was wearing a military aviator's uniform and had cut her hair short.

It was found that she was an English girl, aged 26. She will be sent back to her parents.

Good Times Ahead

THE sudden breaking out of war caused many to "run to cover." Like the Chicken on whom the rose leaf fell, some of us become a prey to fear and were ready to declare "the sky is falling."

Now our vision is clearing, our alarm has fled, we have recovered our poise and our courage. We are seeing, also, our opportunity. Swiftly and almost overwhelmingly has come to us the perception of the fact that the competition of Continental Europe has been taken away. We are faced with a condition and an opportunity both tending to our advantage as a country of industry, agriculture and trade. Good times are ahead, if Canada and Canadians see and seize the present opportunity for enlarging their industries and trading.

We must be careful. We must have Courage

MERCANTILE LEAGUE AT RIVERSIDE ON SATURDAY

If there should be a break in the rainy session to-morrow afternoon, two games will be played in the Mercantile league, at Riverside park. At two o'clock the Drafting Room and Wm. Hamilton teams meet, while at four the Red Caps play the Printers. McDougal and Kendry, of the Red Caps, have enlisted with the volunteers, while the Printers are bereft of the hard-hitting (?) first-baseman. New faces will appear in the line-ups. W. Andrews will handle the indicator.

FOURTEEN YEARS IN MAJOR LEAGUES FOR SAM CRAWFORD

American league players who have stuck in the game for more than a decade are not quite so infrequent as molars in the jaw of a hen, but at the same time they are pretty much to the rara avis, and getting no less so fast. Among the ancient and honorable veterans who still look good for a number of annums or more as Ban Johnson's slaves is Samuel Crawford, the valiant outfielder of the Detroit Tigers. Sam will celebrate his thirty-fourth birthday today, having been born at Wahoo, Nebrasky, on August 20, 1880. The midget outer gardener—he is only six feet and half an inch in altitude—is still able to paste the pill well over the .300 mark, and at various times this season the venerable patriarch has made a noise like leading the league. Wahoo's most eminent native son mad his triumphal entry into professional baseball away back in the last century, playing with Chatham, Ont., in the Canadian league. His batting average for the season was .370, and in '99 Columbus grabbed him for its Western league club. He finished the season with Grand Rapids, swatting .334, and in 1900 he broke into the National league with the Reds. He batted well over .300 during his Cincinnati pilgrimage. After the close of the 1902 season he jumped the National League and signed on with the Tigers, and has been hitting them outwell over .300 most of the time since then. His fat year was 1911, when he rolled up an average of .378. In 1908 he led the league in home runs, in 1910 and 1913 in three-base hits, and in 1909 he achieved the greatest number of doubles. In fielding he has led the American league right fielders four years—1903, 1905, 1911 and 1912. In 1907, when he played center garden, he was the star of the circuit in that position. Sam has also covered first base for the Tigers on occasion, and did very nicely, although his work lacked the eclat of his outfield performances. He has helped the Tigers to cop three pennants. Mr. Crawford is said to receive a salary in the neighborhood of five thousand bones per annum. He is a member of the Baseball Players' fraternity, and one of the directors of that warlike and militant organization.

COMMENT

As You Like It

When Canada's sons march to the front to fight side by side with the mother country, athletic Canada will be well represented. Men from every branch of sport are offering their services, and warriors of the gridiron, track athletes, cricketers, hockeyists and sundry will shoulder a rifle for their country's cause.

Varsity sends its share, and no less than eight members of one fraternity, the Zeta Phi, have volunteered. Pete Campbell, the famous little quarter-back and 'Varsity captain of 1912, is now at Long Branch with the 48th Highlanders. Harold Storms, the R.M.C. cadet who played with 'Varsity last year, is with the Grenadiers. George Blackstock, also with R.M.C. and now with 'Varsity, is at present in England and is taking out an imperial commission. Other members of the Zeta Phi out at the Long Branch military camp are Jack Kay, A. J. Wilson, Ponton Armour, Geo. Magann and F. Boulte.

Argos Line-up.

Argonauts are also to the fore, and have Alec Sinclair, of Henley, Olympic and Rugby fame. Alec served in the South African war and is back in the game for more. He is a kilty. Harry Symonds, the peppery little quarter-back; Bill Jarvis, sailor, Rugby player and horseman, together with his brother, Harold, sons of Mr. Aemelius arvis, are lieutenants in the Governor-General's Body Guards. Hugh Aird, the 'Varsity hockey player, is with the Queen's Own, and Rosedale Cricket club is represented by Hugh Reid, of the same regiment.—Toronto Telegram.

Christy Mathewson is a master artist when it comes to mixing up a bewildering assortment of slow balls, speed, curves, and fadeaways.

But Matty's wisdom goes even beyond that. In place of centreing his entire attention upon one game from mid-February to mid-October, a stretch of eight months, the Miracle Man of the Mound finally decided to mix up games as well and so relieve the tension and the staleness.

By taking up golf he was able to shift his mind entirely from baseball twice a week. And by pitching a few games of baseball here and there he was able to escape the wild frenzy of the average golfing debutante.

As a result of which he was able to enter August leading both leagues in the box despite his fourteen years of servitude — and was able to average 85 at golf despite only one year's concentration on the game.

Matty has made wonderful strides at golf through his fourteen-year training at making his muscles obey his brain. He rarely foozles. His timing is generally good despite a form that is not yet wholly orthodox. It is even possible that by deeper concentration on the game after he quits baseball he may even skirt the championship ranks. But in the meanwhile he still has one or two good ball game left in his old right flipper. One or two — plus several more. — From Collier's.

Fund For Boy Scouts.

Sir Robert Baden-Powell has appealed to the British public to provide $1,000,000 endowment for the boy scout movement. He has received $325,000 toward the desired total. In writing of the boy scout movement Sir Robert says: "Very good work lies possible to it, especially in the slums of our great industrial centres, where thousands of the poorer class boys are never given a chance to start fair in the race for life, but are left to drift into unemployableness and misery without a hand to help them. Yet they are human and could be made into good citizens and valuable assets to the nation in their thousands were a little trouble taken to help them."

Glacier Moves Again.

Canada again has a harbor opening on the Pacific Ocean through the Alaska Panhandle. Three years ago it was discovered that by the movement of a giant glacier a harbor had been opened through that part of the United States territory known as the Panhandle, thus affording the northern part of British Columbia access to the sea.

A year ago the news reached Ottawa that the glacier had changed its mind and trundled the harbor back again out of Canadian territory. And now word has reached the Geological Survey here that the decision has been reversed, and the harbor is back again.

Prof. Brock, Deputy Minister of Mines, says that the general movement of these glaciers is backward from the ocean, so that Canada will one day have its harbor for good and all.

In our Ready-to-W-ear Department one will now find a very attractive and authoritative range of the stunning new suits and coats for the new season.

Quite true—it is an advance showing, mostly all the models being New York creations. All are beautifully developed and absolutely exclusive. Nothing else like them are to be seen in this city.

A wise thing to do is to choose your new garments early—by so doing you secure first choice of the new styles.

Saturday would be an ideal day for you to come in and see the new ready-to-wear suits and coats.

May we expect you? We feel confident that the new styles and the materials from which these garments are made will certainly appeal to your taste and liking.

TREASURER REPORTS FUND IN NEIGHBORHOOD OF $1800

At the meeting of the Women's Committee in charge of Hospital Ship and War Fund, held at the armouries yesterday afternoon with Mrs. Travers in the chair, Mrs. Ritchie, the treasurer, reported that the total fund stood in the neighborhood of $1,800. It was voted that $1,000 of this fund be sent to the Hospital Ship Fund in Toronto. The Sons of England Lansdowne Lodge offered to donate the proceeds of their Saturday excursion less expenses to the fund. The management of the Empire Theatre, sent word that the proceeds of next Wednesday's performance would be donated to the fund.

A very hearty vote of thanks was passed to those who loaned autos on Tuesday; to Mr. Keyes for directing parade; Mr. Watt for preparing signs; Mr. A. W. Turner for loaning flags; Mr. Sharp for arranging for buglers and especially to buglers themselves.

It was decided that the Daughters of the Empire who are on the general committee, be a special committee with power to add to their numbers to administer the Relief Fund in the hands of the treasurer.

A sewing meeting was held this afternoon at the armouries to prepare "housewives" for the soldiers going to the front.

"THE RISE AND FALL OF NAPOLEON"

One of the Most Interesting War Films Ever Produced Touring Only the City Theatres

Beginning with a matinee Thursday afternoon, August 27th, at 2.30, the eight-reel picture, "The Rise and Fall of Napoleon," will open a three-day engagement at the Grand, with two shows daily, at 2.30 and 8.15 p.m. The part of Napoleon is taken by the French actor, M. Charly of the Theatre Antoine, Paris, and it is said to be a great impersonation.

The realism of every scene, particularly those depicting six of Napoleon's famous battles, the burning of Moscow, and the retreat across the ice plains, is said to be striking. The subject is staged with accuracy as to detail in costumes and settings, and where practicable have been taken on the exact location where the event occurred. For instance, Napoleon bids farewell to his "Old Guard" at Fontainebleau Castle, where the event actually happened, as also his retreat from Moscow, which was posed for on the snow-clad fields of Russia, over the very spot where lie buried the bones of thousands of his brave followers who perished in that famous disastrous retreat of a century ago.

The situations call for several realistic battle scenes requiring the massing and action of large bodies of soldiers, and the resulting carnage from shot shell and bayonet is impressive from the great numbers of troops employed in the manoeuvres.

The scenes of court life, where the emperor receives his leading officers, and their wives, is brilliant in its array of costumes and uniforms, and courtly in its assemblage of fair women and brave men.

MINE-LAYING IS EXPECTED, SAYS EXPERT OF TIMES

The sinking of the Konigin Luise, says the London Times, by which the British Navy scores first blood, is precisely one of the incidents which are fairly certain to precede decisive action. The Konigin Luise was a Hamburg-Amerika liner of about 2,000 tons and had been converted into a mine layer. Probably she carried 400 or 500 mines, each filled with explosive and so fitted that after a certain time had elapsed it would become "live" or ready to explode if touched.

Rows of such mines can be fastened round the bulwarks or, on a deck sloping towards the stern, sus- Sometimes they are fastened together with chains or wire hawsers, and matters are so arranged that when put into the water they remain at a depth fixed by the layer. A ship, either an old cruiser, still of good speed, or a fast liner, is fitted in this way, and her business is to steam at high speed across the estuary of a river, or the entrance to a port, and as successive runs are made to strew the mines in parallel or converging rows until the layer has disposed of her cargo. The Konigin Luise was perhaps on her way to the Thames to get rid of her cargo in this way when the Harwich patrol flotilla and the Amphion picked her up and stopped her game with a torpedo. That other attempts will be made is certain, and our destroyers may not always be so fortunate as to score. There is, however, another way of dealing with the mines, and the mine sweeper is a vessel which also performs its duty very efficiently and with extraordinary quickness.

BEST TYPE OF AIRSHIP TO BE DETERMINED IN THE WAR

The conflict now raging among the powers of Europe promises not only to be a struggle for supremacy on land and sea but for supremacy in the air as well. France, Russia, and England will send their vast air fleets against the giant Zeppilins of the Germans.

In a measure, the present European war will settle for all time the relative merits of the aeroplane and the dirigible balloon as engines of destruction. In the development of the latter type of aircraft Germany stands supreme. She has nine of the giant Zeppelins fully equipped, and five more nearing completion.

Work on these is being rushed with all possible speed. They range from 450 to 525 feet in length, are equipped with motors giving from 350 to 420 horse power, and carry light three inch guns which have been successfully fired in manoeuvres. They speed through the air at the rate of forty to fifty miles an hour.

Zeppelin Design.

All the Zeppelins are of the rigid type, the outer shell and framework being of aluminum construction. Inside the framework are the silk bags, as many as seventeen in some of the largest types, filled with hydrogen gas. The advantage of a number of small bags, lies in the ability of the airship to keep afloat even with one or more of the bags punctured or otherwise out of commission.

Austria also has several rigid dirigibles and Italy has three or four. If Italy joins in with Germany and Austria, the Triple Alliance will have at its disposal 31 of this type of aircraft.

Entente's Equipment.

On the other hand, England, France and Russia can muster 34 gas bag airships, but they are all much smaller than the Zeppelins and are of the non-rigid or semi-rigid type.

The Triple Entente, formed by these three countries, will pin their faith to their aeroplanes rather than to the balloons. It is estimated that the Entente has 1,860 aeroplanes against the 700 of the Alliance. France, especially, has developed the army aeroplane to a state of efficiency and uses both the monoplane and the biplane, although the former predominates. For scouting work the monoplane has proved to be more successful because of the greater speed it can attain and the fewer chances of discovery by the enemy.

The Italian aviators are the only airmen who have received actual training in aerial warfare. The Italians successfully used aeroplanes in their campaign in Tripoli and also attained a certain measure of success with semi-rigid dirigibles.

England's Fleet.

England has one fast, though small, dirigible attached to her navy. This is the Astra Torres IV., which recently made fifty-one miles an hour against a twelve-mile wind. It is of the non-rigid type and can be deflated and packed abroad a warship. The Vickers and Armstrong firms are now constructing two rigid airships for the British Admiralty. These, when completed, will resemble the Zeppelin.

England also has one naval Parseval, 270 feet long. The Astra Torres is slightly smaller. There are also four other airships, from 100 to 150 feet in length. France has 15 dirigibles attached to her army. These range from 275 to 325 feet in length. The Spiess, the largest of the French fleet, is rigid. There is also under construction another Spiess which will be 450 feet long.

Austria has but three airships in condition for use a collision about a month ago having destroyed one of the Austrian army balloons.

Little is known of the Russian dirigibles. She has thirteen small, low speed craft. Like England and France she has concentrated on the aeroplane.

PROSPECTING FOR BLACK DIAMONDS IN THE ARCTICS

Expedition is Being Fitted Out to Examine Beds.

The schooner Laddie is now equipping at St. John's, Nfld., to proceed to Hudson Bay on a prospecting expedition. The principal object of her mission is to secure, if possible, coal deposits in that area which can be utilized in connection with the proposed opening of the Hudson Bay Railway. The expedition is being financed by Mackenzie and Mann, whose Canadian Northern Railroad has a junction at Le Pas, Manitoba, where the Hudson Bay Railroad joins it. One of the most essential factors to the successful carrying out of this enterprise will be the securing of an adequate coal supply for the steamers and trains that will be used—for the steamers even more so than for the trains. At present all the coal that is required in connection with steamer traffic to that bay has to be conveyed there in the bunkers or holds of the Newfoundland sealing steamers that are used for freighting purposes in the summer months, they being really the only vessels in the world at present that can stand the stress and strain of early navigation in these ice-laden waters, and these procure their coal supplies at Sydney, Cape Breton.

Coal for the needs of the railway-building forces is conveyed by trains behind the advance gangs from Winnipeg and Le Pas on towards Hudson Bay as the railroad progresses, and when the rails are laid to the seaboard and terminals are constructed at Port Nelson provision will be made for the storage of coal in large quantities, both from Western Canada and from Cape Breton, but in either case the cost of coal is going to be a very substantial item, and if a supply could be secured at any point comparatively accessible for ships plying on the Hudson Bay route it would have an immense advantage, one that in course of time would amount to very many millions. Hence the efforts of these railway capitalists to locate coal deposits along that route that can be worked, because they would be used not only for the freighting steamers, but also be carried at a minimum of cost from the coast where they were located to Port Nelson itself, and there utilized for the bunkering of regular steamers and for the requirements of locomotives.

Those wiseacres who are predicting that the world will within a limited period be without coal are oblivious of the fact that when the stocks of this combustible in more favored climes are exhausted it will still be possible to obtain a large supply from mines within the Arctic regions. They are not worked at present, but whalers and explorers delve out sufficient for their needs year after year as they cruise the northern seas.

One of the best known of these deposits is near Disco, West Greenland, and has supplied Arctic steamers for over forty years. Peary's ships resorted there every season, and the Dundee whalers invariably filled their bunkers with it to carry them home.

Give Public Preference.

Amendments have been made to the cold storage regulations passed last session, which are of considerable importance. It is provided that owners of cold storage warehouses which are subsidized under the act must give the public preference in the use of refrigerated space. It shall be a violation of the act if such space is refused on the plea of lack of space if such space is to be occupied by goods belonging to the owners of the warehouse.

Owners shall not contract or agree to give all the refrigerated space to one or more firms to the exclusion of the general public. A fine not exceeding $50 is provided for violation of these regulations.

Not In Force Yet.

As considerable misunderstanding has arisen as to the new naturalization act, the State Department at Ottawa is issuing a special circular on the subject directing attention to the fact that the new law is not now in effect but will be only on January 1st next, while with respect to people living here at present and up to the first of the year, the old law will apply for three years yet. Heretofore naturalization was granted in court by judges. Under the new law the judges will certify as to the evidence of qualification, while the certificate of naturalizatiin will be issued by the Secretary of State.

HARNESSING OF NATURE

Ingenious Devises to Obtain Power From Natural Forces.

In several ingenious ways the forces of nature are now exploited in order to provide power for machinery necessary for various human activities.

One of the most ingenious of these inventions is that which obtains power from the rays of the sun. The apparatus is at work in Egypt, where it pumps up water on to high levels in thousands of gallons.

This novel device consists of a number of reflecting mirrors which concentrate the rays of the sun on to a glass-covered trough containing water. In a short space of time this water becomes sufficiently heated by the reflection from the mirrors to give off steam, which passes into a pipe to an engine of the usual steam variety. When some 30 or 40 of these heating boxes are boiling water by means of the sun's heat it is obvious that sufficient steam power is obtained to keep a very powerful pumping engine at work with a minimum of expense.

Some idea of the enormous power which the sun machine conveys to the engine can be gauged by the fact that 3,000 gallons of water can be lifted 40 feet in one minute. In many ingenious ways water is now trapped by means of dams, gigantic reservoirs and great stretches of piping and converted into power for various purposes.

Many great waterfalls are now harnessed in such a fashion, two of the most important being the falls of the Rhine and those of Niagara. The machinery used to obtain power from these great products of nature is somewhat complicated, but, roughly speaking, huge pipes divert tons of water from the rapids just above the fall. This trapped water is then allowed to fall some hundreds of feet and the force of its fall produces enormous power. The water drops down pipes and shoots out in fierce jets from nozzles below.

Dozens of these powerful streams impinge on water wheels connected to a shaft which is whirled around at a furious speed, thus providing the force necessary to keep numerous electric dynamos continually at work. In this fashion the falls of Niagara are made to produce little short of 1,000,000 horse power. Still more ingenious is another method of producing power from sea water by the rise and fall of the tides. Portions of the coast where high tides are chosen, and a number of clefts in the cliffs are constructed or those of nature specially adapted.

The water runs far up into these openings at high tide, and by means of pipes is trapped into a huge reservoir. When the tide falls hundreds of gallons of water are thus left behind. Being on a high level, it is then a comparatively simple matter to drop this water by means of pipes to a level many feet below and utilize the power thus obtained by the usual water jets acting on specially constructed wheels.

Wind is still trapped and converted into power by windmills, but these machines are very different from the old type of mill with its four big sails. The modern windmill is a scientifically constructed apparatus, the driving force consisting of a wheel containing a number of steel blades, placed at such an angle that they respond to every puff of wind.

So delicate is the construction of these instruments that even a moderate breeze will whirl the large wheel around at many hundred revolutions a minute. This motion acts on a shaft which provides power for electric dynamos below. These machines are used mostly in coast towns or those situated on high levels, where wind blows more or less constantly.

One of the most ingenious projects for harnessing the forces of nature is that conceived by Sir William Ramsay, and, despite its daring nature, it has been well received in high scientific circles. His plan is to take the heat of the earth's interior by means of huge bore holes. These shafts would be sunk deep into the earth so that they penetrated into large coal seams. By means of electricity this coal would be fired until it burned like some powerful internal furnace. By means of pipes the gas given off by this burning coal would be conveyed to the surface and in various ways utilized for power purposes. The advantage of this scheme is that power could be derived from coal as it lay in its natural element, and the cost of mining it and bringing it up to the surface would be avoided.

He Was the Whole Cabinet.

The record concentration of office into a single hand was achieved by the Duke of Wellington in 1834, when William IV. suddenly parted with his Whig ministers. Sir Robert Peel, who was to form the new ministry, was in Rome, and it took between three and four weeks for the king's messenger to reach him and for him to return, traveling almost continuously night and day. In the meantime Wellington was practically the entire government. He really held the offices only of first lord of the treasury and home secretary, but any one of the secretaries of state can perform the duties of any other or all of them, and this Wellington actually did.—Westminster Gazette.

A WARLIKE ANCESTOR

Kaiser's Military Ambitions Started Many Generations Ago.

If the sharp eyes of a soldier had not detected the arrangements of a 17-year-old boy to run away from home, history might now be writing a different story in Europe.

The boy happened to be a prince. He wanted to be an artist, not a king, but when stopped in his flight, his father began the stifling of artistic ambitions by beheading the boy's companion before his eyes.

He learned war instead of art and set that standard for military prowess for Prussia which has since been so zealously defended. Known to history as Frederick the Great, he kept his country involved in wars for many years after he ascended the throne in 1740. He made it a military nation.

In his later years of peace, Frederick the Great abolished all serfdom, established free speech, reclaimed vast tracts of worthless lands by drainage and peopled them with colonists.

How Italy Is Hit

Italy will be one of the chief sufferers from the war whether she engages in it or not as its chief sources of revenue are sulphur, oranges and lemons and tourists. The latter item provides a gross revenue of over $100,000,000 annually. There will be no tourists for Italy for a long time and few ships to handle her citrus crops.

Wars of the Past

In the conflict with Napoleon for the freedom of Europe, which extended over two decades, the British people increased the national debt by upwards of $3,000,000,000.

England had a population of only 5,000,000 and London only 250,000 people when the English threw back the Aramada in 1588.

France has 31,391 miles of railway.

HOW THE JAPANESE CAME TO VANCOUVER

Old Ishakawa Told Where Orientals Came From.

Katsuzo Ishikawa was born in Tokio in the land of Dai Nippon, but at a comparatively early age come to British Columbia. With his earlier life we are not concerned; at the time of which we write he was keeping a boarding house and billiard room in the city of Vancouver, and was president of the Japanese Boarding House Keepers' Union.

Ishiwaka was unconsciously the occasion of a great denouement; he it was who furnished a clue—supplied the answer in fact to an important question existing in the year 1907 on the British Columbia coast—"Where did the Japanese come from?" Ishikawa gave the answer.

In the spring of 1907 the Oriental immigration situation on the Canadian Pacific coast was becoming acute. Chinese immigration, restricted to some extent by the imposition of a $500 head tax, though not relished by the white inhabitants of British Columbia, was not causing any great alarm; it was steady, but it came gradually and could be controlled. The head tax had been put up before; it could be put up again. What commenced to worry the people, however, was the big increase in the number of Japanese coming to Columbia's shores. Then came the riots of 1907 and the enquiry into the losses of the Japanese.

Ishikawa was put on the stand and his evidence revealed the secret.

When the commission rose, poor old Ishiwaw had been pumped dry; he had told all about the emigration companies in Japan, formed for the purpose of sending out Japanese laborers for the railway and lumber camps of British Columbia; he had supplied the names of other companies in Vancouver who were bringing immigrants from Japan; had furnished the raison d'etre for a further enquiry as to the methods by which Orientals had been induced to come to Canada, the commission authorizing which was rushed through by wire almost before the Japanese interested in the immigration of laborers had had time to get set, and which further enquiry cleared up the whole question of how the Orientals were coming in.

This further enquiry, however, is another story; the present concerns merely poor, old Ishikawa. For once it became known among his Japanese friends how Ishikawa had let the cat out of the bag his lot was not a happy one; he was condemned for his stupidity; it was plain in later evidence that strong efforts were made to dispute his testimony, and throw discredit upon it, but to no avail, Ishikawa was a tide in the affairs of men; he had been taken at the flood, and he had led on to victory for those interested in solving the big Japanese influx into British Columbia.

And no doubt oft times in his boarding house on Powell street in the Japanese quarter in Vancouver, as he gathers in the receipts from his billiard table, and debates what manner of hash his boarders shall have on the morrow, Ishikawa often meditates on those fair days when he was president of the Japanese Boarding House Keepers' Union, from which long since he has been dethroned, and of one particular, eventful day—a dismal, rainy day in the fall of an eventful year—"Ah, surely the month was October, in his most immemorial year"—the day that he became in truth "poor, old Ishikawa."

Wanted—A Strong Navy.

One of the best stories which Lord Mersey, chairman of the Empress of Ireland Wreck Commission, tells about himself is that concerning an old lady's remarks on his appointment to the position of President of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division. "Dear me!" exclaimed the old lady, "Is he going to the Admiralty Division? How very nice! I do trust he will see that we shall have a strong navy."

Apparently his lordship, like many other people, views with amazement the progress of the modern woman, and during the course of a speech which he made a short time ago he said: "Ladies have ceased to be what they were—the shadow of their husbands—and have become personalities, people whom we cannot ignore. . . . They have become more and more separated from the poor man. What they are becoming quite terrifies me. I am beginning to doubt whether I know women at all, and if I do not, what on earth am I doing sitting in the Divorce Court?"

THE INVISIBLE FOE

Silent, Deadly Submarines Constitute Greatest Danger in Naval Warfare.

Unlike the dirigible or aeroplane, the submarine is invisible. Its periscope or "eye" is so minute an object and is above the water so seldom that the detection and forestalling of a submarine attack is practically impossible. In night attacks, such as may take place when harbors are blockaded, a fleet must keep moving perpetually, and then it is not safe. The submarine, being invisible, can lie in the track of the battleships and deal its death blow as they pass. The strongest searchlights cannot pick submarines up, except when they are running on the surface, and then it is no easy thing to do.

That the submarines are as deadly to themselves as to the enemy is the view accepted by those who serve on them. Leaving out all accidents, it is safe to say that the shock of the submarine's torpedo exploding against the side of a Dreadnought will be, in many cases, sufficient to cave in the sides of the submarine and cause its loss and the death of its crew. A recent test at Portsmouth, showed that 80 pounds of guncotton exploded under water had sufficient force to destroy a submarine within a radius of 100 feet. All defence against submarines is based on a knowledge of their position, either exact or superficial. The Orling-Armstrong torpedo as used by the British navy can be controlled and exploded by wireless. One plan is to direct a number of torpedoes of this type to a spot where a submarine is suspected and explode them when they are near the spot. This is the same idea as the man who takes a ten-bore gun and goes after deer with buckshot. Ninety per cent. of his shot miss, but the others do the work.

It is generally accepted that a submarine detected is a submarine destroyed, and several ingenious plans have been evolved to do away with it. In Portsmouth a short time ago extensive experiments were made with "spar-torpedoes." These are explosives on the end of a long spar, and are carried over the bow of a 30-knot destroyer. The tests were made with a large barrel, to which was fixed a periscope. The barrel was sunk so that just the "eye" would show as the waves washed over it. A destroyer, the Starfish, was sent after it, and on the first trial blew the barrel to atoms.

Dragnets have been tried with success. Destroyers with these great nets between them have been able to catch the submarines, but in several of the tests the destroyers have been technically destroyed by a torpedo from the submarine. Of course, the submarine would have been destroyed itself, but the naval advantage lay with the submarine.

Taking all things into consideration, it is safe to say that there is no defence against the submarine unless it is detected, and as it can remain under water from 20 to 24 hours and has a cruising radius of more than 80 miles, it is very hard to discover.

England has by far the greatest number of submarines, and it is conceded that they are more highly developed than those of the other nations. Her submarine corps has had much experience and is most efficient. There are now about 75 submarines fit for active service in the British navy. Many of these can be carried on the deck of a Dreadnought and slipped into the water just before a battle or an attack on a blockading fleet. Germany has 27 submarines, France 55, Russia 14, Austria 6, and the other European nations have about 30 between them.

Queen a Prussian Colonel

One of the curious touches of the present war, which involves so many royal relations throughout Europe, is the fact that Queen Alexandra is an Honorary Colonel of the Prussian Royal Dragoons. Her portrait hangs in the regiment's messroom and her health has been drunk by the officers after that of the Kaiser and the Kaiserin. Queen Mary is also an honorary German Colonel-in-Chief and is said to look very well in the gorgeous shako and jacket of the 5th Regiment of Prussian Hussars. It is safe to say that little thought was given to these Royal ladies when their regiments honored the toast to "Der Tag," the day when William might strike at that Empire whose strength, "broad-based upon the people's will," has roused his insane jealousy.

A grouch sometimes comes without a reason and stays until it finds one.

DIFFER ON FRESH AIR.

London Specialists Who Want Their Windows Shut.

Sir Robertson Nicol complains about the "detestable habit of open windows," by which he asserts that he catches cold. Despite the fact that many doctors preach the gospel of the open window, there is apparent dissonance between medical teaching and medical practice, says The London Standard.

At half-past eight o'clock one morning in Harley street there was scarce a window that let in the morning air. Later exploration at eleven o'clock and at noon of a warm, sultry day in the doctors' quarters—Harley street, Queen Anne street, Cavendish square, Wimpole street, and Devonshire street — corroborated the fact that, to outward appearance, doctors do not practice all they are believed to preach.

A physician gave the following explanation: "All up and down Harley street just now you observe the painters' ladders. I want the air, but unmixed with the odor of paint." This failed to account satisfactorily for the case, however. While the painters were busy about the house of Dr. Abercrombie, for instance, and the doctor's many windows were all sealed, the men of the brush were equally busy next door to Sir John Tweedy, yet most of his twelve windows let in the odorous air. Ladders were reared against Dr. Gordon Holmes' and Dr. Pegler's, but the windows there were open wide. Yet a tour of the district, where specialists' consulting rooms vastly outnumbered the paint pots, made it evident that eleven out of twelve of the West End medical practiced the plan of the closed window.

In Cavendish square but one half heartedly opened window let the noontide air into the house of Dr. Symes Thompson, son of the great pioneer of open-air treatment for tuberculosis. Sir Victor Horsley kept his closed, save one on the second floor, and seemingly of his mind were Sir D. Ferrier, the specialist in neurology; Dr. Sandwith, Dr. Elizabeth Patteson, Sir Arbuthnot Lane, the senior surgeon of Guy's; Dr. Dundas Grant, throat and ear specialist, and Sir Donald Ross, who has special experience of tropical medicine. There it appeared as though a six-inch opening was in deference to the wishes of a small bird that hung in a gilded cage.

No. 7 Harley street, which has the plates of seven doctors on its door, had but two sparingly opened windows. On the other hand, those of Dr. Guthrie Rankin, physician to the Seamen's Hospital at Greenwich, all opened so widely that the curtains fluttered out into the zephyrs of the street, and Sir Anderson Critchett, surgeon in ordinary to the King, invited as much air as he could into every room. The practical evidence at the house of Dr. Lister, ex-president of Guy's, and an authority on consumption, was to the contrary purpose. At Dr. Wethered's, physician to the Brompton and Ventnor Hospitals, three windows out of twelve were opened a little way; but Dr. Pasteur's, senior physician to Middlesex Hospital, were opened wide. Sir Maurice Abbott-Anderson, surgeon to the Princess Royal, used the double window favored by Queen Victoria, so arranged that his first floor was aired between the panes.

But these and many open-air exceptions only proved the rule of the sealed house.

London's Homeless.

The annual census of homeless persons has just been taken by the London County Council. It shows that 2,881 persons on the night the count was made were without homes.

The numbers have declined since the original census was made, ten years ago, principally because of the new casual ward scheme, by which wanderers are questioned by the police and given tickets of admission to the casual wards. Those who, on the night of the census, were actually homeless in the streets or sleeping on staircases or beneath porches numbered 317 men, 112 women and 5 children. There were also 77 sitting in shelters, 29 in the King's tents, over 2,000 in free lodging houses and 335 in the casual wards.

"Drunk With Thy Beauty."

Charles Dickens once had an argument with a friend about Byron's expression, "Drunk with thy beauty," to which he made great objection. During the discussion the novelist gazed as if enraptured at his host's fair haired daughter, who was in the room. At last he sprang to his feet, struck a dramatic attitude, clasped his heart with his hands and stalked to the window, where he wrote on the white woodwork:

O maiden of the amber dropping hair,
Would I, Byronically, thy praise might utter!
Drunk with thy beauty, would that I might dare
To breathe out paeans, borne upon a shutter!

A Flinty Hearted Bishop.

An English clergyman once applied to his bishop for a living, saying that he would prefer an English benefice to one in Wales. Mr. P. H. Ditchfield tells the story in "The Old English County Squire." The bishop demanded the reason for this preference, and the chaplain replied:

"I should prefer an English living, since my wife does not speak Welsh."

"Your wife, sir! What has that got to do with it? She does not preach, does she?"

"No, my lord," replied the parson, "but she lectures."

The parson got his living, but it was in the wilds of Wales.

PAPER GLOBES AND FANS.

Interesting Pose of a Youthful Impersonator—Many Things That Little People Like to Know—Some Distinguished Royal Animals.

As an impersonator Master Grenville Temple Emmett is a success, as the photograph here reproduced shows. He is a little New York boy, son of Grenville Emmett, and posed not long ago at a public entertainment. He represents Lord Althorp as painted by the famous artist Sir Joshua Reynolds. Of course Master Emmett had help in arranging for the picture. But he kept as still as a mouse when the curtain arose and tried not to so much as wink an eye. It is doubtful if Emmett succeeded in not winking, for that is very hard to do. Let any one try it himself. At any rate, the young poser made a very nice picture.

Japanese Fan Game.

Provide yourselves with ordinary inexpensive Japanese fans and Japanese paper globes of various colors. These globes are six or seven inches in diameter. They come folded flat, but all the players have to do is to unfold them and inflate them through the tiny hole which will be found in one end.

Have a goal—make it of two poles six feet apart, with a top crosspiece—at each end of your field. The field should be about the size of a tennis court. Have a smaller goal also in the center of the field.

Choose two captains and let them choose up their sides, the same number on each side. One from each side—two in all—play at a time, each standing in front of his own goal and at a signal from the umpire advancing toward the center, fan in hand.

At the next signal the two captains toss their balls high in the air. It is up to the two players now to keep the balls from touching the ground and to guide them toward the opponent's goal, causing them to pass meanwhile either over or under the middle goal. The only means either one can employ is his fan.

Supposing either ball falls to the ground, the player is privileged to lift it up on his fan without touching it with his fingers and to resume the play, provided his opponent has not yet reached his desired goal.

Royal Beasts.

No other race of animals can show such a history as the black oxen that draw the funeral cars of Japanese emperors. They are of a special breed and for centuries have been kept for the sole use of the imperial family.

The cream colored Hanoverian horses reserved for the British royal family are nearly as famous, but some of these animals once wore the yoke of an alien and an enemy. When Napoleon occupied Hanover in 1804 he seized all the cream colored horses in the royal stables and took them to Paris. The state carriage at his coronation was drawn by eight of these animals.

This insult, as he regarded it, made George III. so angry that he would not use the others of the breed that were stabled in London. Until the fall of Napoleon the state coach was always drawn by black horses when the king opened parliament.

NEVER AGAIN.

On Greenland's icy mountains
The people wait around
And at their luck throw snowballs
Because the pole is found.
No longer will explorers
With toys and good advice
Go northward to employ them
To gambol on the ice.

The yearly summer outing
They can, with hopeful eye,
Look forward to no longer
Excitement to supply.
For learned men of science
They may no longer hope,
With gifts of grub and bracelets
And canned sardines and soap.

They will not have the pleasure
Of going on a dash
And winning fame for some one,
Besides a bunch of cash.
They will not have to journey
To where it never thaws,
Where ice is free and plenty
To aid a worthy cause.

The pole has been discovered,
Or so the claim is made.
This stops the hardy native
From working at his trade,
And on the ship's provisions
He may no longer feed.
The pole has been discovered.
It's sad for him indeed.

Made to Order.

Bishop Fallows of Chicago says it is the supreme duty of every man to be happy. Here is a case where duty wouldn't have to rap a man over the head with a stuffed club to wake him up if he only knew the combination.

Man has not yet arrived at a state where he can touch a button and be happy. He is willing all right, but he goes about it as an amateur.

In the morning of life he pursues the bright lights only to have his wings singed when he catches up with them. Then he tries other ways that are just as foolish, with similar results.

It is easy enough to point out his duty to him, but with the landlord coming round regularly and with the grocer and the butcher following in his wake how is the wayfaring man to get away with the made to order results?

Generally.

"Is he a good doctor?"

"I have never seen him misbehave."

"Smarty! I mean can be cure you?"

"He never has."

"Imbecile! What I want to know is if he is a successful physician."

"He is worth half a million."

"Do his patients recover?"

"Always unless death intervenes."

"Are you always affected with idiocy?"

"Usually when I come in contact with it."

Its Finish.

The hookworm is no friend of man
And must be brought to book,
For science plainly has decreed
That it must get the hook.

No longer can the lazy man
Have this as an excuse.
They'll send him to the hospital
And jar his hookworms loose.

No longer can he sit at ease
And take a summer nap,
And mighty sorry he will be
When he has lost his snap.

BUYING A REFRIGERATOR.

The Selection Should Be Based on Common Sense.

The summer refrigerator or ice chest is the most important item of the kitchen outfit. A refrigerator should not be kept in the cellar. If there is no other place for it the cellar must be very dry, the floor level and a place found near a window so that light and air will be at hand.

A shed or outer kitchen is the best place for a refrigerator. Here it is within convenient reach and well ventilated.

Select an oak or white pine exterior. These are more durable even than ash, and oak is superior to any casing unless one feels like providing real white porcelain.

It is possible to buy a good sized oak refrigerator from $15 upward which contains a separate ice chamber within convenient reach. Some models have the ice chamber at the top reached by a lid, so that it is necessary for the average woman to stand on tiptoe to look inside and remove the interior support for cleansing purposes.

With such an arrangement it is often necessary to remove the entire interior arrangement to get at the drain, and anything so awkward and complicated must be avoided, even if its care is not to be intrusted to the maid. In such a case the old fashioned ice chest is easier to handle, but the advantage of the ice chest is that while cheaper it is all practically one compartment, whereas the up to date refrigerator has its chambers all separate, with a well regulated system of cold air drafts reaching down from the ice chamber and outside air currents passing behind the side walls to give proper circulation.

Keep the Spade Bright.

If the hired man carelessly puts the spade away without cleaning it you may have a hard time cleaning it next time you go out to dig. But if you have been careful to put cinders in a nice pile not more than one minute will be required to clean the spade and make it as bright as a new dollar.

Simply dig in the cinders for a minute or so, shoveling them about as you do gravel and cement when mixing concrete, and the job is done. The cinders should be wet, as they are sure to be if exposed to the weather.

We learned this while shoveling cinders into a post hole when building a fence. It works like a charm.

Headlight Scared Wolves.

Mr. William Marshall, who has just returned to Sault Ste. Marie from a motor tour on Manitoulin Island, had a rather exciting experience with wolves in the course of his trip. He was going from Gore Bay to Little Current when four wolves suddenly appeared on the road. The strong headlight apparently dazzled them and the car ran over one wolf killing it while the others took to the bush. Wolves are not common on the island and these apparently came over on the ice from the north shore last winter.

Being up to date and according to specifications is all that is to be expected in a wife.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of [illegible] by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

FOUND IN THE ICE

A Space Several Hundred Feet Square With Wreckage

By M. QUAD

On the 7th day of October, 1852, the ship Princess left Australia with a cargo of wool and other articles valued at $250,000. She had in her treasure room gold in dust, bars and coin aggregating $1,300,000. She was never heard from.

In June, 1868, eighteen years after the loss of the Princess, I was one of the crew of the Boston whaler Talisman, which was trying the cruising ground on the south of Cape Horn. We had had a fair run of luck when we got a gale from the north which lasted for four days and nights without a break. This drove us away south among the ice, and on a dozen different occasions the ship was within a hair's breadth of being cast away or overwhelmed. After the fourth day of the gale there was a calm lasting thirty hours. During this interval the Talisman lay between two monster icebergs, with her boats down and ready to tow her out of the way should they close in on her. Then we got a strong breeze from the east.

Sometimes we lay moored to a berg for several hours; again we were pounding among the great cakes of ice, which threatened every moment to crush in her sides. We had been driving to the southeast for three days when the breeze fell and left us on a heaving sea, with a monster iceberg about two miles away to the south.

The ship had thus far sustained little damage, but the crew were exhausted with the hard work and constant vigilance. The men were given an all day's rest, and no incident occurred until late in the afternoon. The mass of ice had a front a mile long on our side, with an average height of 300 feet. What its width was we could not say. We were astonished to see smoke rising from the far side of it. No one doubted that it came from a fire lighted by shipwrecked sailors, who had caught sight of the Talisman and were making her a signal.

The third mate and three men were ordered off in one of the whaleboats to investigate, and I was one of the three selected. We took with us a breaker of fresh water, a bottle of rum, bread, meat, blankets, a boat compass and a lantern, and darkness fell as we pulled away from the ship.

We pulled to pass the western face of the berg and found it to be about half a mile long. As we reached its southern limit and turned to the east we caught sight of a small fire on a ledge about 100 feet above the water. As soon as we got up to it the mate hailed [illegible] was promptly answered that there were two men on the ledge, one of whom had a broken leg. Thereupon I was ordered to remain by the boat and hold on, while the mate and the two men landed on the berg and began making their way up to the ledge.

Twenty minutes later the berg split, a fog settled down, and with it came a breeze. I did not know what to do, and so I laid in my oar, wrapped myself in a blanket and sat down in the bottom of the boat. You will think it queer that I fell asleep under the circumstances, but that is exactly what happened, nor did I wake until daylight came again. Then I found myself in an ice floe which was drifting to the south at the rate of about three miles an hour.

I am not at all sure how long I drifted, but the general direction was south, and the time was at least four days and nights. On the morning of what was probably the fifth day I awoke to find that the floe had ceased drifting and a quarter of a mile to the east of the boat was a mass of ice.

It was a mile or more in length and not over thirty feet high and looked more like a wall resting on the water. The ice was yellow and dirty, with rocks embedded in it here and there, and I have no doubt that a good portion of it was the lower part of an iceberg which had turned turtle. Between me and the wall was a jumble of ice, over which it seemed impossible to make my way, but as soon as I had broken my fast I set out to try it. It took me a full hour to make that quarter of a mile, but at length I reached the wall and found that I could easily get up its rough side. When I reached the top it was to discover that the mass of ice was almost a cube, with a great hollow in its surface to remind one of the crater of a volcano.

In the center of this hollow lay a mass of wreckage, and after a long stare, half believing my eyes deceived me, I slid down and began investigation. No one will ever see a more curious sight. A space several hundred feet square was covered with broken masts, yards, beams, planks, boards, ropes, blocks and sails. A large ship had here suffered destruction. Just how I could not determine, but it seemed to me as if a great body of ice had fallen on it as she rested in the crater. No other force unless gunpowder could have so wrecked and scattered her about. Some of the wreckage bore the name Princess.

Late in the afternoon the floe began to break up, and I got back to my boat. By night there were lanes of water in every direction, and a strong breeze set in from the south. I drifted to the north all that night and all the next day, but as the second night came on I was picked up by the Scotch whaler Jeannette, which had captured and was cutting in a whale, and months later was landed at her home port.

Defectives.

"Here's a story about a man with a cork leg, a cork arm, a rubber ear, a glass eye and a wig."

"He must be one of those defectives there's so much agitation about."—Buffalo Express.

A Question.

"The pen is mightier than the sword."

"Then can the fellow with the fountain pen be said to be carrying concealed weapons?"—Town Topics.

Schoolboy Blunders.

From England come these examples of blunders in boys' school examination papers:

"The courage of the Turks is explained by the fact that a man with more than one wife is more willing to face death than if he had one."

Question—Under what conditions will a body float in water? Answer—After it has been in water three days.

"A triangle is a square with three corners."

"The minister of war is a clergyman who preaches to the soldiers in the barracks."

"Ambiguity means telling the truth when you don't mean to."

TEACHING TECHNOLOGY

Edmonton's Experiment in an Old Car Barn Bears Fruit.

Northwestern enterprise is pretty well summed up in the farthest north technical school in Canada, which is located at Edmonton, the farthest north point for a large number of things in civilization. But latitude 55 does not explain the value of this quite remarkable and sudden development of technical education. Schools have always been to the forefront in that part of the country. Some of the earliest civic struggles in Edmonton were over schools in the days when "Dick" Secord, the furbuyer, was an Edmonton schoolmaster. The latest variation on the theme is the institution which teaches four hundred young folk in the two Edmontons how to grapple with modern problems unhandicapped by merely academic training.

A year ago technical education in the capital of Alberta was in a crude, experimental stage, ready for rapid expansion into something better. At that time technics were taught in public and high school rooms, which were all overcrowded. A new technical school was needed; also a new technical chief-instructor. The latter was got from the east, in the person of W. L. Richardson, B.A., then superintendent of manual training in Toronto. The former was secured at his recommendation, in the use of an old abandoned car barns, containing a floor space of 14,000 square feet. Ten thousand dollars were spent in fitting up the barns. Twenty-five thousand dollars was spent in equipment, including electric machinery, ten down-draft forges, five engine lathes, a shaper, a milling machine, a drill press, mortiser, jointer, variety and band saws, ten speed lathes, a Gordon printing press, a lever paper-cutter, wire stitcher, an assortment of type, paraphernalia for the cooking, dressmaking and draughting departments, science laboratory and academic instruction. Civic and citizen enthusiasm was at the back of this big expenditure, which will probably be duplicated on the south side of the river until such time as a general new institute can be built to house all the equipment. Eight private citizens gave extension lectures in various phases of manufacturing and business, such as Pure Milk Supply, Modern House Planning, and How to Make and Save Money. One firm presented the school with a complete engine, boiler and pump, for the stationary engineering class. Another citizen donated a fine compound microscope for the chemical department.

Most of this has been the spirited evolution of six months. It is all due to the remarkable interest taken by the citizens in educational matters which so far as technical education goes is controlled by a committee of the School Board.—Canadian Courier.

In Store.

The regular trombone player of a Scottish orchestra was laid up with a cold, and the conductor reluctantly accepted the services of a brass band amateur. He was a little doubtful, however, as to the suitability of his substitute.

After the first performance the new player asked the conductor how he had done.

The conductor replied that he had done pretty fairly, but that perhaps he would do better next night.

The newcomer, eyeing him gratefully, answered:

"Man, ye see the music is a' strange tae me the nicht, an' I'm no' jist shair o' 't yet, but you wait tae the morn's nicht, an' ye'll no hear ane o' thae fiddles at a'."—Weekly Telegraph.

Taking Advantage of Opportunity.

"Have you come to an understanding with my daughter?"

"Not exactly."

"What do you mean, then, by asking me to consent to your marriage?"

"This happened to be such a good chance that I thought I'd ask you and get that much out of the way. I always hate to have things on my mind when they can be disposed of as well as not."—Chicago Record-Herald.

FEWER "VAGS" IN LONDON.

Insurance Act One Cause, Says the Government Report.

From a report issued by the Local Government Board, it is evident that the scheme devised for dealing with the homeless people who made the Embankment their dormitory is proving successful, says The London Express. It commenced about eighteen months ago, and the system is to give the vagrants tickets for a centre whence they are distributed among casual wards and charitable shelters. The police now issue from 1,000 to 1,500 tickets per month. About nine-tenths of the recipients apply at that Central Office on Waterloo Pier; half of these are sent to the charitable agencies, and practically all avail themselves of the shelter provided. Of those sent to the casual wards forty per cent. disappear, and it is significant that the numbers accepting this hospitality are decreasing.

"Evidently," says the report, "the casual wards are not looked upon with favor by those who sleep out, and the possibility that the labor task and compulsory bath may be in some degree responsible for our figures cannot be ignored."

Since February, 1910, when the number of men and women in the streets and sitting up in shelters rose to 2,780, the figure has fallen to 692 (last October). It is admitted that other factors besides improved administration may have influenced the decline, which may be partly due to improvement in trade.

"Other probable factors," it is added, "to which variations may be due are the coming into operation of the Old Age Pensions Act, the National Health Insurance Acts, and the institution of Labor Exchanges."

One important result of the scheme is that the homeless ones are brought under the notice of those who can deal with them and put them in the way of earning a livelihood again. Two cases may be mentioned. A civil servant who through illness came down to the Embankment was put into a situation at a well-known caterer's; a chauffeur who tramped to London to enlist, but was unable to do so, having no reference, was put on his feet again.

Sterner measures are recommended for those vagrants who have not yet become amenable to the scheme, and the report concludes with a warning to the public of the evil of indiscriminate charity.

MRS. GLADSTONE WHISTLED.

The G. O. M. Could Tell the Story—All But the Finish.

Apparently the powers of Mr. Gladstone as a siffleur were somewhat limited, judging by the amusing story told by Rev. T. Selby Henrey in "Attic Salt." Mr. Gladstone and Dean Wellesley were schoolfellows at Eton, and the friendship there commenced continued throughout life. When they were both in the 'sixties they met at a little dinner-party at the Deanery at Windsor, and the great statesman jocularly said across the table to the dean:—

"I say, old friend, I have got a good story for you about Harry Phillpotts, Bishop of Exeter."

Upon which Mrs. Gladstone hastily interfered:—

"William, you must not tell that story until the servants have left the room."

When the psychological moment arrived the Premier said:—

"You know, Wellesley, that Bishop Phillpotts, during his old age, acquired the habit of sitting up late at night with his chaplain. Well, one night he was comfortably ensconced in his study chair, with feet against the mantelpiece, dreamily looking into the fire, when he heard footsteps at the door and the noise of a dress behind him.

"Without looking up he said, in a very endearing voice (thinking the intruder to be his wife): 'What can I do for you, my little darling?' To his great astonishment the trespasser proved to be, not his wife, but his wife's maid. And the only way in which the poor Bishop could give expression to his feelings was by a long-drawn-out, subdued whistle."

Mr. Gladstone at this juncture said, "I cannot manage the whistle, so I will ask Catherine to give it," and Mrs. Gladstone finished the story by giving the long-drawn-out whistle, to the delight not only of the dean, but also of all the guests.

OLD PAP PINKHAM

Assures the President He's Equal to Emergencies.

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

MY Dear Mr. President—As disquieting rumors have reached you regarding certain happenings in Jericho let me give you the straight of them.

No one has been killed.

Our hospital is not full of injured victims.

The doors of the postoffice have not been beaten in.

I have not had my skull fractured and am not lying at the point of death.

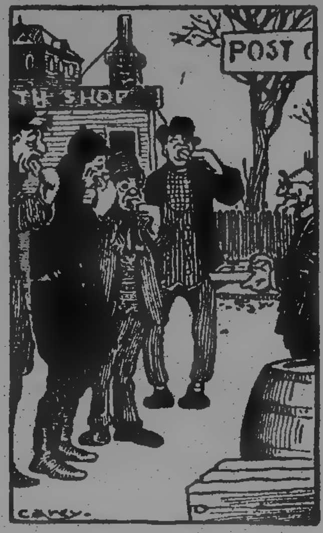
The governor has not been asked to call out the militia.

No one has missed a hen from his coop.

Not a cow has lost her tail.

The newspapers have indulged in columns of sensation, but there has hardly been a grain of truth in it.

There was very little interest here in the income tax, as Jericho hasn't a citizen with an income of over $2,000 a year. No criticisms whatever were heard until after a tin peddler visited the town. He had hardly moved on when Squire Shoutz asked to have a private word with me.



"EVERY MAN TOOK A PLUG."

"Pap," he said, "do you know about this income tax?"

I admitted I did.

"My income is about $400 a year."

"Then you don't pay a cent."

"But I have just bought a ticket in a lottery. If it hits the capital prize will I have to pay anything?"

"Certainly. They will soak it to you."

"Then the rebellion starts within an hour, and blood shall flow like water!"

Half an hour later, as I was opening a case of plug tobacco, I heard the mob coming. It was headed by the deacon and numbered twenty-eight desperate men.

When I heard the menacing murmur of that mob, did I fly and leave my charge?

Not much, Mr. President!

I walked forth bearing that newly opened case of plug and said:

"Gentlemen, I was about to send for you. Please have one on me!"

Every man in that crowd loved his plug.

Every man took a plug.

Every man grinned and shook hands.

Two days later Mrs. Ebenezer Schermerhorn, president of the Jericho suffragettes, entered the postoffice.

"Look here, pap," she began; "we've had that tariff bill!"

"We have."

"And the income tax bill!"

"We have."

"And the currency bill!"

"We have."

"But, sir, have we had the suffrage bill?"

"That's to come," I replied.

"So is Christmas, a hundred years ahead! Pap Pinkham, when is Mr. Wilson coming out flat footed for a suffrage bill?"

"Next week, mebbe," I says.

"Pap, I want you to telegraph to him right off this minute, asking him what he is going to do about it."

"He may be off skating or sliding down hill. I'd better write him."

She went away shaking her fist, and I realized that trouble would follow. It came in about half an hour. Same murmurs from a mob bent upon bloodshed, same menacing tramp of many feet, then a halt.

"Old Pap Pinkham, come out to your doom!"

Did your postmaster at Jericho shake and tremble and hide under his counters, Mr. President? Did he make for the garret and the roof? Did he telephone the sheriff?

Not so as you would notice it!

With an open five pound box of his finest candy in either hand he boldly walked to the door.

I had met the enemy, and she was mine!

And that's the kind of a postmaster I am, sir, and may I ask if Uncle Sam is going to financially requite me for the plugs and the candy?

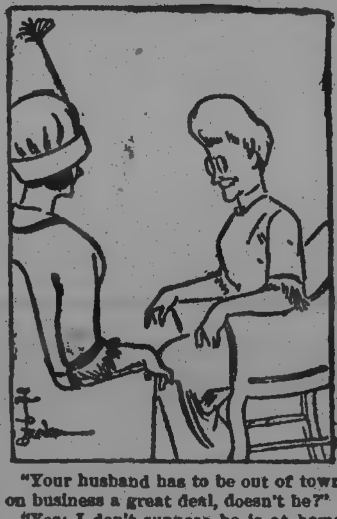
(Postmaster and Diplomat).

Not So Rare.

"Oh, Will," she said, moving a trifle closer to him, "I am so glad you are not rich! They say that some of those millionaires receive threatening letters saying that something dreadful will happen to them if they don't pay the writers sums of money."

"Oh, is that all?" replied Will. "Why, I get plenty of such letters."—New York Tribune.

Self Sacrifice.



"Your husband has to be out of town on business a great deal, doesn't he?"

"Yes; I don't suppose he is at home more than ten days a month on the average."

"I should think you would find such a state of things very unsatisfactory."

"It isn't as pleasant as it might be, but he tells me that he would have to accept $25 a month less than he's getting if he stayed at home, so what is one to do? Of course if he were a younger and handsomer man than he is I shouldn't put up with it even for the money it brings us."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Not an Expert.

"Do you hesitate?" she asked when he had come to remind her that she was engaged to him for that dance.

"Ye-ye-ye-ye-yes," he replied, "bu-bu-bu-bu-but not as w-w-w-w-w-well as I w-w-w-w-wish I did."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Nearly Transparent.

"She is rather thin."

"Who?"

"That girl in the purple gown over yonder."

"Gosh, I thought that was a design in the wall paper."—Pittsburgh Post.

If a secret is a corker it should be kept bottled up.

WILD FLOWERS.

Old Fashioned Posies Are Popular Hat Trimmings.

Wild flowers, such as ragged robins, speedwell and bachelor's buttons, so delightfully made that they might have been executed by "nature's own sweet and cunning hand," are prepared for garlanding summer hats and for wearing as posies; also old fashioned garden flowers, stocks, wallflowers and sweet peas. Cornflowers and hyacinths of the most vivid blue are already appearing on hats; also roses of every kind, from tiny rambler and button blossoms to huge roses of velvet and silk.

Tulle is usually considered the most perishable of fabrics, but a variety which, though it appears just like all other tulle, is far more durable is the beautiful rainproof tulle, made by a special process—that is to say, it will not spoil when subjected to damp or become raggy in moist, heated atmosphere. Another exquisite fabric for evening wear emanating from the same manufactory is a fine silk gauze, woven in the fashionable metallic effects—gold, aluminium, copper shot with silver and radium blue. It is charmingly effective for tunics and draperies.

Novel Way With Fish.

For this you take a cupful of codfish, two cupfuls of sliced raw potatoes, a large onion, a cracker rolled fine, a pint of milk and salt to taste. Pick the codfish and soak it over night. Change the water several times in the morning. When ready to use, pare and thinly slice the potatoes and onion. Heat a dish, butter it well and put in alternate layers of fish, potatoes, onions and one cracker rolled fine. Cover with hot water and boil twenty minutes, then add salt, milk and, if possible, a little cream. Serve very hot.
